The Work will be completed in twenty volumes, royal octavo, each page containing printed matter equal to that of any preceding quarto Encyclopædia; and its conductors stand pledged to publish the whole in a much shorter period than that in which any similar undertaking has ever appeared; thus avoiding the delays, the contradictions, the changes of plan and contributors, ever incident to works of this kind when long protracted.

The London Encyclopædia is readily designated by its appellation. It originated in the Metropolis; the ample resources, both scientific and literary, from which will be derived its richest and best materials, are the highest glory of the Metropolis: many of its contributors reside there, and special attention will be paid to every object which distinguishes London, not only as the seat of empire to Britain, or as the mart of commerce to the world, but as it is the emporium of mind; the scene where the stupendous labours of intellect have their noblest exhibition and their best reward. It is a national work, nurtured in the heart of the empire, and therefore deriving its name from its local associations, and its most efficient patrons. Sustaining such a cognomen, and fully justifying it in its character, the "London Encyclopædia" bears in its very title a passport to every portion of the globe, where the intellectual character of Britain and its Metropolis is known and appreciated.

It may be added, that the whole Work has been for some time under revision, and can now be confidently anticipated from its beginning to its close; that it is committed to one principal Conductor or Editor, who has been previously engaged in a similar Work; and that the entire property of it is in one mercantile house.

Communications designed for the advancement or correction of the Work, in any of its departments, will be thankfully received; and are requested to be addressed to the Editor, 73, Cheapside.

NEW VIOLONCELLO MUSIC, arranged as Solos, with a Bass accompaniment (ad lib.) by J. PICKARD.

Sixty approved and fashionable Airs, selected from the works of the most esteemed authors, in two books, each 5s.

In offering this work to the notice of the young practitioners on the Violoncello, the Author flatters himself they will find it extremely useful: and as the general complaint with amateurs of this manly instrument is, that the arrangements of authors are mostly too difficult, affording little or no amusement to the student, he has in the above work endeavoured to blend amusement with instruction.

A selection of the most admired Airs, Duets, and Chornsses, from the celebrated opera, "Der Freischutz," 5s.—Home! sweet Home! with variations, 2s.—Isabel, ditto, 2s.—Aurora che sorgerai, ditto, 2s.—Jager Chorus, ditto, 2s. Gipsy March, from Preciosa, 2s.—Canone from Tarrare, 2s. As a Duet for two Violoncellos, The Battle of Prague, 3s.

This work is so arranged as to prodnce all those striking effects required in this celebrated composition.

FOREIGN INTELLIGENCE.

DEATH OF THE EMPEROR OF RUSSIA.

Despatches were received on Monday morning from Berlin, by Government, which announce the death of his Imperial Majesty Alexander, the Emperor of all the Russias. We believe no particular details of this melancholy event have transpired, though the accounts referred to leave no doubt of the fact. The melancholy intelligence was transmitted by our Ambassador, the Earl of Clanwilliam.

Mr. Williams, a King's Messenger, was sent off early on Monday morning, with despatches to his Majesty, at Windsor, to announce the important event.

The last accounts we received of his Imperial Majesty, stated, that he was then at Taganrok, or in its vicinity, making preparations for a grand review of the different corps d'armee stationed in that quarter of his vast dominions,

His Imperial Majesty was born Dec. 23, 1777, succeeded his father, the Emperor Paul, on the 24th March, 1801, and was declared Czar and King in 1815. He married Oct. 9, 1793, Louisa Maria Amelia, now called the Empress Elizabeth Alexiowna, daughter of the hereditary Prince of Baden. She was born June 4, 1779.

The heir presumptive to the throne of Russia is the brother of the late Emperor Alexander, the Grand Duke Constantine Cesarovitch, who was born May 8, 1779, and married Feb. 26, 1796, Julia, Princess of Saxe Cobourg, sister to his Royal Highness the Prince of Saxe Cobourg. This marriage was dissolved by an Imperial Ukase, dated April 2, 1820, and the Grand Duke married, secretly, May 24, 1820, Jane, born Countess of Grudzinska, and created Princess of Lowicz.

The political considerations which suggest themselves, in consequence of this sudden transmission of the royal authority to the hands of the Grand Duke Constantine, we cannot now advert to.

It is a curious circumstance, taken in connexion with the above, that the Etoile of Sunday, which we received on Monday, by express, contains the following paragraph:—

"It is remarked, as a singular circumstance, that in the Royal Almanack of Russia, in the division relating to the Sovereigns of Europe, the Grand Duke Nicholas, brother of the Emperor, born, &c. is mentioned as the presumptive heir to the throne. This news, say the Germans, from whom we receive it, is the more important, inasmuch as the source whence it is derived, leaves no doubt as to its authenticity."

Berlin, Dec. 13.—Early this morning an extraordinary courier arrived at the Foreign Office with the news of the unexpected death of his Majesty the Emperor of Russia, on his way back from Taganrok to St. Petersburgh. The dismay and the grief which this deeply lamented event has universally excited, is the most speaking proof of the greatness and importance of the loss, which not only Russia, but Europe, has sustained. More particular accounts are impatiently expected. The restoration and the maintenance of peace, in our part of the world, was Alexander's work; and, as the genius of peace (as an ingenious artist once represented him) he has been extolled by his contemporaries, and will be gratefully remembered by posterity.

Hamburgh, Dec. 15.—Several expresses from Berlin have brought the melancholy intelligence of the unexpected death of his Majesty the Emperor of Russia. According to the letters received by the post from Berlin, this event was generally known there, and had spread universal grief. Our Correspondent writes:—"On the news received from Warsaw of the death of the Emperor Alexander at Taganrok, there was an entire stagnation on 'Change, and the Stock Market. There were numerous sellers at the quotation, but very little business could be done.

Our readers will see, in our article from St. Petersburgh, that the last public accounts of his Majesty were still from the Crimea, to which his Majesty had gone from Taganrok, as we already knew, and that they speak of his Majesty as being in perfectly good health.

Dec. 16.—The above news arrived at Hamburgh, in the night of the 14th from Berlin, to which place it was brought by a courier from the Office for Foreign Affairs. The death of the Emperor took place on his way back from Taganrok to St. Petersburgh.

St. Petersburgh, Dec. 3.—The St. Petersburgh Journal gives accounts from Symphoropol, in the Crimea, of 7th Nov., where his Majesty arrived on the 5th from Taganrok, having come by way of Nogaisk and Peracop, and was received with great joy. On the 6th, after hearing Divine Service in the Cathedral, he set out at nine o'clock in the morning, in good health, by the new road, on the south coast of the Crimea, to the estate of Count Michael Semenowitsch Woronzow, where his Majesty dined, and stopped for the night.

St. Petersburgh, Nov. 30.—We have received the following official accounts of the visit of his Majesty the Emperor to Neutscherkask, the capital of the Don Cossacks. On the 24th of last month his Majesty arrived there, and was received by the Hetman of the Cossacks, Lieut.-General Howaisky, Adjutant-General Tschernitschew, and the other Generals. The Hetman delivered to his Majesty an account of the state of all the corps of Cossacks, after which his Majesty, with a numerous suite, went to hear Divine Service in the Cathedral, and then proceeded to the house of the Hetman. The next day he gave audiences to the Ecclesiastical and Military Authorities, and then reviewed all the public establishments. His Majesty dined with the Hetman, and honoured with his presence a ball given by that Officer, which his Majesty opened with the Hetman's Lady. On the 26th the Emperor returned to Taganrok. On his tour through the Crimea his Majesty arrived on the 5th at Symphoropol, where he was received by the Civil Governor of Taurida, and passed the 6th and 7th at the fine country seat of Count Woronzow. General Kologriwov, of the cavalry, died at Moscow on the 18th.

December 3.—Prince Lowenstein Wertheim arrived here yesterday as Ambassador Extraordinary from the King of Bavaria, with the official notification of the death of King Maximilian, and of the accession of King Lewis I.

The Ambassador of the Khan of Bucharia arrived on the 18th at Moscow from Orenburg. The object of his mission is said to be of a commercial nature.

The day before yesterday the cold became very severe, the thermometer being at 10. (Reaumur) below freezing. The Newa, and all the canals, are full of drift ice; and the communication between the several quarters of the city is, for the present, suspended.

Frankfort, Dec. 16.—Yesterday evening couriers dispatched from Warsaw and Berlin, addressed to the Legations of Russia, France, and England, brought the news of the death of his Majesty the Emperor Alexander of Russia. This Monarch died on his journey in Bessarabia, in consequence of an erysipelas in the head, which put an end to his life after only two days' suffering. M. d'Anstett, Minister from Russia to the German Diet, has himself given positive statements on this subject to the persons of distinction who waited upon him during the course of the day to ask him for information.

"Our Exchange has been to day in great consternation. All the Funds in circulation suddenly fell several per Cent. The Austrian Metalliques were offered at 91; the share of the Bank of Vienna for 1405, &c. A panic terror has seized our speculators, whose perplexities were still farther increased, when they learnt by the last mail from Holland that the news of the Emperor's death was probably known there on the 14th, because on that day one of the most considerable houses had sold 4000 obligations (Metallique), and denounced all its sales for time, so that the reports suddenly rose there to 8 per cent. The house of Rothschild here was, it is said, informed of it two days before the Ambassadors. Lastly, they go so far as to say the death of the Emperor had been kept a secret at St. Petersburgh for several days, in order to give his successor time to make the necessary preparations for taking possession of the reins of Government."

"Paris, Dec. 20.—About a year ago it was reported that an important interview had taken place between the Emperor Alexander and his brother Constantine. The latter had long since declared himself in favour of the Greeks, and thought the Russian armies ought to march to Constantinople; he had just urged his brother to renounce his uncertain policy, and take a decided part. The conversation was warm; Constantine maintained that Alexander suffered the fairest opportunity to escape him that had yet offered to make himself master of the Bosphorus. He reproached him with abandoning the national policy, and sacrificing the interest of Russia to the self-gratification of being the Chief of the Confederation of Kings. These reproaches hurt Alexander. Constantine added, that as heir to the throne, he had a right to see to the political direction of the Government. It was then, it is said, that Alexander put him in mind that his marriage might endanger his right to the succession. This family dispute was not known at the time to any but diplomatists of the first rank. However, the secret was not so well kept but it transpired, and it was spoken of eight or ten months ago. But in matters of this kind there is nothing positive or proved. What is certain is, that it has since been remarked, that Alexander sought to attach to himself the Members of the Directing Senate. He seldom refused them a favour; all his conduct announced the intention of acquiring among them a powerful and devoted party; people talked secretly of an ukase which was to be presented to the Senate, and by which the succession to the throne would be secured to the Grand Duke Nicholas; lastly, it was recollected that the Emperor had always shewn the greatest affection to the latter, and that he had taken care to have him brought up in the principles of his policy."

PROVINCIAL INTELLIGENCE.

Melancholy Accident.—We are grieved to state, that Mr. James Hollowell, an aged and worthy citizen of Norfolk county, residing on the Western Branch, met an untimely and shocking death on the night of the 31st ult. in the following manner:—Mr. H., who was an old sportsman, went out that evening with a couple of friends, to hunt for racoons, taking with him his faithful dog, his companion in numberless similar excursions, who, true to his duty, soon treed one of the animals they were in quest of, and it being found impracticable to get at him, one of the party commenced cutting down the tree, which in its fall lodged against another, rendering it necessary to cut that down also. Mr. H. retired, as he thought, far enough to be out of danger from the falling of the trees, and held his dog, lest he should meet with some injury from them; but, unfortunately, the trees, in their descent, broke off the top of a pine sapling, which fell on Mr. H., and literally crushed both him and the dog to death. Both of his thigh bones were broken in several places, nearly all the ribs on one side broken in, and his skull crushed and mangled in a shocking manner.—American Paper.

The late Elopement from Durham.—It appears, from a letter received from a Gentleman belonging to this place, at present residing in London, that Robson has found his way to the Metropolis. That Gentleman met him on the evening of Friday last, in the neighbourhood of Covent Garden. He was alone; and whether the young Lady whom he carried off had arrived in town with him is uncertain. The subscription in behalf of his wife and family is still proceeding, though only slowly.—Durham Chronicle.

Six dead bodies were picked up on the Goodwin Sands and brought into Dover on Sunday morning, supposed to be part of the crew of the Ogle Castle, which was lost there a short time since.

MURDER AT STOKE.

The village and neighbourhood of Stoke-green were thrown into great agitation, on the morning of Friday se'nnight, by the discovery of a most atrocious murder having been committed on a poor old woman, of the name of Smith, nearly seventy years of age, who kept a small chandler's shop in the immediate vicinity of the Plough, at Stoke-green. The situation of the premises, and the habits of the deceased, render the circumstances somewhat mysterious; as it appeared from the evidence that the murder must have been committed about nine o'clock in the evening, and the house and shop of deceased, though standing alone, have the public house, and several other houses, within a short distance, so that any noise or struggling must inevitably have been heard. The spectacle was truly horrible—the blood lay in masses immediately round the head, and contrasted most awfully with the silvery grey hair, that escaped from under the night-cap of the deceased. It may be supposed, that the ruffian, having extinguished the light by knocking down his victim, was unable to carry into effect his intention of plundering, or that he became alarmed, as no other part of the house, which is a large one for a single woman, appears to have been entered. A police officer from Bow-street has been sent for, and the most active exertions are making to discover the inhuman offender.

On Saturday morning an inquest was held before J. Charsley, Esq. coroner for Bucks, and a jury of neighbours; when, after viewing the body, the following evidence was adduced:—

Mary Elkin, a girl of about fourteen or fifteen years of age, deposed, that she lived as servant with the deceased, but did not sleep there; she was employed in looking after Mrs. Smith's cow, &c. On Thursday night she left her well; and, on Friday morning, on going to the house, about half-past seven, she found the outer door on the latch. She proceeded towards the back door, which she found fast, for the purpose of fetching up the cow, but noticing that the kitchen door was open, and seeing something white upon the ground there, she returned, and discovered that her mistress had been murdered, upon which she immediately ran out, exclaiming her mistress was dead.

John Ware, labourer, was at work in a barn adjoining the house of deceased, when last witness gave the alarm. He proceeded to the spot, and found the body extended on the floor, on its back; a candlestick was under her left arm, and the candle, apparently falling from it, at a little distance. Witness observed a bruise or cut in her forehead, and another somewhat higher on her head; there was a cut or stab in her throat, apparently very deep, and a quantity of blood around, which was even then flowing slowly from the wound; the extremities were quite cold, but the body was somewhat warm. The pockets were torn out through the pocket-holes of the gown; witness did not examine them. He saw no instrument of any description about, likely to have been used in the murder, nor has he any suspicion of any person whatever.

Mr. Roberts, surgeon, of Burnham, deposed that he had examined the body of the deceased, and that there were two contused wounds on the upper part of the frontal bone, apparently made with some blunt instrument, such as a hammer, which had caused a fracture one-eighth of an inch deep, and larger than a shilling; there was also a third fracture on the top of the head, one-fourth of an inch deep, apparently with the edge of the hammer, as the wound was not a complete circle; there was an incised wound on her throat, two inches and a half long, which had completely severed the windpipe, and a penetrating wound on the left side of the windpipe three inches in depth, which had divided the larger blood-vessels; there was also a wound under the chin, and another in the centre of the chin, all made apparently by stabs, with some instrument similar to a butcher's knife. There was also a contusion on the back of the head, apparently occasioned by falling backward.

James Edgson, landlord of the Plough public-house, stated, that his house was not more than fifty yards from that of the deceased; that he heard the alarm on Friday morning, and went over; saw the body, which he described similarly to the evidence of Ware. Witness examined the pockets, which had been emptied of every thing but a small knife. The shop had not been entered, and in the till were found about seven shillings in silver and copper; the bed had not been lain in, nor had any part of the house been entered apparently, except the apartment where the bloody deed had been committed; the window-shutters were shut, and back door fast; in the mattress three and twenty pounds were found concealed.

Louisa Bennett deposed to having been at the shop of the deceased about half-past eight in the evening of Thursday, when she appeared quite well, and apparently about to retire for the night.

After a most patient investigation of above six hours, the jury returned a verdict of "Wilful murder against some person or persons unknown."

It was stated to the jury, that the husband of Mrs. Smith, who has been parted from her many years, and who is now an inmate of Clewer workhouse, having been hinted at, Mr. Edgson immediately went over and ascertained that the suspicion was entirely unfounded, as the man was reported as one of the most steady in the house, and as being under the eye of the master from five o'clock till he went to bed, when he slept with another man.—Bucks Gazette.

PROVINCIAL BANKS.

Birmingham.—Soon after the stoppage of Messrs. Gibbins Smith, and Goode's bank had become generally known, a public meeting of the merchants, manufacturers, and tradesmen of the town of Birmingham, was called at the public office, to declare their entire confidence in the stability of the existing banks of this town. The requisition was signed by Thomas Lee, Esq. Theodore Price, Esq. the Low Bailiff, and a few other gentlemen of the greatest respectability. Soon after the time appointed the room was literally thronged, and several gentlemen were obliged to stand outside the windows.

Theodore Price, Esq. was called to the chair. He said the meeting were aware of the circumstances under which it had been thought necessary to call them together. They had met for the purpose of expressing their entire confidence in the existing banking establishments of this town, and he felt convinced they would do so most willingly, as there was not one in that room who could have the least distrust of any one. (Loud cheers.)

This Declaration was immediately signed by upwards of three hundred of the principal inhabitants.

Reading.—On Tuesday evening it was known to many individuals in this town that Messrs. Williams, Burgess and Williams, had suspended their payments, and a severe run on Messrs. Simonds, of the Reading Bank, was anticipated in consequence. The failure of the London agent, however, was no sooner generally known on Wednesday morning, than the most considerable gentlemen in the neighbourhood, and tradesmen in the town, evinced an earnest desire to avert so serious an inconvenience. In the wealth and integrity of the individuals composing the firm, every one expressed a perfect confidence; and it is singular enough that the very method proposed by Mr. Baring, in London, a few hours after, was the one adopted. In the course of a very few hours, the following hand-bill was widely circulated, having above 200 most respectable signatures affixed to it:—

"The Reading Banks.—Lest any doubt should be entertained of the stability of either of the Reading Banks, in consequence of the temporary suspension of payment by one of the London agents, we, the undersigned, are ready to receive their notes as heretofore, our confidence in the firms being altogether unshaken."

The effect was such as might have been expected, and there were but few persons in the borough who did not feel more inclined to lodge money in the bank than to withdraw balances or demand an exchange of notes. Another very judicious step was also taken—a great number of small bills were printed, and in almost every shop window was to be seen one or more, containing these words—"The Reading Notes taken as usual, in the course of business."

Peterborough.—The banking firm of Simpson, White, and White, suspended payment on Wednesday last, after a short run: the property being locked up in mortgages, &c. which are not immediately convertible, is said to be the cause.

Messrs. Yorke have also had pressing demands, principally by country people, who are not aware of the respectability of the parties; but no doubt is entertained as to the stoppiug of that firm: and such is the confidence placed, that the dignitaries of the Church, and most respectable gentry and tradesmen in the city and neighbourhood, have circulated printed hand-bills signifying their readiness to take or negociate their notes to any amount.

Aylesbury.—The consternation which has been felt in the Metropolis and in other parts of the country, on account of the numerous bank failures which have recently taken place, has extended itself to this county. The old and respectable bank of Rickford and Son, of Aylesbury, experienced a severe run on Wednesday, Thursday, and Friday; the bank, however, was prepared, and met every demand that was made upon it with its usual promptness, and even protracted for this purpose the hour of closing. This run was principally occasioned by persons living at a distance from the town; few of those who reside in or near the town participated in the alarm. We are happy to state that the panic is now beginning to subside.

Bristol.—We have the greatest satisfaction in being able to state, for the information of our numerous country readers, that the terrors by which the Metropolis has been convulsed during the last eight or ten days, have not reached our city, and that the confidence of the public in the Bristol Banks remains unshaken.

We do not make this statement upon slight grounds. All demands upon our banks have been answered with promptitude; but at no time have those demands been so considerable as to deserve the character of what is called a "run"—and in fact they have been chiefly confined to elderly people in the more humble walks of life, and to persons from the country. Many of the farmers who hurried to Bristol on Thursday, to exchange their bank notes for sovereigns, were agreeably surprised on finding that undiminished confidence was reposed in the credit of our banking establishments; and, under such circumstances, carried their notes home again. We met one honest fellow of this description in Thomas-street, who confessed that "after what he had seen and heard, he was ashamed to make his appearance at the Bank"

Hull.—It gives us great pleasure to say, that the late distress in London and elsewhere, has had very little effect in producing any runs upon the Banking houses of this town, all of whom, as we have before stated, were fully prepared to meet even more than any demand that could be made upon them. The same has been the case, with scarcely a single exception, at all the other Banking establishments in the vicinity.—Hull Advertiser.

Devonport.—Messrs. Robins, Foster and Co. of the East Cornwall Bank, Liskeard, have issued a notice, stating that not the slightest inconvenience will be experienced in consequence of the stoppage of Messrs. Williams & Co. on whom they drew, as immediate means were taken in London for the payment of their own drafts, and all those of their customers.

The present scarcity of money is the mere result of alarm and want of confidence; yet it is a pleasing feature in these perilous times, that the national credit towers high, amidst the shock of individual confidence.

EXETER.—By "running" the Banks, should failures be the result, from the want of immediate available capital, agriculturists will bring upon themselves the inevitable consequences of a depreciation in their produce, and a recurrence of the difficulties from which they have so recently emerged. Some of them have been reminded of former personal difficulties in a manner too forcible to be again forgotten, one instance of which has been related to us from undoubted authority. A farmer, who had received assistance from a respectable banking-firm not thirty miles from Exeter, applied to them for sovereigns to the amount of about three-score pounds, in exchange for their notes. One of the firm took him into an inner room, and shewed h m his own promissory note for some hundreds advanced in a period of difficulty; and writing off on the back of the document the amount he had tendered, sent the ungrateful applicant about his business. Numerous as are the banking establishments in this extensive county, there is hardly one which has not met the demands on them with honour; and one of those which has lately stopped payment (we mean the firm of Browne, Winsor & Co. at Ashburton) has announced an early day for resuming business. In the banks of our own city, the greatest confidence is justly placed. Several banks in this county and Cornwall corresponded with Sir Peter Pole & Co., and Williams & Co,; but the failure of these London houses have not affected in the slightest degree the credit of their country connections, who were previously provided with sufficient gold and Bank of England notes to meet any demand.—Exeter Gazette.

MANCHESTER.—The inhabitants of Manchester, and its immediate vicinity, have at present great cause for thankfulness; for though there has never, within the experience of the oldest tradesman living, been a week so pregnant in calamity to the commercial world as that which is now closing—the storm by which so many districts are agitated, and some fearfully ravaged, extends not to them: they hear of, but fortunately do not experience, the effects of its terrific violence. In London, the panic—the want of confidence—has not only been unexampled, but almost inconceivable; and the failures have been on a scale, both as regards their number and their magnitude, to shake the most insensible, and to appal the most stout-hearted.—Manchester Guardian.

KENDAL.—We are gratified, says the Kendal Gazette, of the 17th inst. to see our wealthy and respectable fellow-townsmen come forward and express their unbounded confidence in these establishments. This feeling during the temporary agitation in more distant parts of the country does the parties the highest credit, and may have some effect in allaying any unfounded fears which might get abroad, because alarms of this nature are nine times in ten groundless. Should a distress of this kind be contemplated here even by the most timid, we might then consider the country in a more alarming state than we are at all willing to believe. This measure has been adopted here, merely in compliment to the Kendal Banks, but the effect intended is to convince the country in general, that those who hold the Kendal notes, or the securities of these Banks, are as secure as if they possessed sovereigns to their respective amounts in their iron chests.

CHELTENHAM.—It is with feelings of the deepest concern, we have to announce to the public, that, under the present unexampled pressure of financial distress, Messrs. Turner, Turner, and Morris, bankers, of this city (Gloucester) and Cheltenham, have been compelled to suspend their payments. The high and long-established respectability of this firm, and the undoubted credit of the other bankers of this city, had called from the principal inhabitants and tradesmen, on the day preceding, a unanimous declaration of confidence in their responsibility, and a determination to take their notes; the consternation, therefore, which prevailed here, when the suspension of Messrs. Turner and Co. was announced, may be more readily conceived than described. The temporary difficulties and distress amongst the middling and lower classes, inevitably attendant upon this unfortunate occurrence, are alarmingly oppressive, owing to the great extent of their circulation; but it is satisfactory to know, that an investigation of their affairs has already been commenced; the result of which, as far as it can at present be anticipated, leaves not the slightest doubt of there being ample assets to liquidate all the claims which can be made upon them, with a considerable surplus. We are likewise assured that no time will be lost in laying a full statement of their affairs before their creditors.

The sudden suspension of the bank here, so soon after the resolution of the public to afford them every support, arose, we understand, from their London Correspondents having refused payment of their bills, though securities to a very large amount were offered to be deposited with them.

As might be supposed, the stoppage of Messrs. Turner and Co. caused an immediate run upon the bank of Messrs. Russell and Skey, in this city, but we have the highest gratification in stating that they continued open to a very late hour, and most promptly paid every demand which was made upon them.

The failure of Sir Peter Pole and Co. the London Correspondents of Messrs. Martin and Co. of the Stroudwater bank, in this county, occasioned a very heavy run upon the latter for two or three days at the beginning of last week; but all demands being most promptly and honourably satisfied, the public confidence in their responsibility was completely re-established. We understand they have removed their London account to Messrs. Jones, Lloyd, and Co.

The failure of the bank of Sir Peter Pole and Co. also caused a severe run upon the bank of Messrs. Jones and Co. at Monmouth, during the past week, but we are happy to say that this unfounded alarm has subsided, confidence is again restored, and their notes are circulating as usual.

Messrs. Harland and Co. who have bank establishments in this town, in Tewkesbury, and in Evesham, have suspended payment; but they purpose resuming payment on the 3d of January.—Gloucester Journal, Dec. 19.

LIVERPOOL has not been infected with the panic which has caused so much mischief elsewhere. The greatest confidence is reposed in the stability of our banks; and the circumstance of their not issuing local paper would prevent a run upon them from being mischievous, even were the public so infatuated as to come under the baneful influence of the metropolitan panic.

The interest which the merchants of Liverpool take in the state of the London money market is very great. On Monday night, at eight o'clock, all the news-rooms were crowded with gentlemen awaiting the arrival of the mail. The usual time for its arrival is a little after seven; but, by some accident, it was delayed until near nine. The anxiety or curiosity of the public for intelligence respecting the state of the money-market, did not, however, abate in the interim. The public rooms, and even the neighbourhood of the post-office, continued thronged until the arrival of the London journals. Then a complete scramble for them took place at the respective bars, and he thought himself lucky who had succeeded in obtaining an evening paper, it being common to see three or four gentlemen devouring the same sheet. Similar scenes have been exhibited at the news-rooms every evening during the week, and the public rooms are thronged from about eight o'clock until the final close.

CHELMSFORD.—The sudden and unexpected failure (for such, we lament to say, it must be considered) of Messrs. Crickitt, Ruffell, and Co. bankers of this town, caused the utmost surprise and confusion. When the hour arrived for commencing business, and the house continued to be closed, the circumstance immediately suggested a cause, which unfortunately proved to be correct—that of the house having stopped payment both here and at Maldon. The knowledge of the fact spread like lightning; this town and the neighbourhood became also at the same instant apprised of the unforeseen event. Groups of persons assembled in every part of the street, and business was entirely put a stop to, saving that of an anxious desire to obtain money. The previous day, the transactions of the house were numerous, but at the hour of closing, the abilities of the firm were nearly equal to when it opened the same morning, and the customary demands, it is said, could have been met; but the news having arrived of the stopping of several other provincial banks, a run was expected, and, as it too frequently occurs, the impatient and illiberal obtained an undeserved and unfair preference. It was, however, after a severe struggle between their own feelings, and a sense of justice due to the public, resolved to close.

It would be improper to hold out a flattering prospect to creditors, where appearances did not warrant it; neither would we encourage that disposition which, has manifested itself among some, to sacrifice from despair. It has been rumoured that the estates of the late Mr. Crickitt were by him left as responsible for the bank deficiencies, should any occur; this, indeed, if true, would put a new face upon our prospects, but we have great reason to fear that such is not the fact; and we have been told, that the rents are paid into the hands of trustees.

We have heard with regret, exceeded only by our indignation, that advantage has already been taken of the unwary; as a caution against a repetition of such fraudulent conduct, we advise the needy by no means to barter their notes at any material depression in their hitherto value; in opposition to the conduct to which we have just referred, rather would we ask the humane and benevolent to receive, where necessities are pressing, the one-pound notes in particular, in all such cases, and make a small advance upon them, as we have been informed from a source upon the correctness of which we have the greatest reliance, that the assets will, under all the circumstances attending such a misfortune, far exceed in amount what the present depression of the public mind may lead them to expect. We must however, be considered as not giving a pledge; we state only what we, as creditors, firmly believe.

SPARROW, HANBURY, and Co.'s BANKS.—The consequence of the stoppage of one bank created great alarm amongst those whose sole property, perhaps, consisted in the notes they held. Numbers flocked at the early part of the day to the bank of Messrs. Sparrow, Hanbury and Co., where every demand was met with the utmost readiness, and at twelve o'clock at night, the hour to which payments were extended to those who demanded them, the counter was heaped with sovereigns, and a large surplus of other means remained in hand. The most respectable inhabitants of the town and its vicinity, finding at one time that the alarm, although without just cause, was likely to increase, and judging from the visible property of the gentlemen included in the firm of Sparrow, Hanbury, and Co., that the apprehensions of those to whom balances were due were groundless, immediately interested themselves, and so effectually as to stem the torrent, by issuing a hand-bill; the effect was instantaneous; persons who entered the bank with that which their fears led them to consider, at the moment, but waste paper, unexpectedly found it transformed into gold; the demand gradually subsided, and those who drew their money out in the morning, expressed their confidence by returning it again in the evening. It must have been truly gratifying to the partners present on the occasion, to observe the earnest support and countenance which many persons afforded by their presence, from the time of opening, until the late hour at which the bank closed. Whilst these things were going on at Chelmsford on Saturday, the several establishments of the same firm found no pressure equal to the means with which they were provided, and in which they, it appears, were similarly supported by the inhabitants of the several towns.—Essex Herald.

From the Chester Courant of Tuesday, Dec. 20.

CHESTER.—Business in the early part of Saturday was completely at a stand still. The notes of the country bankers of known wealth were rejected—the poor farmers would not look at them; but the praiseworthy and spirited conduct of several tradesmen, who offered to take those notes to any amount, however, went a great way to dissipate their groundless fears; and the circumstance of Mr. Sankey, of the Holywell bank, going about our city with a bag of sovereigns on his arm for the purpose of taking up the notes of his house, gave additional strength to the returning confidence; and before the close of the day, business went on as usual.

It is gratifying to state, that among the numerous meetings held throughout the kingdom, declaratory of confidence in the banks of their immediate neighbourhood, and readiness to take their notes, was one at Holywell, on Saturday, at which a most numerous assemblage of the landed proprietors, merchants, and others, made such declarations, with respect to both the banking establishments in that town; and another at Macclesfield on Friday, respecting the two banking establishments there, of Messrs. Daintry, Royle, and Co. and Messrs. Brocklehurst and Co. We are also happy to say, that in consequence of the suspension of Messrs. Everett and Co. Bankers, London, Messrs. Badnall, Ella, and Co. of Leek, have acquainted the public that all notes issued by them will, on application, be paid at their bank, Leek.

BATH.—We copy the following from the Bath and Cheltenham Gazette, of yesterday's date:—"The effects of the embarrassments which have recently prevailed, have, in some degree, been felt in this city during the past week. The various banks here have sustained a partial run, but from the promptitude with which all demands were met, confidence remained unshaken. This morning, however, considerable agitation was excited in consequence of the very respectable firm of Messrs. Cavenagh, Browne, and Co. having posted the following placard:—

"Messrs. Cavenagh, Browne, and Co. with agonized feelings, are obliged to inform their friends and the public, that from the overwhelming pressure of the moment, occasioned by the recent repeated failures, and the impossibility of converting their securities into cash, they are reluctantly compelled, for the present, to suspend their payments.

"Bath Bank, Dec. 20."

It is generally expected that Messrs. Cavenagh and Co. will resume their payments in a few days.

DEC. 21.—Messrs. Smith, Moger, and Evans, bankers, in Union-street, have this morning suspended their payment; but, in the notice posted on their bank entrance, they confidently assure the holders of their notes, that every demand will be paid in full within a very short period.

LEEDS—WENTWORTH'S BANK.—The suspense of the public, and particularly the holders of notes, as to the fate of this establishment, will now, in a great degree, be dissipated. The following melancholy intelligence, and which has been published as a circular by the firm, at York, will be read with much concern:—

"Messrs. Wentworth and Co. having for several days, devoted themselves to the examination of their affairs, and having in vain used every possible exertion to procure in the present state of the Money Market, a sufficiency to meet the immediate calls upon their firms, are under the painful necessity of stating to the public, their conviction of the impossibility to carry on their respective establishments.

"Messrs. Wentworth and Co. trusting to the candour and liberality of the public, under these most distressing circumstances, confidently hope that their determination will prove the most beneficial measure to the general interest of their creditors."

This publication, we fear, will spread consternation throughout the county. The suspension of its payments by the bank in the first instance occasioned much individual loss: the holders of its notes were anxious to rid themselves of a useless commodity, and in the moment of panic made great sacrifices on the amount of their various sums. But subsequent events had somewhat restored that confidence in the solvency of the house which had previously existed; and in Leeds and other places, the Wakefield notes were received by many persons on the sale of goods at nearly their nominal value. The traffic in this paper, which a few days before had been extensively going on, had greatly abated; and, as far as we have heard, purchases could only be made at about 18s. or 19s. for each 1l. note. To persons, therefore, who have been speculating largely, by buying up these notes, the above intelligence will be far from agreeable.

We still hope, that when the whole affairs of Messrs. Wentworth and Co.'s large establishment shall have been fully investigated, the immediate loss of that part of the public who possess their paper will not be extreme. The whole country, however, must severely feel the effects arising out of the failure of Wentworth's house, since it must occasion a fearful void in the quantity of that currency by which the money transactions of this district have usually been conducted.

Merchants, tradesmen, and indeed all who have payments to make or to receive, cannot therefore be too open and sincere in their reliance upon t ose banks which are now carrying on business. Serious inconveniences will be created to the trade of this and other towns from the jealous and distrustful way in which the paper of our local banks is allowed to circulate; but we sincerely trust that the tradespeople and workmen of Leeds will individually use their utmost endeavours to restore and maintain confidence in the stability of those establishments which are at present without imputation.

The public generally appears to entertain no doubt that the bank will eventually satisfy all claims against it; but at present numerous rumours are afloat which might induce us to believe that a declaration of the bankruptcy of the firm will shortly be published. At Wakefield the inhabitants were in a state of considerable excitation. Mr. Rishworth, it was said, had returned from London early in the morning, and it was thought in the evening that a circular, communicating no favourable state of the bank affairs, might be hourly expected to be issued by the partners.

When we say that the most inflexible secresy appears to be maintained by the persons connected with the bank, it will not be considered extraordinary that we should be incompetent fully to satisfy the inquiries of our readers, nor that we should refrain from hazarding any further observations respecting the Wakefield Bank.—Leeds Independent.

BRIGHTON, Dec. 22.—We regret to say that the absurd and groundless panic which has produced such melancholy effects in the metropolis, and indeed in every part of the kingdom, has this week been felt in Brighton, and has produced similar results to those which have been experienced elsewhere. Two out of the five banks in this town have suspended their payments, and the other three, although they have come out of the ordeal unhurt, have had to sustain very serious and heavy runs.

Printed bills have been issued both by Messrs. Lashmar and Co., and by Messrs. Tamplin and Co., assuring the holders of their notes that arrangements are making to pay them.

We regret, in addition to what is stated above, to announce that yesterday morning the bank of Messrs. Wood, Hall, and Co. at Lewes, stopped payment. The run had been, we understand, very heavy on both the banks at that place during Monday and Tuesday, but effectual measures have been adopted, as will be seen by our Lewes letter, to guard the other bank from further danger. This step is worthy of the noblemen and gentlemen of Lewes, and it is an example that ought to be followed elsewhere by those who wish to render effectual assistance.

WHITEHAVEN—It is with extreme regret that we announce that the Bank of Messrs. Johnston, Adamson, and Hope, has suspended payment. The following notice was issued early on Tuesday morning, and caused a general sensation in the town.

"Notice.—Messrs. Johnson, Adamson, and Hope, are under the painful necessity of announcing to the public, that in consequence of the extensive and unprecedented pressure on the mercantile establishments in the country, they are obliged to suspend their payments, and rely on the forbearance of those who may hold any of their paper, in order to give time for a detail of the affairs of the Bank, which will be publicly stated with the least possible delay, feeling, as they do, perfect confidence in being able to meet all their engagements.—Whitehaven, Dec. 19."

The notes of the Company were in extensive circulation, and we fear the suspension of payment, even though it be temporary, will be severely felt.

SWANSEA, Breton Ferry, Dec. 20.—It is with a feeling of the deepest sorrow we have to state that both Gibbins and Elton, and Hayne's and Co.'s banks at Swansea suspended payment to-day, which has been the cause of a general stagnation in the neighbourhood. It was appalling to see the consternation and confusion the inhabitants of Swansea were plunged into, for business is completely at a stand; but it is generally believed that they will shortly resume payment.

ST. NEOTS.—We are sorry to learn that the respectable banking firm of Messrs. Gorham and Co. of St. Neots, stopped payment on Monday last.—Cambridge Chronicle,

FALMOUTH.—In consequence of the failure of the Falmouth bank of Carne and Co., the following circular was issued on Wednesday last to the shareholders of the Binner Downs Mine Company:—

"Sir,—I am directed to draw your attention to the notice which has been issued for a meeting of the abovenamed Company, to be held to-morrow at this place, at two o'clock precisely, and to state that Messrs. Barne, and Co. of Falmouth have stopped payment; there is therefore a necessity for immediate steps being taken to prevent the workings of the mine being retarded, and your attendance is particularly requested.

"I am, Sir, your obedient servant,

"5. Sherborne-lane, Dec. 21." "W. YEWENS, Sec."

We are requested to state, with reference to the paragraph in Friday's Herald, of intelligence having been received in Bath, of the stoppage of Messiter's Bank, at Frome, that Messrs. Uriah and George Messiter, of the Wincanton Bank, have no sort of connection with the parties constituting the firm at Frome, and that Messrs. Messiter, of Wincanton, continue their Banking business with their accustomed regularity.

ALTON BANK We have pleasure in being able to contradict a paragraph which appeared in the Morning Herald of the 19th instant, stating that the Alton Bank had stopped payment. We have now ascertained, that since the stoppage of Messrs. Williams and Co., their London correspondents, and in the expectation of Messrs. Williams's immediate resumption of business, Messrs. Levy and Co. have continued to pay their notes at Alton.

We are requested to mention, that the statement which appeared in The Times last week, of the failure of Messrs. J. Fisher and Son, and Messrs. Mortlock and Co., Cambridge, is entirely without foundation.

The congratulations generally at this festive season are "A merry Christmas and a happy new year," and every auxiliary is eagerly sought after for the embellishment of the person. The most prominent trait of beauty in either sex is a fine head of hair; its beautiful arrangement is aided and assisted by the wonderful energetic powers of Rowland's Macassar oil, which has by its superior excellence, in promoting the elegance and durability of that grand ornament, gained the admiration of the whole world. Parents and guardians cannot offer to those under their care a more acceptable present, as that useful adornment attended to in youth is of the highest importance. Conductors of seminaries will find Rowland's Macassar oil indispensably necessary. To prevent imposition ask for Rowland's Macassar oil, signed in red, "A Rowland and Son."

NOTICES TO CORRESPONDENTS.

We have received an "on dit" relative to a domestic dispute between a Thespian Lady, wife of a Low Comedian and Musician, and her Lord and Master, depicting the violence and vindictive spirit of this Western dame—we cannot enter into the business further than to recommend an adjustment of differences, which can only end in disgrace to one, and unhappiness to both.

X. Y. Z. shall hear from us privately—her enclosure is very clever, but requires some alteration, and a fitter time for its insertion—at present it would most probably prevent a thing, about to take place, really occurring.

Hiss encloses a violent invective against Mr. Wills of Huntingdon, for his oratory at the Smithfield Club Dinner, and says "he always pokes his nose in every thing"—but he must be mistaken, for Mr. Wills has no nose to poke.

THE AGE.

LONDON, December 25.

THE EMPEROR ALEXANDER.

The death of the Emperor Alexander is the most important event since the war. Certainly no other casualty has excited so strong a public feeling, has bound itself up with more anxious and solemn consequences, or stirred so sudden and general an alarm for the tranquillity of Europe.

It is remarkable that this immense mass of national interests should have depended on the character of a man not distinguished by any of those characteristics which have given other Sovereigns a place in history; neither a great warrior, nor a profound politician: neither peculiarly cultivating the literary powers of his country, nor devoted to extending and invigorating its natural resources, Alexander yet rose to be the most important Sovereign in the world. If the fifteenth century was the age of Science, the sixteenth and seventeenth were those of Religion and Policy, the eighteenth will probably be yet designated as the age of Kings—that period in which of all within record the fates of nations depended most directly on the talents and purposes of the individual on the throne. France was the ruling power of the Continent at the beginning of the century. Its character was formed by Louis XIV., in himself the most complete representative of all the qualities good and evil of his country—generous, brave, and splendid; yet selfish, grasping and sensual, he raised the national follies and vanities into a system, infected his kingdom with an insane passion for quarrel and conquest, and left France to his successors, at once the most assuming and the feeblest, the most ambitious, and the most ridiculous of nations.

At the opposite extremity of Europe another King rose, who deserved the name; Peter, a vigorous and half-savage mind, who fought his way up through the difficulties of a prejudiced and barbarian state of society, lived like the man of the wilderness in a perpetual struggle with the chances and inclemencies of nature, and, with the hatchet and the sabre alternately in his hand, beat down all the obstacles between his people and permanent empire.

His successor, Catherine, had the spirit and intellectual power which ought to follow such a founder of dominion—with more of accomplishment, with those peculiar qualities for reconciling popular favour which belong to a female mind, she had the same ardour for improvement;—with even a clearer determination to make Russia a ruling power, she adopted a more secure and less alarming policy; and fierce and remorseless as she was when her object was within her reach, and worth the hazard of provoking Europe, she habitually shrunk from all ostentatious hostility. She sprang on Turkey and Poland like a tygress, but she abandoned the armed neutrality, which would have brought her young navy into contest with England; and hating the French Revolution, she restrained herself to the distant and harmless war of manifestoes and bulletins.

In this age of Royal distinction, even Austria, the most stagnant of Empires, had its eminent Sovereign—a woman, combining, though in an humbler degree, the qualities of both our Elizabeth and the Russian Catherine—Maria Theresa—a noble-minded, resolute, and patriotic being; who, coming to a distracted country and a doubtful throne, with no counsellor but her own generous heart, and no resources but in the devotedness of her people, committed herself to fortune against a powerful league, headed by the most subtle politician and most celebrated soldier of Europe; and, after a long struggle, endured with Roman magnanimity, established her dynasty upon the throne.

Towards the close of the century, the remote North had, in Gustavus III. a monarch who required but a larger field to have attained signal reputation: he was graceful, intelligent, and brave—in the very shade of the colossal power of Russia he raised Sweden into European importance, made his sceptre formidable even to Catherine, overthrew the still more perilous supremacy of his own nobles, and after having thus forced his way in triumph through one Revolution, was fixed upon by the voice of Europe for heading its armies against that other mighty Revolution which threatened alike all thrones.

In the centre of Germany the genius of one man suddenly raised the smallest, the most defenceless, and the least intelligent of all its Kingdoms, as by miracle, into vigour, knowledge, and supreme military renown. The fame of Frederick the Great has been tarnished by his successors; but, in his own day, he had no rival in the general wonder of the Continent: his singular contrast of personal simplicity and sagacity, his intercourse and rivalry with the wits and poets of France, and his contempt of its politicians and soldiers, threw round his private life an interest new to the Masters of Nations;—but, as a King, he deserved to have his statue fixed high: patient and provident, sparing of the popular means, his own Law-giver, Financier, and General; never wearied by reverses, never exhausted of expedients, never dishonouring his cause by timidity or despair—his brilliant triumphs were snatched often in the very face of ruin: he never began a war, in which, through whatever succession of hazards and calamities, and in defiance of strength, he did not accomplish his original purpose; and the campaigns of Frederick will be, to the last hour in which the world shall be afflicted by war, the most extraordinary instances of the power of genius over fortune.

But the man to whose celebrity all the past must yield, was he whom it was the task and the glory of England to cast down. Napoleon is now become a common-place topic, and we shall no more than mention his name. He was Frederick on a more magnificent and formidable scale; the same subtlety, carelessness of personal privation, the same fiery passion for conquest, and insatiable desire of domineering; but with less patience, less dexterity in suiting himself to the turns of fortune, less of the great faculty of retrieving disaster, or of stopping short when victory was secure. A bar of iron, with its capacity of being fused and hammered into all shapes, might have been the emblem of the German warrior—the Italian was a flash of lightning, intractable and irresistible, or extinguished at once—but each was made for his people, for his time—Frederick for the long, intricate, and doubtful struggle of a German war—Napoleon for sweeping the Continent with a deluge of hostility that seemed, and probably was, less a mere impulse of human ambition, than a great commissioned visitation of the crimes of Europe.

The Emperor Alexander was born December 23, 1777; he succeeded his father, the Emperor Paul, on the 24th March 1801, and was declared Czar and King of Poland, in 1815. He married October the 9th, 1792, Louisa Maria Amelia, now called the Dowager Empress Elizabeth Alexiowna, daughter of the Hereditary Prince of Baden. She was born June 4, 1779. The heir presumptive, now Emperor, was the brother of the late Emperor. The Grand Duke Constantine Cæsarovitch, born May 8, 1779, and married February 26, 1796, to Julia, Princess of Saxe Cobourg, sister to His Royal Highness the Prince of Saxe Cobourg. This marriage was dissolved by an Imperial Ukase, April 2, 1820. The Grand Duke married, secondly, May 24, 1820, Jane, born Countess of Grudzinka, and created Princess of Lowicz.

It has been generally presumed that the late Emperor was the direct descendant of Peter the Great. This is a misconception, for Peter was of the house of Romanoff, which had assumed the throne in 1613, in the person of the Czar Michel Federovitz. The Empress Elizabeth, daughter of Peter the Great, dying without issue in 1762, the crown passed to Prince Peter, of Holstein Gottorp, the son of another daughter of Peter the Great. He took the surname of Peter the Third. The Emperor Paul was his son, and, of course, Alexander his grandson. The house of Holstein Gottorp, which reigns in Russia, is a branch of the ancient house of Oldenburg, which reigns in Denmark, and which also reigned in Sweden. In the latter kingdom it has been succeeded by Bernadotte.

The history of the late Emperor is familiar to the journals. He came into public life in the full tumult of the French Revolution, and was from that moment conspicuous as an actor and sufferer. The policy of the Empress Catherine had been to avoid all European war, and peculiarly all conflict with France, an enemy to whom any approximation was dreaded, still less from its military energy than from its principles of subversion. The contact of her troops with those of France, either as friends or enemies, was a matter of just and perpetual apprehension to the sovereign of a people of vassals. But her successor Paul, a strange mixture of feebleness and obstinacy, instantly abandoned the Court system, listened to the representations of the merchants, (who, feeling that he was determined on going to war with either of the belligerents, dreaded the loss of their commerce in a British war,) and the clamour of the armies, indignant at remaining without promotion or honours, while all the minor States were busied in the field, prevailed on this unprepared and fantastic barbarian to declare against France. His first effort was in concert with our troops on the disastrous expedition to the Helder. His first was his last. The Russian auxiliaries were brave, but careless of discipline, and contemptuous of their adroit enemy. They were thrown into disorder in almost their earliest engagement, and a large number were captured. Napoleon felt all the importance of this event, ordered the prisoners to be treated with peculiar attention and sent them back without exchange to Russia—he became the idol of the Emperor, and war was about to be declared against England and the Allies, when the determination was formed to check a measure which would have involved the empire in incalculable hazards. Russia, still half Tartar, has not forgotten the old desperate expedients of her ancestors against oppressive kings, and she unhappily had no better escape from difficulty than crime—the Emperor was strangled by a troop of conspirators.

It marks at once the manners of the nation, and the popularity of the sacrifice, that the agents in this atrocious murder, though known, were never punished, except by temporary exile from the capital.

The policy of the Court instantly following the national hatred of France, and stimulated by the insults which have in all ages made French supremacy the most odious and short lived of all dominion, now devoted the mighty powers of Russia to the general cause. Alexander had more of the mind of a German than of the alternate fiery rashness and effeminate indolence of his Asiatic descent—he embarked in the war with resolution and sincerity, manfully exposed himself to the privations and chances of the field, and persevered with honorable firmness, until he saw his allies cut away one by one from his side; and left, alone in the field, to bear the iron inundation of France, swelled by the whole strength of the Continent, fought his last desperate and gallant battle on the frontier of his hereditary soil.

The peace of Tilsit placed Napoleon at the summit of empire; but he had now mounted to his meridian, and all thenceforth was to be descent, till his last splendour was extinguished in storms and darkness. In an hour of that mad ambition, which is to be accounted for only on the principle that there is an invisible and resistless avenger hovering over the man of blood, Napoleon attacked Spain—he had till now trampled down all opposition; he had rolled his chariot wheels over the armour and crowns of Europe; but he now found himself committed in battle with a new influence—the naked strength of noble national feelings, heroic disdain, and patriotic revenge. He was surrounded with a hostility that no defeat could extinguish—broken armies rallied, cities without wall or soldier became centres of bloody resistance, every blade of grass and every grain of dust seemed impregnated with hatred to him—"the stars in their courses fought against Sisera!"

Napoleon felt his fatal error—he felt that his military character was shattered, and to retrieve it, he rushed into his greatest and last war. The campaign of 1812 smote him. If ever the hand of Providence was made visible in the act of crushing human presumption, it was in the fate of that most memorable campaign. The rash advance of Napoleon, his tardiness when nothing but desperate activity could save him, his abandonment of all the edicts of diplomacy and war, which had been his guides to conquest, were still more striking evidences of his fatal hour, than the snows and storms that laid his thousands and tens of thousands stiffening in the desert.

It is honorable to Alexander's memory, that pursuing the French army as a soldier, he treated the warriors in his power with distinguished humanity, and that when, in the sacrifice of Paris, he might have inflicted a tremendous and pardonable retribution for the fires of Moscow, he was the declared and active friend of conciliation.

Of his policy in the Greek insurrection, we undoubtedly have yet no sufficient knowledge for the formation of any true opinion. That he wished well to the unfortunate Greeks, is only to suppose that he had the common feelings of every Christian man—but he had treaties with Turkey which he could not break, without the greatest crime of which States are capable. The peace or war of Europe rested on the sheathing or unsheathing of his solitary sword, and with such a responsibility, the firmest nerves might well tremble. Of the mode of his death, whether by assassination or the course of nature, we can yet know nothing; but the habit of Russian Courts, the known dislike of the late Emperor to his successor, and the suddenness and mysterious secrecy of the event, countenance suspicion that, for the honour of human nature, we hope to see removed. There is no European Sovereign on whose death such mighty questions may depend, as on that of the Emperor Alexander.

A party went on Thursday last to see the picture of the Marquis of Anglesea, painting by Stroehling, in Stratford-place, and the conversation happening to turn on the death of the Emperor Alexander, a military nobleman present, remarked, "Talking of the Son reminds me of the Father, and the best head Stroehling ever took from life, was that of the Emperor Paul of Russia!!!"

The panic which had spread to such an alarming extent (some of the effects of which we particularized in our last publication) has at length subsided, and the agitation of men's minds has naturally sunk into that calm of security which is ever the result of such exasperated alarms. In evidence of this important fact, it is with great satisfaction we announce the favourable results which have proceeded from the different examinations of some of those Bankers' accounts in the metropolis, whose temporary suspension of payments we had a few days since to record, for Sir CLAUDE SCOTT and Co. who announced their ability to recommence business on the Saturday, actually did so on the day preceding, and the best proof that can be adduced of the stability of this firm, and, what is perhaps better, public opinion of its stability, is the fact of barely a single account having been drawn from their hands, and, in the short space of eight days, nearly FIFTY NEW ACCOUNTS being opened. In addition to this gratifying case, we cheerfully give insertion to the following notification from Messrs. WILLIAMS, BURGESS, and Co.:—

Messrs. Williams and Co. feel most grateful to their numerous friends for the kind solicitude they have evinced towards them, and beg to inform them, that they are engaged in making arrangements with ns much speed as is compatible with so important a measure, for resuming their payments in a few days, under a new andextended firm.—Birchin-lane, Dec. 23.

—and to this other satisfactory announcement from Sir WALTER STIRLING and Co. to those who banked with them:—

"Although the recent general embarrassment of Money Concerns compelled us to suspend our payments, yet, after a most careful investigation of our Accounts, it nffords us the greatest gratification to be able to assure you we possess Assets to an amount considerably more than sufficient to satisfy, in full, every demand against ts. We shall, of course, use every exertion to ancomplish that object with the least possible delay; and as the best proof we can offer that such is our intention, we beg to inform you, that on Monday, the 23d of January next, we shall be prepared to pay you one-third of the Amount of your Claim upon us.

"We regret that we cannot at present make a larger payment, considerahle part of our assets not heing immediately available; but, with a view to convince you of the integrity of our intentions, we propose that the remainder of the demand shall bear interest at 4 per cent. from the 1st of January next; and anticipate, with much pleasure, that we shall, within a very moderate space of time, make a further payment, and shortly afterwards discharge every Claim against us."

Strand, Dec. 23."

Nothing can be more consolatory than these testimonies of public opinion, and private assurance, and the impression created by them is such as will eventually disarm the promoters of any future apprehension, and dissipate the last lingering spark of present doubt and fear. The contagion spread throughout the country by the suspensions in London, does not, of course, so speedily subside, and it is with deep regret we have to announce the failures of the subjoined bankers, in the provinces affixed to their names:—

Of those country failures previously announced, the statement relative to Messrs. FISHER & SON, of Cambridge, turns ont a fabrication, that most respectable bank having met every demand with the utmost promptitude, while Messrs. HOLLICK & Co. of that town, resume their payments next Saturday, and the Dorchester Bank re-opened yesterday, while Messrs. SKINNER & Co. of Darlington, who suspended their payments on Tuesday, commenced business again on Thursday, and Messrs. HILL & SON, of Wisbeach, have also announced their means of resuming their payments in the course of a few days.

We cannot allow this opportunity to pass without again commenting on the distressing and infamous conduct of some Journals, in recording failures and other transactions which never occurred. The Times Journal has conducted itself in every respect in the true spirit of those disgraceful principles on which it has been so long managed; it is an idle affectation to say, that a paper of such circulation cannot create alarm, or effect an injury; it can do, and has done, both; it was the original propagator of alarm, and has daily since kept up the cry—and the trumpery stuff in that publication of Monday, about the suspension of cash payments by the Bank, and the taking unto itself afterwards the credit of believing no such step would be adopted, when the commonest lout that prints the irnousense was aware it was never in agitation, is the height of all impudence and conceit—and the only way in which the daring of such fellows, grown insolent by power, and powerful by public patronage, is to bring them within the pale of the law—and with this impression it is, that we think the Cambridge Bankers are bound, for the protection of others, and in a common feeling of justice to themselves, to issue legal proceedings against these scribbling assassins. we are glad to find that Mr. ROTHSCHILD has expressed his determination to adopt such measures—although his victim is of no consequence, he has resolved to proceed, and a low Sunday Paper, of no circulation, which had the ignorance to impugn his reputation, by the statement of a transaction between him and Messrs. JONES, LLOYD, and Co. which never took place, has received notice of action at his hands; and Mr. ROTHSCHILD'S resolution to persist in it is highly commendable, when, in addition to the assertion of a base falsehood, the paragraph contained the lowest abuse of a gentleman admitted by every one to be the most strict and honourable in all his vast public dealings, and charitable and humane in private life.

It is impossible to bestow too much praise on the exertions of the Bank of England; and if any further proof were wanting than those already given, it will be found in the following notice just issued by the Directors:—

"At a Court of Directors of the Bank of England, December 22, 1825,

Resolved,—"That the Discount-office be kept open on Monday, the 26th, to receive bills of exchange for discount, although it is a holyday."

We have now placed on record the principal events which have transpired during the last week, excepting the failure of the extensive house of Messrs. CARRICK and MACLEAN, of Basinghall-street, on Friday last; and in so doing, we have preferred adopting that plain and simple manner of stating facts, best suited to the temperature of the public mind, and in language which has no other aim than that of detailing truth, and at the same time inspiring hope; for any false positions, or wild metaphors, touching on abstracted questions, in moments of such uncertainty as the present, would be one mode of enhancing those difficulties it is our first and grand object to endeavour to dissipate and allay.

SMITHFIELD CATTLE CLUB DINNER.

"Mr. Cripps' health being drank, he thanked the Members of the Company, and gave "Breeding in all its branches."

MORNING PAPER.

When Mr. CRIPPS, in manner very broad and most unheeding,
First talked about the "Members" and then "every branch of breeding,"
They all agreed it would have been more delicate and pleasant,
Had he proposed some better breeding in the MEMBERS present.

BALL HUGHES was asked by a Parisian friend the other day, which inn at Bagshot was the best to change at, when he strongly recommended the Cœur Blanc, (WHITE HART,) as having much better horses than the Bras du Roi, (KING'S ARMS.)

THEATRICALS.

Leocadea, to the production of which we briefly alluded last week, appears to have drawn (as the actors say) so much, that it is at last *with*DRAWN—nor is it entitled to any remark, beyond a tribute of proper admiration to Miss KELLY'S personation of the heroine, from which the piece is named. In our opinion Miss KELLY is much the best of English actresses in characters of this description, where the appeal is made directly to the passions, divested of those heroic forms and situations with which tragedians are usually surrounded—in the recital of domestic calamity she arouses, and indelibly arrests, the feelings; and, while in the portraiture of more elevated scenes other performers are capable of agitating all the faculties of mind, Miss KELLY plunges at once into the heart—the centre of all sensibility—and, ravaging its inmost recesses, becomes at once its perfect mistress—Leocadea is an instance of such power in this great and accomplished professor.

The fortunes of DRURY-LANE, which had seemed (partly from some whim which fashion now and then adopts, and partly from some uncontroulable casualties) a little on the wane, rose up at once to the very acme of all their pristine splendour on Wednesday last, by the re-appearance of Mr. LISTON, whose attraction, by the preliminary puffs of Sir MATHEW TIERNEY'S certificate, the projected barterings for Paul Pry, sundry dispersions of engravings and caricatures, and the managerial and editorial announcements in the Daily Papers, had resolved itself into a certainty. His personation of Maw-worm is more remarkable for the display of his own peculiar quaintness, than for the personation of one of those vagabonds who are to be found in such groups amongst the Saints of the day—but it is therefore to us more delightful—he maintains enough of the character to admit of its appreciation, while the irresistible drollery his manner excites is the very best criterion of the universal contempt evinced towards these psalm-singing reptiles—this remark, therefore, is an exception, not a drawback; for there is nothing to be compared to LISTON—

"He has no brother, and is like no brother"

—his is a humour beyond expression, or decay—he draws on Nature, and she answers his demands sine limite—his look lights up thousands of others—his laugh is extended by wholesale to his auditors (or, as the punsters call them, LISTON*ers*), and his appearance, in these days of doubt and danger, must be hailed as a general relief—we were delighted to see him more IN SPIRITS, if possible, than he usually is, in the after-piece; and, above all, we were delighted to see a house crowded to the roof, which has been the case each succeeding evening of his performance—diu spiret, say we of such a propitious gale.

The visitors to Covent Garden Theatre seem bitten more than ever with the mania for Music, which has been evinced by the unusual attendance, such a week as this of all others, to the representations, the three first days, of operas and operatic afterpieces,—and while on this subject, we are happy to find Madame VESTRIS has so far attended to our hints, in the Marriage of Figaro, as not again to jumble ROSSINI and MOZART together—but her Susanna is, nevertheless, a sad mutilation, while she is allowed to omit the most beautiful piece of music in the Opera—the duet of Crudel perche—and to substitute for one of its most pleasing airs, a little insignificant Spanish song, which, by its dulness, we presume to be one of Lord NUGENT'S melodies—the public when they pay their money (and dear enough it is in times like these) to see a performance, ought not to have it mangled by the "mauvais gout" of a singer. "The late Mr. Sheridan's Opera," as the play bills very politely term the Duenna, was most efficiently represented in most of its characters, on Wednesday last—the acting ones by BLANCHARD, FAWCETT, and Mrs. DAVENPORT, and the vocal ones by PEARMAN and Miss PATON—the splendid voice and rare science of this latter lady were never more forcibly exerted, and it is almost needless to say, she commanded the complete enthusiasm of her hearers. Madame VESTRIS played Don Gio—we mean Don Carlos, and like little TOMMY MOORE, appeared as the calumniator of SHERIDAN; for instead of one of his Songs, she introduced something about "farewell to Spain," another sublime touch, we conclude, of the portly NUGENT—common candour and respect to the Noble author, ought to have made her announce this in the bills.

TERRY and YATES deserve the encouragement they meet—each succeeding week brings some novelty—and more indeed than the great good fortune of their management calls upon them to provide—a light interlude appropriately designated at this time Christmas Boxes, from the fertile pen of Mr. BEASELEY, has within these few days made its appearance—it is highly diverting in itself, and rendered doubly so by the excellent acting of the two Managers.

The Pantomimes hold out great promise—betting at present in favour of the COVENT-GARDEN one, which, generally speaking, is the winner. There is no man to be compared to FARLEY in matters of this kind, and we have no doubt his genius will be exercised to the fullest extent, unless awed at all by the threatened prosecution of little HUMPTY DUMPTY OWEN, (who married Miss BEAUMONT) for calling it Beauty and the Beast. Miss HAMMERSLEY, as Captain FORBES expressed himself, was *colli*gated a few days since with a spruce German—in other words, married one Baron VON KOLLY—on the strength, we conclude, of MILTON'S line, "most musical, most melan*cholly.*" Miss PATON and Mr. SINCLAIR are singing at Bath—Miss STEPHENS was to have sung at Manchester; but having a better offer at Belfast, she begged to be "ill" at Manchester—KEAN has "safely landed" in America, for JONATHAN'S wrath, on the model of JOHN BULL, has abated now the Mime has made a grovelling apology—and the Yankee women, who would have fainted at the idea of being in their Theatre on the 15th of November, assembled in shoals, a dollar a head, on the 17th—and the "proud representative of SHAKSPEARE'S heroes" is—putting money in his purse—the New York Globe and Traveller assigns the following reasons for the turning of the tide, being the means adopted in this National emergency:—

"1st. To forestall all the seats in the pit and two tiers of boxes. 2. Give away tickets, send them on board of ships, and every where else, to get persons to applaud. 3. When the Keanites are all mustered, close the theatre, so that his opponent cannot appear against him. 4th. Knock down those who hiss the actor. 5th. Fill the lobby of the theatre with watchmen and police-officers, to seize those rioters only who oppose the favourite of the managers. 6th. Then publish to the world that his appearance was a triumphant victory. Only two things more remain to be done—1st. Station bullies in every box to 'bung up the eyes' and 'lock up the jaws' of all who dare to show the slightest mark of disapprobation. 2d. Send to France for a corps of gens d'armerie, so that our watchmen may be at leisure to perform their proper duty—of watching the property of our citizens."

—the language of the concluding part of this paragraph is a tolerably good specimen of Yankee literature. In the Times of Tuesday we find the following advertisement:—

"TO THEATRICAL AMATEURS.—The widow of an officer of rank, with a large family, and patronized by a Royal Duke, is about to take a Benefit at one of the Theatres Royal. Wanted, two Gentlemen, to undertake the Leading Characters in OTHELLO. To prevent unnecessary trouble, none need apply whose connexions and ABILITIES will not bear the strictest inquiry!!!—Address, post paid, A. B. 33, Coventry-street, Haymarket."

—Here's a chance for Mr. FITZHARRY and Mr. SEARLE, of Covent-garden, as far as "abilities" go—but if it must be "abilities and connexions that will bear the strictest inquiry," we recommend the Widow to apply to the Cheltenham beauties, or the threatened Hatfield aspirants. Beyond these bearings we hear nothing important of the "Profession," and therefore, in the memorable words of Sir WILLIAM CURTIS, on meeting Mrs. CHATTERLEY and Madame VESTRIS last season together—we wish them "a merry Christmas and a happy new 'ear!"

YORK HOUSE.

It affords us considerable satisfaction to announce the the rapid progress manifest in the erection of this splendid Mansion, and for the gratification of our readers, we lay before them some particulars of the building, by which they will be at once enabled to estimate the extent as well as magnificence of the undertaking; and while it assures them that the comforts and rank of the ROYAL RESIDENT will be equally consulted, it reflects on Mr. WYATT an infinite credit for the projection and prosecution of a work, that bids fair to become one of the most celebrated architectural atchievements of the country, and will stand a perpetual monument of his own genius. The following are its leading features:—

A spacious entrance Hall of 55 by 80 feet, leading through an opening of 20 feet wide, into a magnificent staircase of 55 by 46 upon the ground floor; but extending itself upon the principal floor, by including two galleries with open screens of columns, to a length of 84 feet, and seventy feet high. This is the largest staircase in England. It is worthy of remark, that the opening of 20 feet wide between the hall and the staircase is under two of the principal walls of the building, each wall being of the substance of more than two feet thick, and each wall carrying a roof of immense magnitude and weight. The support for these walls is a mass of cast and wrought iron work combined, which carries not only these walls and the roofs above them, but the greater part of the weight of a floor of unusual width; namely 38 feet. It is manifest that for such a prodigious weight to be supported over so large a void, either a great deal of judicious and scientific construction must be employed, or much more space occupied, for clumsy contrivances, than appears to be the case in this instance. The greater part of the ground floor is constructed of iron joists and brick arches, combining the advantages of security against noise, or disagreeable smell from below, as well as against fire, in less space than is usual for ordinary floors of similar span. The general principle of the design is a complete house for private convenience and comfort on the ground floor, containing a spacious bedchamber apartment on the west side, towards the Park; a suite of drawing-rooms on the south of about 120 feet long, and a drawing-room of 45 feet long by 25 feet wide, with various other rooms for the official and other attendants of his Royal Highness; and on the principal floor a suite of state apartments, consisting of bed-chamber, dressing-room, boudoir, library, wardrobe, bath, attendants' rooms, and on to the west a range of drawing-rooms of 120 feet in length to the south, leading into a gallery of 130 feet long, 33 feet wide, 28 feet high in the centre, 24 feet wide, and 25 feet high at each end; this gallery connecting the suite of drawing-rooms with the state dining-room, the size of which exceeds that of any regular dining-room in England, being no less than 64 feet long, 38 feet wide, and 30 feet high. The construction of the floor of this room appears to have been arranged with more than ordinary care, and notwithstanding its immense extent, to combine the advantages of more than adequate strength, without any sacrifice of height in the entrance hall which is below it. Great attention appears to have been paid to the arrangement of the domestic offices in the basement; and particularly in providing an abundance of light for those places. No just appreciation of this building can be made without reflecting that it is manifest from the works which preceded it upon the same ground, that a very short time must have been afforded for forming the design, as well as a very limited period for the execution of that large proportion of it which is already executed.

THE ARMY.

THE DUKE OF YORK'S LEVEE.—His Royal Highness the Commander-in-Chief held a Levee, on Tuesday, at his office, in the Horse Guards.

The following General and about forty other officers, purposed paying their respects to his Royal Highness, viz.:—General Sir Harry Calvert, Major-General Sir Patrick Ross, Lieutenant-General Baron Hochepied, Major-General Sir H. Vivian, Lord Clinton, Lieutenant-General Sir William Pringle, Lieutenant-General Sir Fitzroy Maclean, and Lieutenant-General Charles Stevenson.

Detachments belonging to the 2d, 3d, 38th, and 48th Regiments of Infantry, marched, on Tuesday, from Westminster, for Canterbury.

Detachments belonging to the 23d and 69th Regiments of Foot, marched, on Tuesday, from Westminster, for the cavalry depot, at Maidstone.

A detachment belonging to the Royal Staff Corps, marched, on Tuesday, from Westminster for Hythe.

A detachment belonging to the 56th Regiment of Infantry, marched, on Tuesday, from Westminster, for Hull.

A detachment belonging to the East India Company's service is ordered to embark, on Tuesday, at Billingsgate, for Gravesend, on route to Chatham.

The 11th (North Devon) the 65th (2d York North Riding) and the 73d Regiments of Infantry, have completed their augmentation establishments.

The last division of the 37th (North Hampshire) Regiment of Foot, has arrived on board the Maria transport, at Portsmouth, from Quebec.

It is rumoured in the military circles that a measure is in contemplation to give to officers who hold brevet rank, the option of retiring upon the half-pay of the regimental rank, next above that which they now hold. Should this measure be carried into effect, it is probable that several of the officers, so situated, will avail themselves of this permission; as many of those who have brevet rank, from long services, may be desirous themselves of the permission to retire so honourably from the active duties of their profession. This measure, if carried into effect, would create but a trifling increase of expense, as the vacancies would be filled up from the half-pay list. We have also been informed, that Government are desirous of giving an honourable retirement to some of the oldest Post Captains in the Navy, by placing them on a retired pay superior to their present half-pay, and giving them the rank of Rear-Admiral.

RECORDER'S REPORT.—At the Council held on Tuesday, the Recorder of London made a report to the King of the following prisoners under sentence of death in Newgate, all of whom were capitally convicted at the Old Bailey October Sessions—namely, William Henry Austin, aged 35, of secreting and stealing a letter which had been entrusted to him by virtue of his employment as a letter-sorter at the General Post Office; Richard William Jasper, 25, of forging an acceptance to a bill of exchange; Joseph Hooper, 24, George Newton, 37, Joseph Impey, 16, Robert Newton, 40, George Lewis, 17, William Hill, 37, and Richard Landers, 64, of stealing in a dwelling-house to the amount of 40s. and upwards; John Edmunds, 24, and James Adams, 35, of horse stealing; George Davies, 24, Mary Moore, 16, and Ann Wade, 15, of housebreaking. His Majesty was graciously pleased to respite, during his royal pleasure, all the said convicts, excepting John Edmunds, William Henry Austin, and Richard William Jasper, upon whom the law is left to take its course, and they were ordered for execution on Tuesday next, the 27th inst.

LAW INTELLIGENCE.

COURT OF CHANCERY—THURSDAY.

VISCOUNTESS ANSON V. THOMAS AND OTHERS.

This was an application for an injunction to restrain proceedings at law. Lady Anson purchased of the British Mining Company certain shares in four mines in Cornwall for the sum of 8,000*l.*, upon a parole agreement, that she was not to be called on to pay any portion of the costs and expenses to be incurred in working the mines, but that she was to receive her aliquot portion of the profits. The 8,000*l.* was paid in 1823, since which the working of the mines has been going on. Her Ladyship has actually been paid back nothing on account of profits, but in a demand lately made upon her to contribute towards defraying the expense of working the mine, the Company credited her with about 200*l.* as her share of the profits. The defendants had threatened to proceed at law against her for her share of the costs and expenses, and the bill was filed, praying for an injunction to restrain such proceedings, and that the defendants might not be at liberty to confiscate her shares. The only proof to be adduced in support of the plaintiff's case was to be picked out of correspondences by letters. The defendants denied that any such agreement had ever been made, and put the plaintiff to make out her case to the satisfaction of the Court. The arguments on both sides extended to a great length; the motion was opened yesterday, and his Lordship intimated, as the Gentlemen proceeded today, that in his opinion the granting of the injunction was entirely out of the question, the bill not being framed at all in a manner to entitle the plaintiff to such relief. And if any thing was to turn on the point of relief against the plaintiff's shares being forfeited upon the ground of the law of the Stannary Court, applying to her case, this Court would have to be put much more accurately into possession of a knowledge of what that law was, than either the Court or Counsel seemed at present to be. Besides, there was another most important objection, which was, that the Court knew nothing about the defendants as a Company.

The Solicitor General said he did not care whether they were a Company or not; if the Court thought a process could not issue against them as a Company, he would be content with having it against Messrs. Moore, Mascal, and Colebrook, the trustees, who had in them the legal title in the property that once was Mr. Thomas's.

His Lordship did not seem at all to think that even this resort would do.

COURT OF KING'S BENCH, DEC. 19.

LLOYD V. ASHBY, ROWLAND, AND SHAWE.

This was an action brought by the plaintiff, who is an engineer, to recover from the defendants, who carried on the business of engravers in Lombard-street, the sum of 82*l.* 12*s.* being the amount of a bill of exchange, drawn in July, 1824, upon Ashby and Co. by a person named Hugh Rowland, sen. payable to the plaintiff, at two months after date, and accepted by Ashby and Co.

Mr. Marryatt and Mr. Stephen conducted the case for the plaintiff.

Mr. Scarlett and Mr. Gurney appeared for the defendants.

Shawe, the defendant, allowed judgment to go by default.

The acceptance having been proved, Mr. Marryatt called the plaintiff's clerk, who proved that the plaintiff constructed a pump, and some machinery, in a paper-mill belonging to the drawer Roland; that before the pump and machinery were put up on the drawer's premises, the witness went to the house of the acceptors, where he met a person (not the defendant, Mr. Rowland), who told him that the bill would be accepted, and paid when due. The account for the work done for the drawer amounted to 82*l.* 12*s.*

A deed of partnership, entered into in June, 1824, between the defendants, was then put in and read.

Mr. East, the defendant's clerk, swore that the defendant, Mr. Shawe, was a partner in the month of July, and up to the month of September.

In his cross examination, he said that before Mr. Shawe became a partner the partners were Ashby, Rowland, and Osborne, and the business was carried on under the firm of Ashby and Co. but after Mr. Shawe became a dormant partner, the business was carried on under the firm of "Ashby and Rowland," because Mr. Shawe went abroad immediately after he became a partner, and his name was never mentioned to any of the customers. The drawer, Mr. Rowland, had dealings with the firm whilst Osborne was a partner, but the witness did not know whether or not he had dealings with the firm after Shawe became a partner.

This was the case for the plaintiff.

Mr. Scarlett, for the defendant Shawe, submitted upon the authority of "Wilkes v. Wilkes," 1st East. 46, that Mr. Shawe was not liable.

Lord Chief Justice—The case of Sheriff v. Wilkes was where a bill of exchange was drawn upon a Company A, B, and C, for a debt due by A and B before C came into the partnership, and accepted in the name of the Company. There it was held that C was not liable; but, Mr. Scarlett, before you can bring this case within that rule, must it not appear that this acceptance is for a debt due before Shawe became a partner?

Mr. Scarlett then submitted generally that a dormant partner was not liable for acceptances given in the name of the firm for money raised by one or more of his partners for their use.

The Lord Chief Justice then called the defendant's clerk, East, and asked him whether there was any money due from Ashby, Rowland, and Osborne, to the drawer, when Osborne returned. The witness said he did not know of any sum being due to the drawer at that time.

Mr. Scarlett—Then I propose to take the opinion of the Court upon my objection.

Mr. Marryatt, for the plaintiff, contended that all partners in a concern were liable to a holder (for valuable consideration) of an acceptance given by any of the partners in the name of the firm. He submitted that there were no cases that went farther than that the dormant partner was not liable to the drawer, who must have known that the partnership had received no consideration, nor to a holder who was aware of that circumstance.

The Lord Chief Justice—I think the dormant partner is in this case liable. I must take this bill to be either an acceptance in consideration of a debt due from Ashby and Rowland, before Shawe became a partner, or I must take it to be an accommodation bill for which Shawe had received no consideration. If I took it to be a bill of the latter description, and that it appeared that Shawe was known to be a partner, then he would be liable to the plaintiff, who is a holder, for valuable consideration. But, as it does not appear that Shawe was known to be a partner, I can't say that the bill was taken upon his credit. Observe, Mr. Scarlett, I rely upon the fact, that at the time this acceptance was taken by the plaintiff, Shawe was not known to be a partner.

Plaintiff nonsuited.

CRIM. CON.—PARKES V. CRESWICK.

Mr. Ryan opened the pleadings. The declaration alleged that the defendant had criminal conversation with the plaintiff's wife.

The defendant pleaded Not Guilty.

Mr. Attorney General—The plaintiff is a gentleman, possessing some property, and was formerly a traveller in a mercantile house. The defendant is a gentleman of landed property, and a Magistrate of the County of Gloucester. The wife of the Plaintiff was a lady of considerable personal attractions, and the daughter of an attorney at Bristol. Some time after the marriage, Mrs. Parkes wished her husband to establish himself in business at Bristol, amongst her friends and relations. He did so; but subsequently wished to retire from that business and to return to London, but having no residence there, he was compelled to leave his wife and two children at Bristol, under the care of her father. About this time the mother of the plaintiff's wife died, and the defendant being intimate with the father's family, he proposed that the plaintiff's wife should pay a visit to the defendant at his residence at Hannam Hall, in Gloucestershire, alleging, that she would be a companion for a daughter of his, who was just about returning from school. She went accordingly, no suspicion being entertained as to the defendant's motives, and here the defendant completed the ruin of Mrs. Parkes, and destroyed the happiness of the plaintiff. During this period no intercourse had taken place between the plaintiff and his wife; but upon her return to her father's residence, after her visit to the defendant, she discovered herself to be pregnant, and she immediately told the circumstance to the defendant, requesting that he would provide some place where her accouchement might take place in concealment. The defendant made arrangements accordingly, and they both eloped together, no one knowing whither they had gone. From this time the parties continued to live together in secrecy, and no trace of them could be discovered. This lasted about two years, and the result of this intercourse was the birth of two children. At length the defendant got tired of this life of obscurity, and also of his companion, and returned to his residence, where he was repeatedly questioned as to his knowledge of Mrs. Parkes, but he had always denied knowing any thing about her. Upon one occasion when applied to, he denied all knowledge of her, but he subsequently admitted that Mrs. Parkes was at that very time locked up in a room in his house. Afterwards, in consequence of the cruel treatment of the defendant, Mrs. P. wrote to a friend of her father's, representing her condition, and claiming some assistance; this led to the discovery of the base conduct of the defendant, who, upon being applied to on the subject, said that he had turned the lady off in consequence of her being no better than a common prostitute. Upon her father's friend going to seek her, he found her inhabiting a humble cottage, maintaining herself and her children, by her own industry, in doing needle work, given her by the ladies in the neighbourhood. She gave him up a quantity of letters that the defendant had written to her, but those letters in a subsequent communication between the plaintiff and the defendant, were given up to him; one or two had been retained, from which the general tenor of them might be inferred. The learned gentleman here detailed the reasons why the plaintiff and his wife did not cohabit together at the time the seduction took place. There certainly was a coolness between them, in consequence of the wife refusing to come to London, and the plaintiff had certainly spoken in an authoritative tone on the subject, saying that he might as well be without a wife at all. These were the facts—and subsequently the plaintiff, having been prosperous in life, and being now a man of fortune, had thought it to be his duty, by this action, to expose the base character of the defendant, who had to the injury he had inflicted on the plaintiff, added the most cruel insult to the unfortunate object of his lust. Such conduct was infamous in the extreme; but the more so, when inflicted by a magistrate, whose duty it was to guard the morals of the public.

Mr. Latcham, the brother of the plaintiff, proved the marriage, which took place in 1811.

Cross-examined—The business which the plaintiff carried on at Bristol was that of a plumber and glazier. The plaintiff was in London seven or eight years, during which time witness's father supported the wife and her two children. Witness did not disapprove of her marriage. He thought they lived very unhappily together. Witness may have said that the plaintiff behaved like a scoundrel to his wife. Had heard her say that she would never go to London to live with him. His father became embarrassed in his circumstances. Mrs. Parkes went to a Mrs. Pickering's and another place; she went as companion. When witness's father died the children were sent to witness to take care of, and witness consequently wrote to the plaintiff on the subject, and receiving no answer he applied to the parish, and one of the children was sent up to London to the plaintiff. Knew that the defendant was some time ago in great embarrassments, but did not know that he continued so now.

Thomas Silkwich, lives at Exeter—Recollects the defendant coming to that place in 1820, and brought with him a Lady; he introduced her as his wife; they passed by the name of Mr. and Mrs. Humphries. He had a cottage at Exmouth, and there he saw the lady he called Mrs. Humphries. Witness received his letters and parcels. The lady had a child whilst at Exmouth: the child was nursed by a woman of the name of Fere. The defendant left the cottage in March, 1821; witness procured a chaise for him, and Mr. and Mrs. Humphries went together with their boxes.

Several witnesses having been examined, and the letters put in and read,

A witness was recalled, who proved that the plaintiff came into the possession of considerable landed property by inheritance, about the commencement of 1824.

Mr. Scarlett, for the defence, addressed the Jury. He contended that this action was brought for the sole purpose of getting a divorce, so as to bar the plaintiff's wife of her dower, and to enable him to dispose of it, without her levying a fine. The learned Counsel then strongly remarked on the conduct of the plaintiff in suffering his wife to remain so many years without either allowing her a sixpence for her support, or ever inquiring after her, even when this supposed adultery was discovered; and of his hardheartedness in suffering his child to go to the parish; and finally contended that the only question was, whether there should be a verdict for the defendant, or a shilling damages.

The Lord Chief Justice charged the Jury, that the adultery was made out, but left the question of damages to the Jury.

HANNAFORD V. HUNN.

This case, in which the defence was conducted by the Admiralty, being specially appointed for to-day, was called on at the sitting of the Court. Only two special jurors appeared, and some time elapsed before a full complement of common jurors could be obtained. At length the jury were sworn.

Mr. PATTESON opened the pleadings. The action was brought for three several assaults on board his Majesty's ship Tweed; the first, on the 14th of August, 1824; the second, on the 31st of August; the third, on the 11th of September, and imprisonments consequent thereon. To each of these allegations the defendant pleaded 14 special pleas of justification, all alleging that he was captain and commander of his Majesty's ship Tweed; that the defendant was master of the same vessel. Each set of pleas was divided into two classes; the first justifying the trespasses, on the several grounds that the plaintiff disobeyed the lawful orders of the defendant; that he disobeyed the orders of his superior officer; that he had quarrelled with his superior officer; that he behaved with contempt; and that he made an unlawful alteration in the log-book without authority; the second class alleging that he was charged with doing all these things, and that he was arrested upon that charge; and all the pleas averring that he was kept and detained in prison in order to his being put upon his trial at a court-martial. To all these special pleas the plaintiff replied, that the defendant committed the trespasses without the causes so alleged; and also newly assigned that he kept the plaintiff in prison for a longer time, and in a closer manner, than was necessary for the purpose relied on; to which new assignment the defendant pleaded "not guilty."

A number of witnesses were examined as to the facts of the case, when the Lord Chief Justice stated the substance of the pleas which we have abstracted in the opening of the case. In the first class of pleas, the defendant asserted the facts of disobedience, insubordination, &c.; in the second class he stated only a charge by another officer; and on this record it was open to the jury to inquire into the truth of those several grounds of defence to the two arrests and imprisonments proved by the witnesses. If the jury should think that both these arrests were really consequent on a charge made by an officer, then on that part of the record the defendant would be entitled to a verdict. If they did not attribute the arrest, or either of them, to such a charge, then, on the other part of the record, they were at liberty to inquire into the truth of the imputations raised, and into their application to the arrests, or either of them. After some further observations the jury retired for three quarters of an hour, and returned a verdict for the plaintiff—Damages £250.

ADMIRALTY SESSIONS.—Friday, Dec. 23.

This morning these Sessions commenced before the Right Honourable Lord Stowell, the Deputy High Admiral of England and a bench of Civilians.

There were only three prisoners for trial, viz. :—J. Greenland, for the murder of W. Howlihan, on the high seas ; J. W. Hele, for stealing 25,000 dollars, on board the ship Tartar, and J. Smith, for stealing 25 gallons of rum.

The Grand Jury having been sworn, Lord Stowell delivered his charge to the Grand Jury.

After being absent about an hour, the Grand Jury returned into Court, and presented a true bill against John Greenland for murder.

The prisoner was then brought into Court, and the indictment read, which charged him with the wilful murder of John Howlihan. There were several counts in the indictment varying the form. The prisoner pleaded Not Guilty.

Before the trial was proceeded in, Mr. Law made an application to the Court relative to Captain Christie, who was tried at a previous sessions on a charge of committing an assault upon an officer belonging to a King's ship, and obstructing him in his duty, when taking volunteers from his (Christie's) vessel ; the Jury acquitted the accused of the assault, but there was a point reserved as to whether he was not guilty in point of law. The Learned Gentleman said that his client had been at large on recognizances which he was most anxious to discharge, as he was going a voyage next month, and would be absent for a year.

The Judges said that the Lord Chief Justice had made no report to them on the subject.

Mr. Law then moved that Capt. Christie (who was in Court) might be allowed to depart on his own recognizance.

The Court granted the application, and permitted him to depart until the next Sessions, upon the understanding that the recognizances should be enlarged from time to time. The recognizances of his sureties were consequently discharged.

CHARGE OF MURDER BY SMUGGLERS.

John Greenland, mariner, was put to the bar on an indictment charging him with wilfully killing and slaying, on the high seas, within the jurisdiction of the High Court of Admiralty, John Howlihan, one of the men belonging to his Majesty's preventive service, stationed off Folkeston, on the night of the 9th of October, by forcibly throwing him from a boat, at sea, for the purposes of smuggling. Another count laid the offence as having been committed with a pistol.

The Learned Judge, after hearing the evidence, commenced delivering his charge to the Jury, and having remarked on the high importance of the case, put it to them to say, whether they could conscientiously acquit or find the prisoner guilty.

After an absence of an hour and a half, the Jury found the prisoner—Not Guilty.

During the absence of the above Jury, twelve other Gentlemen were sworn in, and Charles Smith was put to the bar on an indictment, charging him with feloniously stealing, within the jurisdiction of the High Court of Admiralty, twenty-five gallons of rum. The case for the prosecution was not borne out by the witnesses, and the Jury found him—Not Guilty.

The bill against J. W. Hele, for stealing 25,000 dollars, was thrown out by the Grand Jury.

The above were the only cases for trial, and the Sessions adjourned.

POLICE INTELLIGENCE.

BOW-STREET.—A young man of genteel appearance, giving his name William Smith, was on Thursday brought up before the Sitting Magistrate, Sir R. Birnie, by Johnson, a constable, from whose deposition it appeared, that while going his rounds, about nine o'clock on Wednesday night, he observed the defendant climb over the palisadoes of the church-yard of Saint Martin's-in-the-Fields, and slowly proceed towards the church. Witness went to the watchman, who has charge of the key of the gate at night, which he procured, and followed the defendant, whom he took into custody, and conveyed to the watch-house.

Mr. Smith being called on to account for his being found in such a situation, stated, that being destitute of the means of providing himself with a night's lodging, and an entire stranger in the metropolis, he went into the church-yard merely for the purpose of taking shelter from the inclemency of the weather, it raining fast at the time, and not with any felonious intention ; adding, that he came to London in hopes of procuring a situation as assistant in a school, having formerly been employed in that capacity.

Sir Richard Birnie said that he had no doubt his story was a true one, and he, from his heart, commiserated the distressing situation in which he was placed, at the same time observing that a situation of the kind Mr. Smith was anxious to meet with, was very difficult to be procured in London. He was then dismissed.

Messrs. Butler and Johnson, a couple of athletic young men, whose christian names we presume to be Thomas and Jeremiah, were brought up, on the complaint of a waterman, rejoicing in the uphonious name of Bokins.

It appeared from Mr. Bokins' statement, that about three o'clock Thursday morning, as he was going down to the river to assist in unloading a barge at the top of Villiers-street, he encountered the defendants, when Mr. Butler tapped him on the shoulder, and remarked that his friend Mr. Johnson would fight any man in England. Scarce had Mr. Butler finished this assertion, when his friend Mr. Johnson, in order, it may be supposed, to remove any doubt on the subject which might yet linger in Mr. Bokins' mind, put himself into an attitude and immediately darting "one-two" into his face, reduced Mr. Bokins at once from a perpendicular to an horizontal. The indignant Bokins, however, rising like a second Antæus, from the contamination of the gutter, hit away at his amateur assailant right and left, and a watchman coming to his assistance, Mr. Butler and his "friend Mr. Johnson" were both conveyed, not without some difficulty, to the watch-house.

The defendants now intimated that they had been to the theatre, and afterwards to Mr. Offley's, where having taken a "nip" a piece of that gentleman's best Burton, they were returning to their lodgings in Queen-square, Westminster, when they met the complainant, who was in a very how-came-ye-soish sort of a condition, and that he in fact assaulted them.

The testimony of the watchman, however, leaning to the Bokins' side of the question, they were ordered to find bail, which not being handy at the moment, they were locked up till it should be forthcoming.

Emma Hicks, a woman about twenty-five years of age, was brought before Sir R. Birnie, charged by a young man named George Cross, with stealing a watch, his property.

The prosecutor stated, that he had known the prisoner for some years, and one evening in September last, he visited her at her lodgings in Earl-street, Seven Dials, and remained there until the morning. She pressed him to take breakfast, and went out under the pretence of getting some cresses, but did not return ; and he found that she had taken his watch, which was lying on the table, with her. He did not see her until last Saturday night, when he told her that he wanted his watch, and requested her, if she had pawned it, to restore the duplicate and he would forgive her. She refused, and he gave her in charge of a constable, who asked her for the duplicate, and she immediately took it from her pocket and gave it up. It appeared that she pledged the watch at a pawnbroker's, in Westminster-road, in September, for 2l. and on the 2d of December, she called again at the shop and procured 2l. more upon it.

The prisoner, in her defence, said that five years ago she was seduced from her husband by the prosecutor, and even was wicked enough to take away the greater part of their furniture, in order to go and live with him. They remained together four years, when he left her, but occasionally paid her a visit. When she took the watch she was dreadfully distressed, having parted with her clothes and every thing upon which she could raise a shilling.

Sir R. Birnie asked Cross if he intended, under the circumstances, to prosecute the prisoner.

Cross said he had no particular desire to prosecute if he could have his watch returned, but that he was determined to have.

Sir R. Birnie said the pawnbroker was not bound to give up the watch unless the person stealing was prosecuted.

The prisoner said that an offer had been made by her friends to advance money enough to redeem it, within six weeks, but he refused it.

The prosecutor said he had been offered security, but no money was shewn to him, and, besides, this was after she was in custody, and he did not know that he would be justified in accepting the offer.

Sir R. Birnie said he had no alternative but to commit the prisoner, as the prosecutor seemed determined to go on ; and she was accordingly fully committed to Newgate.

When Cross was being bound over to prosecute, Sir R. Birnie observed that he would not stand in his shoes, at the Old Bailey, for a trifle.

QUEEN-SQUARE.—A very interesting girl, although shabbily dashing, was charged by Thomas Pace, an officer, with being met, in company with another girl, carrying a hand-box, at an unseasonable hour of the morning, in Orchard-street, Westminster, when the fair perambulators told the officer they were going to Duck-lane.

Eliza Stevens, who burst into tears while endeavouring to articulate her name, stated, that herself and companion had recently been inmates of one of the receptacles in King's-place, St. James's, from whence they escaped with an intention of returning to their relatives, in Kent, whom they had, unhappily, been induced to desert.

Pace—That's the account they gave me ; but neither of them are eighteen years old, and they complained of their having been locked up in King's-place, after they were decoyed there.

Mr. Markland—What had they in the box they carried with them ?

Both girls—Our few clothes, Sir, and nothing else.

Pace—But they had been locked up, Sir.

Mr. Markland—That's their affair, and not our's. If they have in reality been locked up against their own will, and their friends are decent folks, they have still their remedy at law. I hope, therefore, that they intend to return to their friends ; and, upon that prospect, I shall now discharge them. They know best, at the same time, what they wish.

Eliza and her companion were then discharged.

ACCIDENTS, &c.

AFFECTING CASES OF SELF-DESTRUCTION.

Tuesday evening, at seven o'clock, an inquisition was taken by Thomas Shelton, Esq. coroner for the city of London, at the committee room of St. Bartholomew's Hospital, on the body of Mrs. Agnes Osman.

The jury having been impanelled and sworn, took a view of the body, and on their return to the committee room the following testimony was received :—

Hannah Leach, a little girl, stated, that she was servant to Mr. Fenwick, a glover, residing at No. 11, Brownlow-street, Holborn. The deceased was a married woman, and lived with her husband in the upper part of her master's house. On Saturday afternoon last, about three o'clock, witness saw the deceased in the yard at the back of the house in the act of falling to the ground, and the blood gushing in torrents from a wound in the neck. She instantly gave an alarm, and Mr. Fenwick and several others came to her assistance. She was placed in a hackney-coach, and brought to this hospital.

Mr. John Fenwick stated that he was a glover, and kept the house where Mrs. Osman resided. She had been there about three quarters of a year, during which period he had frequently thought her of deranged intellect. He had been told since her death that she had only been a short time from a lunatic asylum when she entered his house. A few days prior to her committing the dreadful act, she told him that her husband was in a very low and dejected state of mind, and that her troubles were more than she could bear. Witness on hearing the alarm caused by his servant, ran into the yard, and saw the deceased with her throat cut in a most shocking manner, from which the blood was flowing copiously. Witness procured a coach, and conveyed her to the hospital, after the wound had been dressed by a neighbouring surgeon.

The father of the unfortunate deceased was next called. He stated that he had attended his late daughter in her illness frequently. She had been frequently a patient in the lunatic asylum, and he had no doubt she cut her throat with the razor, at a time that she was attacked with the dreadful malady.

Mr. James Lewis, house surgeon to the hospital, stated, that when the deceased was brought in he attended her, but before he could attempt to preserve her life, she expired. The cause of death was suffocation from the loss of blood, which had flowed internally from the wound. Verdict—Insanity.

One of the most appalling instances of self-destruction that we have heard of for some time, was perpetrated by a Mrs. Eames, residing at the public-house, called the Eagle and Child, in Shoe-lane, Fleet-street, about half-past eight o'clock Tuesday evening.

On Saturday, it appears, when Eames, the husband, came home, he found his wife in a state of intoxication ; and he being a remarkably sober man, felt so disgusted at her situation, that he made a solemn vow that he would never again live with her. A very serious dispute then arose between them, and he had not spoken to her from that time till Monday night, when he came home. She then said, "Eames, what do you mean to do ? Do you mean to live with me again or not ?" Eames replied, he would come home to his meals, and that she should not want for money, but that he would not sleep in the house again. The unfortunate woman then deliberately procured a wine glass, which she filled with laudanum from a two ounce phial ; and after embracing her children, she drank the contents off in a moment. Her husband, at first, thought nothing of it ; but in a few minutes the effect of the laudanum was so plain that he instantly caused an alarm, and Dr. Hall, of Holborn-bridge, was called in. She was sensible, and declared that she had contemplated her destruction since the quarrel she had had with her husband on Saturday night, and to effect it she had purchased fourteen pennyworth (2 oz.) of laudanum, in small quantities, at different druggists' shops in the neighbourhood. Mr. Hall administered strong emetics, and also introduced the stomach syringe, but the effects of the draught were so powerful on the brain, that all attempts to save her were beyond human skill, and she died shortly after.

Love and Suicide.—An inquest was Wednesday taken at the Turk's Head public-house, East-street, Red Lion-square, on Jane Parrott, an extremely pretty young woman, only eighteen years of age, who hanged herself in a fit of jealous despondency, at the house of her mistress, Mrs. Turner, of No. 5, New North-street, on Tuesday morning.

Mr. Thomas Knight, a lodger in the house, was let in by deceased at a little after eleven o'clock on Monday night. Deceased did not then appear particularly agitated or depressed. The next morning, when witness came down to the parlour, he was surprised to find the shutters closed, and the room not cleaned up as usual. Mrs. Turner, the lady of the house, soon after went down to the kitchen, and on hearing her scream out for assistance, he followed her, and then discovered that the deceased had hanged herself in the scullery.

Mrs. Turner, widow, keeps the house No. 5, New North-street. Deceased was in her service for about twelve months, and was generally speaking, a very well-behaved young woman—she kept company with a young man named Wood, and on Monday morning requested leave to go and see him, as he was going out of town for some months. She got permission to do so, and returned home at ten o'clock. She had evidently been in tears ; but witness attributed her distress to parting from one who seemed to possess a command over her affections. After deceased had let in the lodger, Mr. Knight, she went to bed in witness's room, and appeared to sleep soundly. The next morning she arose about the usual hour, and went down stairs. When witness got up, she was astonished to find that the fire had not been lighted up in the sitting-room, and knowing that deceased was subject to fainting fits, she concluded that something of that sort had befallen her. On going down to the kitchen, witness was shocked at finding that the unhappy girl had hanged herself in the scullery. On a table in the kitchen a paper was found, containing these words, very legibly written in a female hand—

" Dear William—I die for jealousy, on the 20th of December, 1825. Will remember you for ever more. Remember me to all my friends and foes. I have been true to you above all. I wish well to you and all your friends. I parted like a stranger from you on Monday night, as I felt your heart was stolen from me. I write this with trembling. Farewell to you, dear William ; farewell.

" To my Mother, 4, Larkhall-lane.

" To my dear, dear William Wood, I, Princes-street, Drury-lane."

This letter was read by Miss Elizabeth Turner, who had taught the unfortunate girl to write.

William Wood, a linen-draper's shopman, out of place, the cause of this fatal calamity was then examined.—Though it was proved that he had been paying court to the poor girl for several months, and that on Monday he had beaued her about all day, yet with impudence he protested that he had not the slightest spark of affection for the being who had sacrificed her life on his account.

The Coroner commented in strong terms on the wickedness of trifling with the affections of young and innocent girls, and told Wood it had been fitter for him to have gone and looked for a better employment.

The jury returned a verdict of " temporary insanity."

Fatal Mistake.—On Saturday last Master F. Downing, about 13 years of age, the eldest son of Francis Downing, Esq. of Dudley, and one of the pupils of the Rev. Mr. Freeman, at Pattingham, being unwell, Mrs. Freeman ordered the servant boy to go into the village for two half ounces of salts, but the cook said there were some in the house, and she immediately fetched out of the pantry an ingredient which was mixed with some water in a tea-cup, and Master Downing drank the contents ; immediately after he became sick and faint, complained of a pain in the stomach, and was scarcely able to speak. Upon the appearance of these symptoms, the housemaid said to the cook, " Surely you have not given him the oxalic acid," and this was the first intimation that Mrs. Freeman had of there being so dangerous a drug in the house, and it was too certain that the unfortunate young gentleman had swallowed it. A medical gentleman was sent for, and such things administered as were thought the most efficacious antidotes ; but, alas, the deadly poison resisted every effort, and in less than half an hour the helpless youth expired. It appears that the oxalic acid was kept by the maid for the purpose of cleaning brass and other articles of furniture, and was contained in a paper on which its name and the word " poison" were printed, but unfortunately the cook who fetched it from the pantry, was unable to read. An inquisition was held, and a verdict returned to the effect, that the deceased died by accidentally taking oxalic acid in mistake for salts.—Wolverhampton Chronicle.

Calamitous Fire.—On Thursday morning the extensive premises of Mr Gibbs presented one mass of flame, and only one engine, that of the Sun Office, could be kept alternately with that of the County, at work for five minutes together from the deficiency of water. The extensive workshops of the respective tradesmen in Meadowcott's-mews, had by this time caught fire. The house of Mr. Winter, appraiser and undertaker, now became also joined in the immense mass of flame. The firemen exerted themselves to stop as well as they could its rapid progress, and on tearing away the front of the shop, the house of Mr. Winter appeared completely crowded with valuable furniture, not a vestige of which could be saved. The dreadful want of water still continued, and the premises of Mr. Mitchell were next destroyed. The Sun and County engines were at length brought to bear on this house, and happily succeeded in stopping the further progress on that side. The flames, however, still bade defiance to their exertions, and the house of Mr. Macguire now also appeared on fire in every floor, the flames having been communicated from behind. At this time the whole range of the Mews in Little Wardour-street, between the backs of the houses of Mr. Gibbs, Mr. Winter, Mr. Michell, Mr. King, Mr. Macguire, Mr. Evans, Messrs. Metzlin & Son, Mr. Mackie, and Mr. Kelley, in Wardour-street, presented one body of fire, which penetrated to the backs of the houses on the east side of Berwick-street, four or five of which were much damaged, as were those of the persons before mentioned, in Wardour-street. Up to six o'clock the supply of water remained inadequate to supply more than four or five engines ; at length the fire appeared to exhaust itself, and a somewhat better supply of water having been obtained, the engines were brought to play with effect. The loss of property must have been immense, and it was the general observation, that had there been a supply of water in the first instance, the conflagration would have been stopped.—The only cause that could be assigned for the want of water was, that the main pipes of the Company were under repair. The highest praise is due to the night police of Bow-street, whose determined exertions, when called on by the firemen, tended greatly to save much valuable property in the course of its removal from the adjacent houses. We could not learn that any lives had been lost.

Activity at the Mint.—There are eight Presses, which, on cases of emergency, can all be put in action, as has been done at present, and each Press coins 40 sovereigns in a minute, making 320 sovereigns by the whole eight Presses in a minute, or equal to 19,200 in an hour. Allowance must, however, be made for the breaking of dies, &c., which diminishes the amount of coinage ; and this week, one hundred and fifty thousand sovereigns per day have been coined. Mr. Wallace is in constant attendance, and is assiduous and indefatigable in urging on the work.

THE COMET STEAM PACKET.

(From the Edinburgh Courant of Thursday.)

EDINBURGH HIGH COURT OF ADMIRALTY.

Trial of Duncan M'Innes, late Master, and Peter M'Bride, Pilot, of the Comet Steam-Boat.

Yesterday, the trial of the Master and Pilot of the Comet steamboat took place, before the High Court of Admiralty, Sir John Connell, Knt. Judge, assisted by William Boswell, Esq. advocate, Sheriff of Berwickshire.

M'Innes and M'Bride, who had been liberated on bail, appeared at the bar, at ten o'clock, and soon after that hour the Judge took his seat.

A number of witnesses were called, who gave similar evidence to what has already appeared in the papers, among whom was the master of the Ayr, who stated that he did not hear the cries for help from the drowning passengers of the Comet. Upon this evidence, Mr. Cockburn, counsel for the defendants, made the following observations:—"The master of the Ayr, whose credit I am entitled to try, and whose situation, gentlemen, I say is not so enviable as those who p rished, has given evidence which no man in his senses can believe. It is false, the learned gentleman said, it is false, that he did not hear the cries from the Comet. It is false that he stopt for a moment. It is false that he considered his vessel in the least danger. He remained! he fled!—his ears pierced with the cries, but his heart was not softened by the agonies of these dying men. He fled, and saved no life. He made no attempt to save a single drowning being, though there was time for humane persons at Gourock to put off their boats and reseue many. I never knew a human creature plaeed in such a situation as this man. I repeat it, that, compared to him, I envy the fate of those who are no more. I will not disgust myself further by talking further of him; but I say, that as a witness on this trial, one word that he has uttered cannot be believed."

The Judge summed up the evidenee, and finished a clear and candid charge to the Jury at four o'cloek. The Jury were then inclosed to consider their verdict, which was directed to be returned at two o'clock yesterday.

FONTHILL ABBEY.

This magnificent structure is now a heap of ruins. The grand tower 190 feet in height, and which might be seen for 20 miles around, fell in at three o'elock on Wednesday, destroying the hall, the whole of the octagon, and great part of the galleries, north and south, together with the first crimson room, having quietly descended into the fountain court, leaving the grand entrance standing with the organ in statu quo, and the statue of the late Alderman Beckford in its niche, as if it remained to point to the ruins of his son's ambition. Fortunately but one accident occurred, although the servants were engaged in taking out some of the windows, and had fortunately just eseaped in time to avoid being buried in the ruins. Mr. Farquhar had taken the preeaution to move to the East wing, together with Mrs. Mortimer and her children. The latter had been in the daily habit of playing in the galleries. It is said the tower had long been expected to fall, and preparations were then going on to remove the valuable windows, &e.; indeed, on the earpenters removing the doors and frames under the arch of the entrance to St. Michael's Gallery (not the most judicious undertaking) part of the stonework fell in. Mr. Farquhar's plate was buried in the ruins.

THE MASQUERADE announced to take place on Thursday, at the Argyll Rooms, is expeeted to be on a superior seale of splendour. The Committee have also expressed their intention of making it partieularly seleet. With these attractions, and the aid of Mr. CHARLES WRIGHT'S superior Champagne, this Entertainment will, no doubt, be highly amusing.

BURGESS' ESSENCE of ANCHOVIES, Warehouse, 107, STRAND, corner of Savoy Steps, London.—JOHN BURGESS and SON, being apprised of the numerous endeavours made by many persons to impose a spurious article for their make, feel it incumbent upon them to request the attention of the public, in purchasing what they conceive to be the ORIGINAL, to observe the Name and Address correspond with the above. The general appearance of the spurious descriptions will deceive the unguarded, and for their detection J. B. and Son submit the following caution:—Some are in appearance at first sight "Burgess' Essence of Anchovies;" others, "Burgis's," and many more without address.—JOHN BURGESS and SON having been many years honoured with such distinguished approbation, feel every sentiment of respect towards the public, and earnestly solicit them to inspect the labels previous to purchasing what they conceive to be of their make, which they hope will prevent many disappointments.

Burgess' New Sauce for general purposes having given such great satisfaction, continues to be prepared by them, and is recommended as a most useful and convenient sauce; will keep good in all climates.

Warehouse, 107, Strand, corner of the Savoy Steps.—The Original Fish-Sauce Warehouse.

ROEBUCK IRON FOUNDRY, Stove Grate Manufactory, and general Furnishing Ironmongery Warehouse, Great Dover-road, Southwark.—CRUNDALL and HALLEN acknowledge the liberal support they have received from the Nobility and Gentry, and, in consequence of the very considerable increase of business, they have found it expedient to enlarge their premises to a great extent, which has enabled them to offer for sale a most extensive and elegant ASSORTMENT of DRAWING ROOM and other STOVES, calculated either for the mansion or the cottage, of the most superior workmanship and design to any house in the kingdom. Fenders, fire irons, and kitchen ranges on the most improved principles, and every description of furnishing ironmongery, a saving of full 30 per cent. for the approaching season. A large assortment of patent warm air stoves, ascending or descending flues, adapted for halls, offices, warehouses, and shops. Also the admirable economical patent French table lamps, in the greatest variety, diffusing a light equal to 6 wax candles, from 28s. upwards. Manufacturers of every article of fence work for parks, balconies, verandas, entrance gates, hurdles, &c., and from the extensive machinery and convenience of their premises, including the late reduction of iron, they are enabled now to offer the above considerably under in price to any house in the kingdom. Orders of any magnitude executed with promptness, by addressing a line to Crundall and Hallen, Roebuck Iron Foundry and Stove Grate Manufactory, Great Dover-road, Southwark.—N. B. Every description of castings made to order or model. Prompt payment, and no abatement.

FASHION, ELEGANCE, and ECONOMY COMBINED. Oxford-House, Furniture Magazine, 376, near Exeter Change, Strand. A clear saving of £25 per cent.—The Upholsterers and Cabinet Makers' Company, established May, 1821, is the only manufacturing depot in the Kingdom, where the public are allowed to select their own woods of every description, and inspect the progress of completion, thus preventing the possibility of their being deceived by the use of unseasoned coarse materials and bad workmanship. The Public are also invited to view the choice stock of Rose, Zebra, King, and other scarce woods suited to the purposes of Manufacture, and prepared for the choice of purchasers. This establishment has, since its commencement, received the sanction and support of some of the first characters in the kingdom; and the conductors will have the greatest pleasure in referring to their numerous patrons for the honour and probity of their transactions. A draftsman of taste and experience is attached to the concern, and the newest designs of modern elegant furniture always ready for inspection. The conductors beg leave to add, that their extensive means affords them facilities in the economical dispatch of orders, which no private manufacturer can equal. In proof of their determination to deserve support, they very respectfully submit the following list of low prices:—

IMPERIAL PARLIAMENT.

HOUSE OF LORDS.

Monday, Feb. 6.

The Earl of LIVERPOOL moved that a copy of the correspondence between the First Lord of the Treasury and the Chancellor of the Exchequer, and between the Chancellor of the Exchequer and the Governor and Deputy-Governor of the Bank of England, relative to the Charter of that body, be laid on the table. It was necessary that their Lordships should be in possession of these documents, as, if he continued in the same opinion which he had formed on the subject, one of the measures in contemplation, in regard to the circulating medium of the country, might originate in that House.—The motion was then agreed to.

The Earl of CARNARVON begged leave to ask the Noble Lord at the head of the Treasury whether it was the intention of his Majesty's Ministers to move for the appointment of a Select Committee to inquire into the present distress, as connected with the state of the circulating medium? If his Majesty's Ministers had no such intention, he would probably move for the appointment of a Committee to take that subject into consideration.

The Earl of LIVERPOOL had no hesitation in declaring, that his Majesty's Ministers had no such intention.—Adjourned.

Tuesday, Feb. 7.

The Bishop of CHESTER presented a petition from the silk weavers of Macclesfield, praying for relief.—Adjourned.

Thursday, Feb. 9.

The Marquis of LANSDOWNE inquired how far the suggestions contained in the Report of the Commissioners appointed last year to inquire into the state of Ireland, had been carried into effect by his Majesty's Ministers?

The Earl of LIVERPOOL replied, that the first recommendation of the Report demonstrated the necessity of an alteration in the law of landlord and tenant. The subject was involved in serious difficulties; and even after they had been conquered, others arose which occasioned delay. A Bill had been prepared, however, and would in a short time be laid before Parliament. On several other points Bills were also in a state of preparation; but on the great question of Edueation no progress has yet been made, although hopes were still entertained, that the experiment recommended by the Commissioners would have a fair trial. The Act authorising a commutation of tithes, he declared to have done immense good, and to have been already carried into full operation in more than one-fourth of all the parishes in Ireland.

THE CURRENCY.

The Marquis of LANSDOWNE moved the order of the day, and took an able and very comprehensive view of the system of our national currency, as it has been, is, and ought to be, in which he expressed his entire approbation of the measures intended to be proposed by his Majesty's Ministers. He then moved for various returns respecting the issues of the Bank, those of country bankers, the number of bankruptcies, and the charters granted to banking establishments, all of which were cheerfully conceded by the Earl of Liverpool. That Noble Earl then put off the introduction of the Bank Charter alteration Bill till Monday next.

Lord LIVERPOOL said he concurred with the Noble Marquis in almost every thing he had said, and his chief object in rising was to state the grounds of his agreement. So long as the Bank of England continued under restrictions, it was not only the right, but the duty of Parliament to require an account of the issues from time to time. But the restrictions were now at an end. The Bank was no longer, in that respect, under their controul, and, therefore, Parliament had not a right to call for the account, as formerly. But while he questioned the right of Parliament to call for it directly, there was a less direct way of which they could, with propriety, avail themselves, and that was, by calling on the Stamp Office for a return of the number of stamps. Though he agreed to the present motion, he did not consider it a motion of course, but one justified and called for by the occasion, because it was connected with a measure about to be submitted to the consideration of Parliament, with the consent of the Bank itself. He thought, under those circumstances, Parliament had a right to say we want this information, and that the Bank would not be justified in refusing it. At the same time, it afforded him much pleasure to say that such was not the disposition of the Bank. On the contrary, they had come forward in the handsomest manner, and wished to conceal nothing that could be communicated without injury. With respect to the other subject, he could not, nor did he wish to conceal from himself the deep responsibility in which he was committed; hut Government had thought it best to prevent the stamping of the one and two pound notes, which was not done before notice was given to Parliament of the intention to bring in a bill for that purpose. It was that the object might not be defeated while the measure was in progress through the house, that his Majesty's Government had adopted the proceeding of which the Noble Marquis complained.

The Earl of LAUDENDALE denied that the issues of small notes had the effect of driving the metallic currency out of the country. The distress, in his opinion, was not occasioned by the currency so much as by the spirit of extravagant speculation which had lately prevailed throughout the country.

The Earl of CARNARVON was of opinion, that by reducing the 1l. and 2l. notes, much injury would be occasioned to agriculturists and to petty traders.

The Marquis of Lansdown and the Earl of Liverpool made a few remarks in explanation. The motion was agreed to.

The Earl of LIVERPOOL stated, that it was his intention not to bring forward the bill for altering the charter of the Bank of England to-morrow, agreeably to the notice he had given; but to defer it till Monday next, when, conformably to the courtesy observed in the House, the bill might be read a first time, and be printed: and the debate might take place on the following Friday (17th inst.), for which day he would move that their lordships should be summoned.—Adjourned.

Friday, Feb. 10.

Lord GIFFORD stated, that his Majesty had been graciously pleased to allow a pension of 2,000l. to Henry Cowper, Esq. late Clerk Assistant to Parliament, and to order measures to be immediately taken to assure the said sum to that Gentleman.

Mr. Rose read the Patent, appointing William Courtenay, Esq. successor to Mr. Henry Cowper.

The Earl of LAUDERDALE gave notice of his intention to move for further Documents and Returns respecting the circulation of Bank Notes. The Noble Earl at the same time expressed his approbation of the conduct of the Bank Directors.

The same Noble Earl also adverted to the observations made yesterday in that House, on the subject of an order given by his Majesty's Government not to stamp any more 1l. and 2l. notes. The question he had then then to address to a Noble Lord, one of his Majesty's Ministers, was one of considerable importance to that part of the kingdom with which he was connected.—There was a Stamp Office in Scotland, and he wished to know whether notice had been given to that office not to stamp notes of that country?

Lord BEXLEY said, in the absence of the First Lord of the Treasury, he could give the Noble Earl an answer. Circumstances had happened which brought to his knowledge the fact which the Noble Earl was desirous of knowing. No notice had been sent to Dublin or Edinburgh not to stamp notes. The order given on the subject only applied to country notes of English circulation.

Wednesday, Feb. 8.

Mr. CALCRAFT, seeing the Hon. Gentleman (Mr. Herries) in his place, wished to ask him a question on a subject, which, in his opinion, involved as great a stretch of authority as had ever been attempted by any government. He understood that, of its own authority, Government was now taking upon itself to refuse the issue of any stamps for one and two pound country notes. He wished to know if such refusal at the Stamp-office had been authorised by Government?

Mr. HERRIES said it was perfectly true that the Government had taken upon itself to refuse stamps for one and two pound country notes. It had been imagined that the understanding was general which had taken place a few nights since upon the subject of the local paper; and that, if necessary, a short Bill might have been brought in to provide for exigencies, until the plan of the Chancellor of the Exchequer was regularly stated. As the matter, however, was to come on so soon as Friday, Government had deemed it expedient at once to take upon itself the responsibility of refusing any further stamps for the country small notes; and the necessity of such a repeal would be obvious, to prevent the issue of very large quantities, which would, no doubt, have been called for in the interim.

Mr. CALCRAFT expressed himself by no means satisfied with the answer of the Hon. Secretary. It was the first time in the course of his parliamentary practice that he had known Government take upon itself such a responsibility, under such circumstances; and this was done, too, without even taking the opinion of the law officers of the Crown upon the legality. If the exigency was so pressing, in his opinion a short Bill ought to have been brought in; and the forms of the House might have been dispensed with, as they had been before. For himself, he thought the course most unjustifiable, and took it to be one which would expose the promoters to actions of damages, if they were not hereafter protected.

Thursday, Feb. 9.

Petitions were presented from Newport, for the abolition of Negro Slavery; and from New Sarum, to the same effect; also two petitions from Newbury, in Berkshire, against the importation of French silks.

Mr. Hume moved for returns of the number of country banks which have respectively become bankrupts since the year 1816—the names and number of partners in each—amount of debts proved—and dividends paid.

Mr. Ellice also moved for a return of Bank of England notes in circulation on the Saturday of every week, from the 5th of April 1825, to the 4th of February 1826. The motions were agreed to in both houses.

Sir THOMAS LETHBRIDGE presented a petition from the Silk-throwsters of some parish in Somerset, against the admission of French silks.

Mr. ROBERTSON was astonished at the apathy of the house at the approach of this measure for admitting foreign silks at 30 per cent. or that any one should suppose that wrought silks could be produced as cheap here as in France. With respect to the silks of India, it must be well known that they could be imported so that, with the duty paid on them, they would cost less than the silks of the English manufacturer would cost here on putting them into the loom. If the measure of free trade in silk were persevered in, they would immediately extinguish a branch of national industry, which had been fostered for ages past in this country. It was utterly impossible that they could compete with French silks. The very material used by the French manufacturer would secure him the advantage. It was an article of a different, and of a higher quality than that used by the English. It was considered of such importance by the French, that they would not suffer any of it to go out of the kingdom. While they were endeavouring to let in the silks of France to the people of this country, the prevailing taste and fashion ran but too much already in favour of the foreign articles. They were literally throwing away the advantage which had been secured to this interest by the care of their forefathers. With a load of debt, hanging like a mill-stone around the neck of the country, which burden must be supported, were they rational men who could propose a competition with a people whose debt was almost no burden at all? Some of the members ought to step forward and insist on the suspension of such a project, until a complete discussion should have been allowed. How was the country to get out of its present difficulties and distresses, unless means were found to stimulate its industry? The population were without means or money to buy the fabrics of the country, yet Ministers persisted in subjecting the manufacturers to the competition of cheaper markets.—The petition was brought up, and ordered to be printed.

Mr. DENISON moved that certain noblemen should be requested to attend at the bar of the house, whose evidence was deemed necessary to the defence of Mr. Kenrick.

The SPEAKER pointed out the propriety of waiting to see whether or not the house could entertain the charge, a point which was not yet determined.—The motion was postponed till Tuesday next.

Mr. BARING presented a petition from 2,000 persons engaged in the silk trade in Taunton, against the introduction of French silks, which deserved the deep and serious consideration of the House and of Ministers. The subject, as he hoped, would undergo discussion at an early period, seeing that hundreds of thousands of people anticipated direct ruin and starvation from the importation of foreign silks. It was not now the time for him to go into that discussion, though he could not but remark, that it would be very desirable if the President of the Board of Trade could contrive to be in his place during that portion of the day when petitions of this nature were sure to come on, at least for many days to come. He hoped at any rate to see the question set at rest. The conviction on his own mind was settled long ago. What he wished to see was, whether or no the House were determined to support Ministers in their desperate resolution. They all knew that great anxiety existed among the silk manufacturers, and that great hopes were entertained by them that the House would defend them against the ruin which awaited them from the plan pursued by Government. He had no decided confidence in that source of relief when he recollected how his own objections to the measure had fared two years ago. But the public mind should be set at rest. The master silk-weavers could not find any employment for their people until their own fate was known. Whether they were right or wrong, they were unanimous in their opinion. They all said, that if French silk goods were let in, there was no chance of selling a single yard of English silk. He could not say that he would approve of hearing them in a Committee, because of the delay which would follow. Nor did he hope—he rather hoped that they would not—if the Committee were allowed, be able to make out the case for which they pledged themselves, that it was impossible for the English manufacture of silks to bear the competition of a free trade. The case which they had made out to him had convinced his own mind, and left it without the shadow of a doubt. Still the question ought to be set at rest, and it must be set at rest by a Bill. The conduct of Government had justified a suspicion that they would not scruple to take liberties with the law. The late order sent to prevent the issuing of stamps from the Stamp-office was a direct violation of the existing law. He was as anxious as any man to get rid of the one and two pound notes, but he wished to see them abolished gradually, and by legal means. The conduct of Ministers might be justifiable, but they should have paid that reasonable and proper respect to the Legislature, to state the urgency of the occasion which induced them to contravene the existing law, and not leave it to the accidental explanation of the Secretary of the Treasury. He had to complain of a similar infraction with respect to the silk laws. A duty of 7s. 6d. a pound had been laid upon thrown silk.

Mr. HUSKISSON wished to excuse himself for not being present sooner, according to the wishes expressed by his Hon. Friend, the Member for Taunton. His only apology was, that he had not been absent for his own convenience, but for the discharge of the duties of that office which he so unworthily filled, and from which he had repaired to the House with the least possible loss of time. He knew that this apology was inadequate to the occasion, but it was the best he had to offer. As to the order of the Treasury, sent down to lower the duty on thrown silk, it was a mistake to state it as an act done without authority from Parliament. The Board of Trade having satisfied themselves that five shillings was a sufficient protection, they had directed so much of the duty to be taken, and that bonds should be given for the excess of 2s. 6d. per pound, should Parliament not concur with the Government. The House would see at once that the whole of the duty was secured to to the public, should Parliament think proper to exact it, and that ministers had by no means assumed an independent control or a dispensing power over it. The derangements in the trade and currency of the country, he deeply regretted. He trusted, if the views and conduct of ministers were to be called in question, it would be done upon regular motion and by a fair discusion of the merits of those plans which Parliament had thought fit, on the recommendation of Government, to adopt. He was not afraid, on these conditions, to meet his Hon. Friend, even upon this alarming subject of the silk trade.

Mr. DAVENPORT felt deeply on this subject, and took the opportunity of imploring ministers to take the subject again into their serious consideration. He gave them credit for their intentions—he did not blame any one. But the consequences of those measures were just such as two years ago he said they would be. He had clearly foretold to the House—open the ports of England to foreign silks, and the home manufacturer must be ruined. In his neighbourhood, thousands were suffering the most extreme distress; they were chiefly supported by the warrant of the civil Magistrate.

Sir T. LETHBRIDGE wished to reply to what fell from the Hon. Member for Taunton, who had mistaken his expressions, both as to the time and the meaning in which they were spoken. It was not on a petition which he had presented, but in the course of the observations which were made on the report of the address that he had stated that which he believed still to be perfectly correct—that the great body of the empire took a more chaste view of the corn question than before. That was the impression which had been given to his mind by conversing with the manufacturers; they did not object to the present prices of provisions, but to the probability of their trade being destroyed. He had never intended to state that the manufacturers did not complain of the prices of provisions, especially in their present state of employment. But provisions had been at moderate prices for some time past—high enough, he admitted, but not immoderately high. He found no direct complaint on the subject of prices of provisions among the silk manufacturers. Their distress was great, and must be felt severely at any prices. Yet, to be candid, he could not hut look upon this alteration of the silk trade as an outwork to a similar alteration in the corn law, which if not directly touched, was so by implication and with a side-wind, tending at no distant period to an open trade in corn. If the distress reeulting to the manufacturers from this first attempt should require it, the House might be called upon to consider of a similar alteration in the corn trade. He thought that if the intentions of Government bore that way, the more manly and proper course would have been to begin with the corn trade. (Loud cries of "Hear, hear." For his own part, then, and on every occasion, he must oppose any proposition like that of a free trade of corn. As long as the national debt remained, no such thing could be listened to. When the time should come for discussion, and it was in his opinion likely to be so soon, he would undertake to show that the country could not support that competition and its present burdens together. He would be as glad as any man to see low prices, but high priees must be; agriculture could not go on without; and at all events, the prices must be kept up by an import duty, so as to amount to an absolute prohibition, so long as the interest of the national debt had to be paid. Such was the truth, and it was in vain to veil it from their minds.

Mr. ELLICE said that the Hon. Bart. was certainly right in considering this measure as the out-work of an attack on the Corn Laws; and in both plans Government, he feared, would be found to be only too resolute. A great deal of information had reached him from persons who had the best continental intelligence, that unless there was a very great improvement in machinery, and a very great reduction in the price of corn, for the surer maintenance of the people, there was a moral certainty that they could not proceed with this bill, without throwing out of employment the great mass of people engaged in the trade.

Mr. BARING only wished to make a single explanation, and it was to correct a misconception of his Right Hon. Friend. He (Mr. Baring) never had encouraged this particular measure respecting silk, but quite the contrary, for he was almost the only person who had raised his voice against it from the outset. He was old enough to know, that those measures were not always the best and wisest which received the readiest acquiescence of that House.

Mr. HUSKISSON explained, that he never intended to intimate that his Hon. Friend had supported this particular measure, for had he done so he would have heen incorrect.

The petition from Taunton was then laid on the table, and ordered to be printed.

Mr. BARING wished to take this opportunity of putting a question to his Right Hon. Friend opposite. He understood, that a gentleman had lately returned from the Continent, who had been abroad during the whole of last year, under instructions from his Majesty's Government to collect information on the state of foreign corn. He was anxious to know if that gentleman had made any report upon the object of his mission, and if so, whether and when it would be presented?

Mr. HUSKISSON had no difficulty in stating, that the individual alluded to had been sent from this country with instructions from government, to obtain information respecting the corn trade of those countries in Europe from which England imported grain.

Mr. CALCRAFT again referred to the subject of the stoppage of stamps to county notes of 1l. and 2l. Now with respect to the protection of silk throwsters, the Government had secured themselves; but in this instance he wished to know what security they had for this measure.

The CHANCELLOR of the EXCHEQUER said, the Government had no other resource. It might perhaps be necessary afterwards to pass some Acts of Indemnity against the claims of those individuals whose interests might have been injured by the stoppage complained of, but that was a measure which, in the opinion of all parties, was expedient at the time.

Friday, Feb. 10.

The CHANCELLOR of the EXCHEQUER moved, that the House resolve into a Committee on the Bank Charter and Promissory Notes Acts.

Lord FOLKSTONE thought the Chancellor of the Exchequer was stealing a march on them; it was assuming that the House had already agreed to entertain the plans. They ought to be detailed previously to the Speaker leaving the Chair; then the House could vote on the propriety of entertaining them. There was something absurd in the proposed proceeding; his was more than a technical objection.

The CHANCELLOR of the EXCHEQUER said, he had no desire to steal a march on the House; and he was not aware that he was pursuing any other than the usual course; besides, he had not understood, by any observation that had fallen, that there was any determination to resist all consideration of the Acts. And the course he proposed was the most convenient, for in a Committee he could answer questions that might be put on his statements.

The House then (at six o'clock) resolved itself into the Committee.

The CHANCELLOR of the EXCHEQUER said, he was fully aware of the importance of the question, and the nature of the opposition to which he should be exposed, also of misrepresentation to which he might be subjected. He should have to address the House at great length. He thought the best interest, if not the safety of the country, required that these matters should be at once considered; they had been blamed for expressing their sentiments so early; but if they had been silent, would there have been silence elsewhere? He thought, had they suffered one half hour to elapse after the Address, without adverting to the subject, they should have been unmindful of their duty. However, they must not apply to themselves the belief that they could supply a perfect remedy against what might be termed periodical fluctuations. He knew it might be said, what was the use of his measure, if the evil were wholly beyond Parliamentary remedy? He was prepared for such objection; but in all countries of which they knew any thing, where there were civilization and refinement, and where there was a paper and metallic currency, fluctuations resulted from the very nature of things. Capital, too, was likely to be applied in a peculiar degree to a special branch of national industry, and that was calculated to produce excessive application of capital in one direction; and then, too, they had to contend with the revolutions of seasons, trades, &c. These fluctuations were more likely to result where there was paper mixed with the metallic currency, in a country such as their own. And those fluctuations might be aggravated, not caused, by such state of the currency. When they existed, they might be considerably aggravated by the small notes; nay, one banker had gone so far as to declare such small notes a nuisance. It had an inevitable tendency to occasion excessive issues of paper to effect the exchange, and thus drive the gold out of the country. It would retard the measure of 1819, which was an effort to get back to the old state of currency, and yet, because they wanted to get back to such old state of things, not to introduce any thing new, they were to be denounced as a new sect of political economists, as persons who wished to pull their own house about their ears. They were the innovators who wished to prevent such old state of things being restored. The holders of the 1l. and 2l. notes were generally of the poorer elasses, and the most likely to create runs and panics on any well founded or ill founded rumour. The Bankers would lose the profits on those notes, but that he thought would not affect them; they in reality were likely to be affected by the excessive issues of banks of not the most solid character. The superior banks, therefore, were interested in putting out of circulation such small notes, calculated as they were to create storms which might involve the solid bankers amidst the wrecks. The small notes had always been found of dangerous and ruinous tendency. When the restoration of cash payments was discussed in 1819, the Committee did not defend the small notes; on the contrary, the Bill provided for the discontinuance of the small notes, two years after the restoration of cash payments, namely, in 1825. He regretted the Bill of 1822 allowing the small notes. —(Hear.) By that Bill they were to be continued till 1833; and what was it that he was proposing? To return at a sooner period than 1833 to the system of the Act of 1819. At all events the small notes must cease in 1833. But one Hon. Member had said, that if the small notes ceased, the rents could not be paid; if the argument were good, it was good against even repealing the 1l. and 2l. notes. He thought the alarms visionary; but he would speak as a landed gentleman, and rather than approve their continuance, he would expose himself to considerable inconvenience. Towards carrying into effect the plan of 1819, since that period there had been coined at the Mint 25,267,000 sovereigns. In three years (before 1823) the Bank had prepared 15,000,000*l.* sovereigns. He admitted there was some pressure in 1822.—(Hear, hear!)—but the pressure was less than in preceding years. There was not dismay in 1822; on the contrary, there was progressive improvement. He did not think there was that ground for apprehension, which some entertained, in substituting gold for 1l. and 2l. notes. It must be recollected that the situation was now different than in 1819; there was now gold out to the extent of 17,000,000*l.* and more than seven and a half millions had been exported, of which one million had returned. That would leave a balance of nineteen millions, but he took the amount out, or available, was seventeen millions sovereigns. Then there was a pretty good basis to begin with. As to the amount to be supplied, by the withdrawing of small notes, he took the amount at about 6,000,000l. That amount might have been current, but there was no such amount out now. After the Bristol affair, and the demand for gold, there was a good deal of caution. Doubtlessly many of those small notes were therefore withdrawn, or issued with very great caution; they saw Banks breaking and alarm spreading, and therefore they contracted the issue of the small notes, knowing if there were any run, these notes would be the most likely to be sent in. He took the amount now out at about 4,000,000l.; and that would be the vacuum to be supplied in the next three years. Therefore, very far from there being any reason to apprehend such panics as some anticipated. It was difficult—but were they not in a difficulty? They were, and they must get out of it, and prohibit its recurrence if possible. They must get out of the Sea and Chaos—they must revert to right principles, and if they would not stand the trial, they were not worth a farthing. He did not mean to say that their difficulties were at an end—but he did not think they were likely to last so long as some imagined. The paper issued by the Bank of England in 1824 and 1825 was undoubtedly increased: an increase of one million and a half as compared with 1823. The increase was to be partly charged with those effects which had been issued; but had such been the only paper issue, he did not mean that the ruinous effects would have been witnessed. The arrangements about the four and half per cents., and the dead weight with the Bank might have tended to increase the paper; but he thought such arrangement was not chargeable with blame. He, however, hoped they would consider the main difficulties.—(Cries of hear, hear, hear.) He had gone at length, because his principles were to be combatted; but now he should detail his plan for withdrawing the small notes. One plan was to limit the time, and the other was to refuse to stamp other notes; but to leave a power to stamp, would only have postponed the difficulty; therefore, he thought the best course was, that no new notes should be stamped, and those out to cease to circulate at the end of three years. He should conclude with moving resolutions to such effect for all notes under 5*l.* to continue till February 1829. In Scotland and Ireland small notes had been long allowed to circulate without restriction, but he could not see why the law should be different in any part of the United Kingdom, though it might be imprudent to attempt to carry the measure into effect in all parts of the kingdom at the same time. He would only now advert to the apprehension entertained that the extinction of small notes would injure the landed interest. He thought that interest would be the most benefitted by the measure. He would ask the country gentlemen what was their feelings when they saw their tenants running with dismay with their 1l. notes to any country bank. Could they avoid feeling that their rents were in jeopardy.—(Hear, hear, hear!) The establishment of banks on the principle contemplated would, he thought, be productive of the greatest advantage. It was true there were but few private banks at present with six partners, but though the number six might be thought too great for secresy, it did not follow that it might not be adopted for security. In Ireland this principle had been extensively acted on with the best effect. He thought, the apprehension entertained on behalf of the present solid banks was unfounded; but he had no objection to fix the fifth of July as the earliest period at which those banks should issue their notes. The bill for the purpose it was thought expedient should originate in the other House; but if this House should refuse its consent, he thought they would refuse to effect a great good, and give encouragement to imprudent speculations, which it was the duty of Parliament to endeavour to counteract. He thought it was the duty of Parliament not to be terrified by the danger, but to apply a strong and decisive remedy. The difficulties of executing the plan were immensely overrated; for it was the law that had placed country banks in difficulty; and the country, he was satisfied, were disposed to place confidence in their honour and respectability.—(Hear, hear.) The Right Hon. Gentleman concluded by moving, that no bank notes for 1l. dated previous to the 5th of January, 1826, should circulate after 5th Feb. 1829.

Mr. BARING observed, that there was nothing in the Resolution to prevent the issuing of new one pound notes between this and the year 1829. If there was any thing consolatory in the question, it was the absence of all party feeling on the subject both in the House and out of the House.—(Hear.)—Though if ever there were topics capable of being used for party purposes, they were those growing out of the present state of our commercial system. —If any thing could have aggravated the painful feelings of the people, it was the paper sent by his Majesty's Ministers to the Governor of the Bank of England, stating that the distress had now subsided. It shewed that they were totally ignorant of the state of the country. The measure proposed by the Right Hon. Gentleman was mere milk and water—it provided no adequate remedy for the evils that at present oppressed the country.—The state of the country at present was that of a house on fire, which must he extinguished before repair could be thought of. The resources of the Bank were at present choaked by its connection with Government. The dead weight was one of the most absurd schemes of any Government—certainly a better name than dead weight could not be given it.—(Hear.) The Bank also advanced five millions and a half to Government to pay the dividends, in addition to which they held seven millions of Exchequer bills, besides eight millions of dead weight and two millions on account of converting the five into four per cents., making two-and-twenty millions and a half in advance on account of Government, besides which they had lent a million and a half on mortgage; thus making an unconvertible stock of twenty-four millions—for Government in time of peace, had no pressure; to overload the Bank in this manner was the most clumsy financial arrangement ever made by any Government. One of the first measures should be to put the Bank at ease with respect to its advances to Government. He saw no reason to suppose that the present distress would be more than temporary; but he thought it was mainly produced by the situation of the Bank with respect to its advances, which brought the Bank itself into danger. The Government had so completely choaked the Bank as to be incapable of entering into a war, which the most peaceable Government and people might be forced into. The power of this country consisted in money, and it was absurd to paralyze her resources, and suppose she could retain her power. Before they came to the conclusion that the present banking system was bad, they should give it fair play, by releasing the Bank of England from the weight Government had laid on it. One-fourth of the late difficulties might be real distress, but three-fourths were panic, arising principally from the state of the Bank with Government. A question was made whether we were capable of supporting a metallic currency? He thought that we were, under the present banking institutions of the country, if the Bank of England was set free from its load. He thought a rival bank in the metropolis would augment our confusion; but if the other establishments could be strengthened, it would be of great advantage. He thought, however, that country gentlemen, who engaged in banking on the intended new system, would be guilty of egregious folly —(Hear.) If, indeed, they were allowed to become liable for a fixed amount of capital, many would be willing to engage in them. Making silver as well as gold a legal tender, which was the case in every other country in the world, would greatly add to the security of our banking system. With a gold currency we were obliged to put a stop to the American war, to prevent the Bank stopping payment. We were not able to put a stop to the French war, and therefore the Bank was obliged to stop. This was the only country in Europe that found any difficulty in maintaining its metallic currency. In France gold and silver went on together as standards with perfect harmony. The plan he would adopt would be to call in the crown pieces and issue new, which should be the exact fourth part of a pound; the smaller silver to remain as at present. This would not injure the circulation of small coin in the least; but would greatly assist the Bank operations. Gold goes out of the country faster than silver would. Formerly there was a risk in sending coin out of the country, now it was legal, from its excellent quality, it was sent out in large quantities. The Chancellor of the Exchequer on the first night estiuated the small notes in circulation at eight millions, now at six millions, and at four millions, to be taken out of circulation: but he was not aware of the distress the taking that sum out of circulation would produce in the country. The first object should be to relieve the distress, and then to return to sound principles as soon as possible. What he would recommend was, that the thing should be let alone for another year—(hear, hear)—and not apply the screw to aggravate the present distress, but wait a little, when the people would find out that there was capital, and credit, and confidence in this country sufficient for all purposes. He would then recommend the establishment of joint stock banks, and that the Bank of England should be relieved from its present heavy advances to Government, which would soon restore the public confidence.—(Hear, hear.)

Lord FOLKSTONE said, the Chancellor of the Exchequer appeared to be not at all sufficiently impressed with the importance of the subject. He did not appear to apprehend any inquiry to agriculture from the measure he proposed; but experience shewed that the most serious injury was to be apprehended.—From the time of passing the Act for the return to cash payments, agricultural produce continued to decline in price in consequence of the Bank of England and the Country Banks diminishing their issues to prepare for that result, and it was to relieve that great distress that the Bill passed in 1822, for allowing the issue of small notes after the resumption of cash payments. That bill had produced the desired effect, and agricultural produce had ever since continued to advance. Was it, therefore, to be supposed that the measure now proposed would not again reduce it to the same state of distress from which it had so lately emerged. Nothing was more to be deprecated than those frequent changes of system which led to such revulsions in the state of property, as left every man in a state of uncertainty on that important point. One thing also required the most serious consideration of the House. During all these changes the poor rate had continued to increase, thereby proving that the state of the labouring portion of the community was continually growing worse. He thought, with such facts before them, the House should pause before they ventured on another change of system, the result of which would probably be again to produce all the distress to the landed interest, from which they were relieved by the Bill of 1822, which it was now intended to repeal.

Mr. MABERLY, jun. denied that over issues of paper had produced the fluctuations, as the Exchange had established; the mischiefs had resulted from over-trading.

Mr. HUSKISSON defended the resolution. The evils had in a great degree arisen from a panic in the money, not in the commercial market, and the object was to guard against its recurrence.

Shortly before one o'clock Mr. Canning moved the adjournment of the debate, and it was accordingly adjourned to Monday.

The Countess of Essex's sixth Quadrille Party for the season took place on Thursday evening last, and was most numerously attended by all the rank and fashion now in town. The celebrated set of Quadrilles in which the air of "Cherry ripe" is introduced was delightfully performed by Weippert's band, who were obliged to repeat it three times during the evening. The company did not separate until a very late hour.

The Diorama is about to re-open with two new Pictures of great variety and interest. One of them represents the interior of Rosslyn Abbey, the other a view of the town and environs of Rouen. The latter will give, among other effects of light and shade, a perfect representation of the appearance and disappearance of a rainbow, with its reflection in the sky and on the river.

THE AGE.

LONDON, FEBRUARY 12.

PARLIAMENT.

The Parliamentary proceedings have not yet advanced beyond notices of motions and calls for papers. The Marquis of LANSDOWN on Thursday, after a long speech on the banking system, moved for a series of returns on the subject. They were allowed by Lord LIVERPOOL, who spoke briefly, but, as he always does, manfully and to the point; and commented upon by Lord ELLENBOROUGH, whose general style of oratory must be described in other words. Lord LAUDERDALE'S opinions too were given at length, but we have had them in so long a succession of pamphlets, that our readers will not desire to have them again. When the subject shall come "fully before the House," as Mr. HUSKISSON says, then we shall be prepared with an opinion. In the mean time Stocks tremble, the workmen are breaking up from their idle shops day by day, and the generous experiment of assisting French weavers at the infinite risk of British trade, and of more than trade, is advancing to its completion. We are no alarmists, no croakers, no clamourers against Government, but its foremost supporters; nevertheless we cordially thank our stars that we are not Spital-fields weavers, nor glovers, nor cotton-spinners, nor any thing that can be made a matter of experiment, however ingenious; that our families cannot be made to administer to "free trade," and that no perfectly well-disposed bungler can set about making us better than well. The Bank Charter and Small Note Act, introduced by the CHANCELLOR of the EXCHEQUER on Friday, will be commented upon at the termination of the debate.

The cold and equivocal professions of loyalty offered to their KING, and the undisguised and indecent invective poured out upon his Brother and Heir Presumptive by the leading Orators of the Popish Parliament, are alarmingly contrasted by the enthusiastic devotion and unlimited obedience which they practise, if they do not avow, towards their spiritual Sovereign and his chosen Vicegerents, the Romish Hierarchy of Ireland —in vain will O'CONNELL, SHIEL, and the who follow in their train, impair their lungs, and exhaust their vocabularies, in reiterating their disclaimers of a divided allegiance; their morbid sensibility marks their latent unsoundness, and the people of England will require something more than simple assertion to satisfy them on a point of vital importance. The security they have a right to expect must be direct, explicit, and (if it may be so expressed) tangible. As long as Jesuitical equivocations and mental reservations continue (as unhappily they have for ages) to characterize the professors of the Romish faith, so long must professions utterly at variance with practical experience be received with the most guarded caution.

It is the boast of the Romanists that the principles of their Church are infallible, her practice immutable—but there will be little difficulty in shewing, not by gratuitous assertion, but by the stubborn evidence of historical facts, that her principles are those of encroachment, and her practice of interference, in the temporal affairs of every State, weak enough to permit it. Our own history affords many memorable instances —the factious obstinacy and aspiring ambition of a BECKET and a LANGTON involved their Sovereign and their country in misery and anarchy, and Popish predominance was consummated, when an anointed Monarch of England placed his Crown at the feet of the Papal Legate, and was only permitted to resume it as the sworn vassal of the Holy See, while the successive names of BEAUFORT, MORTON, WOOLSEY, POLE, GARDINE and BONNER, prove that aspiring ambition and sanguinary zeal continued to characterize the Roman hierarchy to the last hour of its ascendancy in England.

It will be said that these are obsolete instances, and at variance with the spirit of an enlightened age; but it is impossible to be satisfied with such declamation, while we hear the immutability and infallibility of Rome pompously insisted on, when the most insidious of her religious orders has been restored to all its pristine vigour, and when the most furious bigotry openly displays itself. In short, let the Catholic Jesuit remain as he is until (to use the words of Archbishop LAUD on another occasion) Rome be other than she is!

O'CONNELL'S "Grand Catholic Dinner," for which the whole magnificence of popish faction was to have been compiled from the ends of the earth, has turned out a burlesque. No one could have doubted it. But it could not have been presumed, among the turns of the day, that O'CONNELL would turn out the only individual who kept his name from perishing among the low fooleries and vulgar squabbles of his mob—the Newspaper writers. This, however, he did. He determined, as old BECKFORD once said to the Whigs, that "they should eat none of his soup." The doors were shut accordingly, and by a lamentable, but, as it appears, unexpected consequence, there was no account given of the harangues. We think that this might have been calculated upon. But it has set the whole party frantic for the loss of their eloquence. O'CONNELL is suddenly wrathful, and declares that he never desires to figure as a dinner orator again; nay commands, that since his speeches have been of late given "with much brevity," he may be printed no more! SHIEL is more brisk and ebullient in his indignation, but consoles himself with publishing his speech from a private copy. LAWLESS is the wildest in his woe; and goes about crying over so much eloquence, "Lost, lost, lost," as he phrases it, to this age and all ages to come. The wits call him the "Goblin Page:"—

"And still his withered arms he tost,
And screamed and shouted, Lost, lost, lost!"

Our inexhaustible friend Sir WILLIAM CURTIS, we rejoice to hear, is getting round again. We don't mean this as a joke on his person, but as a reference to his health, and with his health his humour and spirits are reviving. A gentleman was mentioning the other day to Sir WILLIAM the great attraction of the Pilot at the Adelphi, and asked the Baronet if he could tell him what dialect REEVE speaks as the "genuine Yankee," whether Boston, New York, or Philadelphia? when Sir WILLIAM replied, "I presume, from the attraction of the piece, it must be, Fill Adelphi."

We are staunch friends of the Established Church. We rejoice in its weight in the National Councils, its rank in public society, and its influence on the popular mind. We see no reason why a thousand a year, or ten times the sum, should not be as respectably and usefully, nay, as rightfully, lodged in the hands of a learned and pious man, rising from rank to rank by his personal accomplishments and virtues, as in the hereditary hands of any fox-hunting Squire in the land. It is the true boast of England, that by her Constitution there is no gate shut upon ability and diligence. And until some reason can be shewn why the colour of a man's coat should disable his talent or degrade his virtue, we should rejoice in the field of honour opened in the establishment. But the Church can have no national utility unless it retain the national respect —all petty bickerings about petty privileges, even though they should be matter of right—all irritation, and more peculiarly all avidity for straining a point of "filthy lucre," ought to be deprecated and shrunk from, as fatal to her true purposes, and unquestionably opposite to her acknowledged principles.

What then are we to think of the degrading and scandalous dispute that figures in the Newspapers from week to week between the RECTOR of St. Olave's and his parishioners! Which party may be in the right, it is not for us to settle—but the dispute is in the wrong. The RECTOR has raised his dues and claims to 2,100l. a year—the parishioners cry out on this extortion, and offer him 1,800l. What if the RECTOR have law on his side, and can wring the difference from them by the disastrous help of writs and attorneys! Are those to be the habitual medium between a Christian pastor and his flock? What if his Vestry know that this paltry 300l. is his lawful claim, and are yet determined to battle it out. On whose side ought concession to begin? We have no hesitation about the matter. But would this concession pauperize the worthy RECTOR! Is not 1,800l. a year a magnificent income, aye, even a most prodigious comparative recompense for all the services which the worthy RECTOR is called on to perform? The parishioners see the same services performed within a street of them for a fourth part of the sum, and hear no complaints of the inadequacy of the payment. They feel burthened with a new tax; for the former incumbent was satisfied, as far as we can collect, with about 350l. a year; and it cannot be wondered at that they should minutely examine and reluctantly pay this immense increase. They may be fraudulent or mistaken—it is not yet shewn that they are either; and to satisfy the world on the subject, and with the direct hazard of putting a scoff into the mouths of Radicalism and Infidelity, both parties are hot for Parliamentary petitions and displays of law!

We will admit that any thing which changes the quarrel from the vestry-room, will be a change for the better. One of the Newspapers has stated the RECTOR'S choler at an obnoxious parishioner to have risen to such a height on a late occasion, that he declared, "that was the first time he ever regretted "Wearing a black coat!" On this we make no comment, and leave the declaration as well as the dispute to his superiors. But, there is one argument which sounds in our ears so contemptible, that we must mark it. We understand Doctor OWEN to say, that he perseveres in the claim, to avoid compromising the rights of his successors! Miserable plea. Let him leave his successors to quarrel with their people, if they shall be foolish enough to do so; and consider how best he may do his own part. The business ought to be put a stop to by the proper authorities. Solicitors and squabbles in the Courts, are the most unsuitable and unworthy means that can be adopted for deciding the affairs of the Church, and we hope that if the RECTOR'S sense of propriety will not extinguish this scandalous brawl, neither diligence nor vigour will be wanting in the proper quarter.

EPIGRAM

On understanding that COBBETT was "coming in" for Westminster

The Electors delighted admit it is true,
That one, if not both, of their Members go out,
For HOBHOUSE, they know, has a très mauvais goût,
And Sir FRANCIS, they hear, has a very bad gout!

LORD AMHERST is likely to become a great warrior in time. His long Generalship of the Westminster Volunteers could, after all, have given him but little more than the theory of the art, or at best made him au fait at the localities of Hyde park. But he is now on the very spot for a learner. He has had already one pretty war on his hands, and now he has got another. The Burman affair has made him familiar with every thing in the shape of bog-battle and morass castrametation. He would doubtless make a capital commander in case the French planned a Lincolnshire invasión.

His practice is now varying to another style of country; and the mountains of Cutch will render him as expert in war by detachments, and defile manœuvres, as he has already been in fighting up to the neck in fens, and working his columns through jungles. It is not improbable, that before long this school too may be varied, and a lesson be given to his LORDSHIP on the plains to the North. Thus accomplished in all the services of infantry, cavalry, and artillery, we shall possess among our Peers a prodigious and unquestioned prop for the military glory of England, when WELLINGTON shall have sheathed his sword. We have the further consolation, that to this very brilliant and successful GOVERNOR of INDIA there is no immediate chance of a successor. Several names have been mentioned: the Marquis WELLESLEY, on the ground, that though he knows no more of "war's vast art" than that Aides-de-camp wear laced coats, and are very useful persons in a ball-room, yet, as having taken unto his bosom a wife, at the age of sixty-five, he must be afraid of nothing.—The Marquis of HASTINGS, because he finds old objections to living in England—has grown unfit for Ireland—is tired of Malta, and is in possession of the MARCHIONESS'S promise never to pass the Cape of Good Hope—but his affairs are still in debate before the GROCER-SOVEREIGNS of Hindostan.—The Duke of BUCKINGHAM has the best chance of the three, in case Lord AMHERST should declare himself sufficiently experienced in strategy. His GRACE has some acknowledged qualifications above either of his competitors—he distances WELLESLEY in family, and HASTINGS in fat; and fat and family are two of the supreme sources of Indian popularity—he knows the value of a shilling better than either, and at least as well as any man in existence; and his knowledge will not desert him when he comes to deal in rupees. He is a soldier too, and has seen service in the militia!

We say nothing of the fraternal connexion at the Board of Controul; now the most prolific source of patronage under the Crown. This fact has already galled the tribe of the wits; and CROKER has been heard to say that "there was nothing now like being on the Wynn-ing side of the course." Even WILL HOLMES hazarded a fling at Office! and whispered, "He may laugh that Wynns."

It is understood that, should this appointment take place, Lord NUGENT is to be Treasurer-in-chief in Bengal—from his dexterity in his Share transactions here. JEKYLL says that, if the family embark in bulk, they will make a very weighty Stowage.

TOWN IN TOWN.

Air—"London town is out of town."

LONDON TOWN is come to town,
Carriages are rolling,
The Parks and Bond-street up and down,
With fashion's very soul in.
East Enders and poor H. P.'s—
Like woodcocks, out of season—
Are vanished, and to hide, like these,
Their long BILLS—is the reason.

WHITE'S can in its window boast
More *beau than what its own has—
Sir JOSEPH COPLEY and a host,
Who long such wags have shone as.
CROCKY to his noted stand,
The knowing jockies coaxes,
To open for the Derby, and,
As he says, for the Oax's.

Lady SALISBURY begins
Her "tea and turn out" parties,
And Dow. EMILY—who wins
At her own ecarté's.

WARRENDER, who's lately all
Scotch cousins feasted, and too,
Italian Chanteurses, opes his Hall
The visites of the Grand to.

Mrs. COUTTS comes up as well
With my Lady MARY,
And the DUKE, who cuts a swell
As MADAME's Secretary!
Cards of "Mrs. C—— at home,"
Fly about all state in,
And the answers duly come
To her LORD IN WAITING! *

MADAME MARGUERITE turns out
Parties a la Francais,
Quite a modest kind of route
As HARRIETTE Wilson's songs say.
On the pave's seen to stray
Many a Harrow dolt head
And the reason is, they say,
"The DRURY's both have bolted!"

In the Representative
GLENGALL's been editing
A line, to make us all believe
Norah's not his writing.
With DOW. LANSDOWN DICK, I ween,
Has got an author's footing,
By, in the Lady's Magazine,
A short thing sometimes putting!

LINCOLN STANHOPE nightly makes
To Drury Lane a sally,
Because a girl his fancy takes
Who dances in the ballet!
LINCOLN now is Captain grand,
But VYSE has little doubt of,
He will, though now he's in command,
The Lancers soon be out of!

JOHNNY MILLS has made a bet
With the dirty PETRE,
For PAUL METHUEN—to get Something from the "Cretur."
TOMMY RAIKES, who heard it all,
With a joke came bob in,
And said—that it was "paying PAUL,"
And only "PETRE robbing!"

HODGSON, whom they call "brown STOUT,"
(CALCRAFT the delight of,)
Is, they say, beyond a doubt,
To be made a Knight of!
At a joke JOE COPLEY, who
Ne'er is a defaulter,
Says, that all they have to do,
Is—make him KNIGHT of Malta!

WRIGHT has at a Masquerade,
The trick again been doing,
Some without disguise have played,
And character a few in!
A gypsey who two bucks espied
That in the crowd were pressed thus,
Drawing both of them aside,
The ugly one addressed thus:

"Your fortune is not in your face,
"Or it would be a bad one,
"London Wall's your proper place,
"And e'en there you're a sad one!
"Old should never flirt with youth,
"In the City few do,
"And you'll find I've told the truth,
"Which very seldom you do!"

Hearing this, they all looked round,
Thinking who it should be,
When immediately they found
None but RAIKES it could be!
Leaning upon DICK GLENGALL,
Whom the gypsey calls so,
"DICK no fortune has at all,
Or I would tell his also."

Exhibitions by the score,
Balls and plays, too, "going,"
Where is often witnessed MORE
Than is fit for showing!
So, at last, town's come to town,
Carriages are rolling,
The Parks and Bond-street up and down,
With fashion's very soul in!

* The following is an original of one of the NOBLE Secretary's official despatches:—
"The Duke of ST. ALBANS is requested by Mrs. COUTTS to invite Lord SEFTON to a party at her house, on the ——."
And the following is the answer sent thereto:—
"Lord SEFTON's compliments to Mrs. COUTTS's Lord IN WAITING, and regrets that a previous engagement will prevent his attending Mrs. COUTTS on the ——."

We have more than once promised ourselves a notice of BULWER's Autumn in Greece, an agreeable work lately published by EBERS, but we find it quite impossible, from the variety of other important public matter which has lately passed under our examination, to do more than direct the particular attention of our readers to a work replete with authentic information, very able remarks, and general positions, on the affairs of that afflicted country.

COBBETT'S ELECTION.

This prince of scribblers should stick to his scribbling. He makes a miserable business of it when he goes beyond his own desk, and affects the orator. His debut in London electioneering on Wednesday was contemptible; it raised the ridicule even of HUNT. The liquid blacking man was all dignity compared to him—and he felt his dignity; however, he should not have hit so hard upon his ancient fellow-candidate for the honours of the jail. COBBETT's look, when HUNT bade him "remember his promise" of not taking a bribe, was an incomparable combination of surprise, that any man should expect any thing of the kind from him, and of reproach that this "unkindest cut of all" should come from the man who knew him best! His answer was excellent, and showed him worthy of sitting for Westminster. This man will supersede BURDETT yet, and deserves to supersede him—he has effrontery, hypocrisy, a livid smile, and quotations from SHAKESPEARE!

In what is he inferior to either of the sitting Members? It is essential that the Westminster representative should have been in a jail—that he should be a radical—that he should have been found guilty of libel—that he should be a bold scribbler and a bad orator—that he should be looked on as a dangerous subject by one-half of the community, and as an useful tool by the other—that he should speak of the House of Commons with utter contempt, and be as pitiful within its walls as he is brawling and boastful without them. We desire to know whether COBBETT will own any inferiority in any of those essentials to the "man of the people" and his man, as Mr. CANNING calls HOBHOUSE. Yet we almost wish to see COBBETT in the House—both his rivals are worn out; he is fresh, and must feel that all depends upon bustling. The "man of the people" has grown lazy, and is scared by the thought of losing sixpence by voting against the Corn Laws, or losing his seat by voting for them. COBBETT has not yet got the gout, and will be disposable for such questions. We shall put his corn lands against his character, and venture to say that neither will turn the beam. He threatens that he will make the ears of Ministers tingle—very probably: the man is not likely to care much for the ears of others, who has run such hazards with his own. But, at all events, he will amuse the House, give laughter to many a dull debate, call up Mr. CANNING's pleasantries, and utterly extinguish Mr. HUME! We had hardly thought that we should thus grow COBBETT into a national benefactor!

The chief topic of controversy at this moment is the Marquis of ANGLESEA's Leg! The Courier calls the following matchless couplet, which appeared in the Chronicle, "tap-room trash!"—

"Here lies the Marquis of ANGLESEA's limb,
The D—v—l will have the remainder of him."

—doubtless] envy in the Courier for not having had it in the first instance. The Morning Chronicle hurries to throw off the charge of originality on this occasion, and tries to fasten it, like the recommendation to murder MARTIN, on BLACKWOOD!

Another Morning Paper, that "wishes its name to be concealed," gives a variorum reading:—

"Here lies the Marquis of ANGLESEA's toe!
The D—v—l will have the rest also,
As SHIEL and O'CONNELL, and BROUGHAM will know!

But much finer things have been said or sung over this valuable inhumation, on the spot:—

"Here lies the Marquis of ANGLESEA's leg;
What ran away with the rest, I beg?"

On the left corner of the marble slab is engraved, with the signature of J. M'G.—some of the Medical Staff, we presume—

"Why make such fuss
About a Crus!
Death make no pother—
Take the other!

Another, towards the bottom, evidently, from the delicacy of the sculpture, by a Lady's penknife:—

"ON SEEING THE MARQUIS OF ANGLESEA WALTZING, JULY, 1817.
"To balls a victim, and to balls a slave,
He goes to balls, with one foot in the grave."

The next is more laboured, and is indeed said to have been the production of a great poetic Lord and public orator:—

"Here lies a bit of the Seventh Hussars!
Not crept by the gout, but lopped off by the wars,
No more to be booted, no more to be blacked,
No more to be battered, no more bivouacked,
No more to be spurred—the "first thing on the staff,"
To shine out in silk, or caper in calf;
When the call to "parade," for the last time is given,
It shall shake off its dust, and hop up to heaven."

To these should be added a poem of a length which would do honour to the whole man, and of a wit, which has fastened its authorship on Mr. CANNING! But it has passed through all the Papers long since, has filtered down through the Magazines, and is at length deposited in Albums innumerable.

The arguments which we introduced about a fortnight since, on the subject of the SILK TRADE, are verified every hour, and the situation of Spital-fields, in behalf of whose sufferers the feelings of the country are called into action, is merely a prelude, alarming as it is, to the storm that will blow over their devoted heads, if the pernicious system, against the introduction of which the manufacturers are at present vainly petitioning, be carried into effect. It is not, however, our present object to entertain that question, as much as it is to excite the general sympathy of our readers in behalf of their destitute fellow-creatures, employed in this at present depressed branch of our manufactures; and while we are enabled, from OBSERVATION AND ACTUAL KNOWLEDGE, to assure them, that no language can well picture the extreme distress under which these persons now suffer, we do it with the conviction that it is only to make the statement to excite commiseration. At this present moment there are THREE THOUSAND SEVEN HUNDRED AND EIGHTY-ONE cases supported by the Committee, and multiplying the number of cases by four, which is the lowest computation possibly to be made of the number in a family, it furnishes the enormous amount of FIFTEEN THOUSAND ONE HUNDRED AND TWENTY-FOUR souls, claiming and receiving relief from the Committee—only yesterday ONE THOUSAND were relieved, and ONE THOUSAND FOUR HUNDRED are on the list for to-morrow. Such a statement as this will be quite sufficient to awaken the best sympathies of all who read it, and we really anticipate, from the thousands through whose hands it will pass in the course of a few hours, that an appeal thus made, without exaggeration and with little comment, will be answered on the instant. If we were to enter into circumstances, we could furnish a tale "whose lightest word would harrow up the soul"—of children famishing, of mothers unable from exhaustion to administer natural nutriment to their offspring, and of fathers mersed in the depths of a gaunt despair—of the most lamentable visitations of want its victims have ever experienced: but we will leave the description to CHARITY, and there was never a better pleader. Among the most active members of the Committee are enrolled the names of my Lord Bishop of CHESTER, who is incessant in his exertions; the Rev. RICHARD HARVEY, the Rev. THOMAS GREGORY, Mr. WM. HALE, the Treasurer, Mr. ALEXIS DOXAT, Mr. JAS. MORRIS, and Mr. EDWARD MERRICK. They are individually and collectively employed unceasingly to promote and distribute subscriptions, and, but for their humane efforts, hundreds might have perished, who now are in existence to bless their benefactors.

We are enabled to state, from authority, that CLAUDE AMBROISE SEURAT, the Living Skeleton, will be married, in the course of a few days, at St. James's church, to a young lady, nineteen years of age. The following is a congratulatory address on the occasion:—

They say a subject marriage is
Of very grave debate,
Then only SUBJECTS for the grave
Should enter its estate.
In this is one advantage found,
When fate suspends the breath,
We wed a skelcton in life,
And lose it not in death!
From ADAM's bones a woman came,
And 'tis but fair to say
From Mr. SEURAT's bones, perhaps,
Some other women may!
If Matrimony's Paradise,
Or pair o'dice by name,
As dice are bones, the issue may Perchance be just the same!
However other souls complain,
Yet Mr. SEURAT owns,
That he at last has found a place
Wherein to lay his bones!
And while so many flesh prefer
With all its toil and strife,
Yet here's a lady Death prefers
E'en in the MIDST of life!

THEATRICALS.

The Oratorios at the King's Theatre continue to be the theme of general approbation, and indeed the performances are quite entitled to all the encomium they receive.

Mr. BRAHAM commenced a theatrical engagement at Covent-garden on Tuesday last, appearing in his favourite character of Henry Bertram—an injudicious selection, because his popularity can better afford to appear in an indifferent character, than before an indifferent house, which was the case this evening. Set aside this consideration, and there is every reason why he should make such a choice, because the songs which he has rendered so celebrated in this Opera are the finest specimens of Mr. BRAHAM's extraordinary powers—of deep feeling, of science, of execution, and the full developement of a voice without a parallel in the annals of the Drama. It is unnecessary to particularize at this moment the many qualities of this singer's different songs, given on this occasion; but it is still a tribute due to him to declare that time, which has impaired the faculties of so many of his cotemporaries, seems yearly to impart an united grandeur and beauty to his, and were it necessary to adduce any other testimonial of the high rank he maintains in his profession, it may be found in the simple fact, that every other department of the stage, but his own, has, during his prosperous career, added some important rivalry to its other professors, but all the efforts of native songsters, and Italian imports, have only tended to exalt his splendid abilities even higher than they might otherwise be thought; and your SINCLAIRS, PHILLIPS's, DURUSETS, and others, have just appeared as so many ballad-mongers, to testify that BRAHAM, and BRAHAM alone, is England's SON OF SONG. Guy Mannering was enacted in most respects well—Mr. SERLE has found his proper level in the Colonel, and Mr. BARTLEY elevated, by a specimen of very fine acting, Dirk Hatteraick far beyond the level it has hitherto been reduced to—while the others, barring Mrs. VON KOLLI, who is a really very shy actress and singer, supported their usual respectability. The first appearance of Miss PATON must, however, be especially selected for approbation, because so efficient a representation of the character has never hitherto been witnessed—indeed this lady has altogether risen up in a total defiance, in most respects, of all competition with the other female singers of the day; and while we generally admired the other songs Miss PATON introduced to us, we are bound particularly to speak of a new ballad entitled "Bonny brave Scotland," which produced a really electric feeling—we can call to mind no effect beyond it; and so saying, dismiss we Guy Mannering. Mr. CHARLES KEMBLE's French Libertine will be noticed next week.

Owing to the indulgence in one of those tricks which the Mimes will play, and are suffered to do, Madame Vestris did not appear "to time" in Artaxerxes, and was only brought back to her day, we hear, by the announcement of another lady in her part of Artaxerxes. Sad work all this—but Miss LOVE is a very delightful actress, and will make amends for any one's absence—the Managers are trifling with the abilities of this lady, by putting her in Artaxerxes one night, and Semira the next—she succeeded, however—Mr. PHILLIPS totally failed—his place is a concert room—where any stick, with a good voice, passes for a good singer.

The Drury-lane affairs are still flourishing, though LISTON, having been playing in the country and made himself ill, is obliged to go and play in the country again to make himself well, and the theatre therefore loses him. The Herald tells us that ELLISTON appeared at his theatre in his carriage on Wednesday, for the first time since his illness; while every other person but the blockhead who edits this half ream of paper, has seen King ROBERT, any day since term began, at Drury-lane and every other part of the town.

We have not room to notice as we could desire, and in the manner it deserves, Mr. BARTLEY's lecture at the English Opera House—it is entitled to much consideration, both as regard the talents of its delivery, and the valuable information it embodies, as well as the high and solid character which the Lecturer has ever held with the public and society—it will come under our notice hereafter.—It would be quite injustice to omit a very pleasing compilation of "oddity" introduced by a Mr. HENRY at the Adelphi---we have never equalled any illusions, or, to speak more intelligibly to the multitude, tricks, than this gentleman exhibits—and with an address unusually pleasing, and an entertainment equally so, the "off nights" at this popular theatre will equal the attraction of the "ons," as we suppose they must be called.

The following impudent paragraphs appeared in yesterday's Post, and were inserted for "love or money," we will undertake to swear, by that most impudent auctioneer, GEORGE ROBINS:

"Miss FOOTE has been in London a few days, on her way from the North to fulfil her Bath engagement, which commences on Monday. It is said this young lady has received upwards of 5,000*l.* since she left Covent-garden Theatre in June, beside the gratification of having filled the treasury of every Provincial Theatre. At Bath, the boxes are already taken for the the nights she is to act there."

The Management of Drury-lane Theatre have engaged Miss FOOTE to perform twenty-four nights, commencing in three weeks, on terms alike creditable to the liberality of the Manager, and tqe acknowledged talent and attraction of the young lady.

This engagement, which we mentioned a month ago, will now go round the town as news, and precious news it is too. This humbug shall certainly have no quarter from us. Miss FOOTE, as a sentimental actress at Covent Garden Theatre, in the receipt of 8*l.* or 10*l.* per week, was to us a most fascinating creature. Miss FOOTE, as a shameless mother, who has forsaken her own children, and obtained a popularity by intrigue which she never could obtain by ability, is disgusting; and when we are told by a hammer-headed Committee man of Drury Lane, that she is engaged for 24 nights "on terms creditable to the acknowledged talent and attraction of the young Lady," we burst out laughing—the quackery will blow itself—"the young Lady" is blown already.

We have no news beyond this to detail, than to state that a young gentleman, who came from Dublin in the packet with Madame VESTRIS, has left word at our office, that she had a very rough SEA coming over.

FOREIGN INTELLIGENCE.

PARIS, JAN. 30.—PARRICIDE AND MURDER.—A shoemaker, named Champion, residing in the commune of Ounaing and arrondissement of Valenciennes, was tried on the 24th instant, before the Court of Assize of Douai, for the murder of his father and sister. The following are the facts of this horrible case:—The father of the prisoner had sometimes maltreated him, because he refused to break off his connection with a girl by whom he had a child. His sister, it appears, encouraged her father in his harsh treatment of her brother, and the latter conceived the diabolical project of murdering them both. On the 3d of last November Champion supped with his father and sister. Immediately after the meal the two latter retired to bed, leaving Champion at work. About eleven o'clock Champion took a heavy hammer and a small anvil, and after putting out the light, went to his sister's room, stole softly to the bedside, ascertained by passing his hand slightly over the pillow where her head lay, and then struck two such violent blows with the hammer on the skull, that the brains were scattered about the room, and the unfortunate girl expired without a sigh. The murderer then went to the room where his father slept, and struck at his head with the hammer; the blow took effect upon the under jaw, which it broke. The old man threw himself from the bed and seized his son by the collar, at the same time crying out, "Miserable man, what have you done?" At the voice of his father the wretch hesitated for a moment; but soon recovering his ferocity, exclaimed "I have gone too far to return, I must finish." A struggle then took place between the parricide and his victim, which ended by Champion getting his father under him, when he got his knees upon his chest, and continued striking him on the head till every sign of life had disappeared. He then took from his father's pocket the key of a cupboard, in which was a bag containing 1,000 francs. This sum he took with him into a barn, where he slept, and concealed it, together with his blood-stained clothes, under some bundles of hay. He then went to bed, and slept soundly until morning. On getting up he went to one of the neighbours, and told him that his father and sister had been robbed and murdered during the night. The Commissary of Police was sent for, and to him he very calmly related the same story. Some scratches being perceived upon his hands, the Commissary ordered him to be stripped and examined; but no trace of blows was found upon his body, only a few stains of blood upon one of his fingers: for this he accounted by saying that he had bled at the nose the evening before. He was then taken into the room where the bodies of his victims lay. The Commissary felt his pulse at the time that he ordered the face of the father to be turned up. The parricide fixed his eyes steadfastly upon the fractured skull, broken jaw and ribs of his ill-fated father, without showing the slightest symptoms of emotion, either by change of countenance or irregularity of pulse. In the mean time, the bag of money and blood-stained clothes were found in the barn, and Champion was in consequence sent off to the prison of Valenciennes. On the way he acknowledged being the murderer. On his trial he repeated the same avowal with the most imperturbable sang froid, and heard his sentence without the slightest apparent dismay. He merely expressed a desire to be allowed to live a little longer than the usual period allowed to murderers, for the purpose of repenting. He was condemned to be led bare-footed, and his face covered with a black veil, to the public place of Valenciennes, and to have there his right hand and head cut off.

PROVINCIAL INTELLIGENCE.

CASE OF HORRID AND BRUTAL ATROCITY.—In giving the following outline of a case of unheard-of and unnatural cruelty, we suppress the names and residence of the parties, as the ease is in a train of legal investigation. A brother and sister, reside near the northern border of this county, whose father died about fifteen years ago, leaving seven children, four sons and three daughters; one of the sons was, unhappily, an idiot. The father, by his will, bequeathed to the brother and sister the sum of 1,500*l.* in trust, the interest thereof to be applied to the maintenance, in the most comfortable manner his unfortunate situation would admit, of his deranged child. Immediately after the death of his father (as is alleged) the poor idiot was locked up in a small dark room in the house, where he was daily fed like a swine, through a small aperture in the wall, for a series of years. About eleven years ago, the brother and sister gave it out that their unfortunate brother had died, and was buried at a distant place, in consequence of which the family went into mourning for him. The brother and sister then spread a report that their house was haunted, in order to deter persons from visiting it: however, a servant-girl, who had been with them fourteen years, left them a few days ago, and went into the service of a Magistrate in the neighbourhood, and communicated the above circumstance. The Magistrate took immediate steps, and, with a constable, he went to the house, and requested admittance. This being refused, he burst open the door, and found the unfortunate object of their search in a place of total darkness. They procured a light, and discovered the miserable victim of atrocious penury crouching in a corner of the room; his hair had grown all over him to the length of three or four inches; he was become quite deformed, and shrunk to little more than a yard in height; when his father died he was in person a well made and tall young man. Blankets were procured to place him in, but when the constable went to wrap them round him, he sprung at him and bit him in the cheek, making a horrible and unintelligible noise. He was, however, brought down stairs, and conveyed to the Staffordshire Lunatic Asylum, where he at present remains.—Salopian Journal.

A MANUFACTURER MURDERED IN HIS WAREHOUSE AT MID-DAY.—A great sensation has been created in this town by a murder committed yesterday, under the most extraordinary circumstances. Mr. Thomas Price, a highly respectable fustian-manufacturer, was murdered between the hours of one and two, in his own warehouse, in Marsden-square. The circumstances connected with this horrible transaction, as far as they have transpired, are briefly these:—About two o'clock in the afternoon, an alarm of fire having been given, and the fire bell rung, the engines of the Norwich, Exchange, and Police offices, repaired to Marsden-square, to a house, the lower part of which is occupied by the Savings' Bank, and the two upper stories by Mr. Price. Soon after three the flames, which proceeded from the upper part of the building, were completely subdued, and one of the persons who had assisted in extinguishing the fire, ascended into Mr. P.'s warehouse, for the purpose of ascertaining the extent of the injury, when he discovered the body of Mr. Price, lying near the door, beside a pile of velveteens, one of the pieces of which was placed upon him. He was completely lifeless, with a desperate wound immediately above his left ear. Indeed, his brains were scattered on several of the pieces around him. The skull appeared to have been cut completely through, but no implement was found upon the spot with which the murder could be supposed to have been perpetrated. Mr. Gibson, of the Savings' Bank, had left two of his clerks in the lower story, when he went home to dinner. About half-past one o'clock, one of them, perceiving the smell of fire, went up stairs for the purpose of ascertaining from whence it proceeded. On entering the back-room of the second story, which Mr. Price used as a counting-house, he observed his hat upon the desk; he then went up the next flight of stairs, in the expectation of meeting with Mr. P. and found the door of the upper room open, but the smoke was so dense that he could see nothing, and was compelled to retire abruptly, and give the alarm. A man and woman, in the service of Mr. Price, have been taken up, on suspicion, but, although many circumstances have transpired, we do not feel ourselves at liberty to repeat them, no Inquest having as yet been held upon the body. The man states, that he and the woman left their master about a quarter-past one, Mr. Price having informed them that he should shut up the warehouse himself. The fire was discovered in about a quarter of an hour afterwards, and the body was found in a lifeless state immediately upon the extinction of the flames. A Coroner's Inquest will be held upon the body this day, when it is expected that some further light will be cast upon this mysterious and horrid affair. Mr. Price, who was about 55 years of age, has, we understand, left a widow and five children. His wig was found at a short distance from the body. There seems to be little doubt but that the wretches who perpetrated this execrable deed intended that the body should be so far disfigured by the fire as to render its identification impossible.—Manchester Courier.

We have never had occasion, says The Bolton Chronicle, to record a more dreadful accident than that which occurred on Monday, at the factory of Messrs. Edward and William Bolling, in Bridge-street, Little Bolton, to Elizabeth Kenworthy, a child only eight years and eight months old, who had her head entirely cut off from her body by the machinery. The girl had been engaged rather more than a week in the factory; and on Monday morning she was putting some rovings into the creel, when her clothes were caught by the shaft, which was not boxed off, or protected, as it ought to have been, and she was instantly twisted up to the creel, with such amazing velocity, that her head was entirely separated from her body. When the accident was discovered, the headless and bleeding trunk was seen revolving, at a most frightful speed, with the shaft; and the engine was obliged to be stopped, before it could be extricated.

LORD DARLINGTON'S LETTER TO THE LORD-MAYOR ON THE DISTRESS OF THE SPITALFIELDS WEAVERS.

"Raby Castle, Feb. 7.

"My Lord,—Although, from severe illness and confinement to my bed, it is with great difficulty that I can write, I cannot refrain from endeavouring to convey to your Lordship the great sympathy that I feel for the extreme distress of the Spitalfields weavers, than whom I am convinced a more honest, industrious, peaceable, meritorious in time of riot, though suffering under privation and distress, class of the community, does not exist, and therefore have much satisfaction in enclosing to your Lordship 500*l.* towards their relief. In sending this donation, I must add my opinion for their information, that the present distress, which also is heavily felt in other articles of our trade and manufactures, cannot be imputable to any measures which the present Administration has thought it right to propose and adopt, and that it is my firm conviction that the steady perseverance of the Government in the liberal line of policy they are now pursuing, will be productive of the greatest and most permanent advantages to the country. I have the honour to be, my Lord, your Lordship's very obedient humble servant,

"DARLINGTON."

THE IRISH CATHOLIC ASSOCIATION.

On Saturday week the members of the Old, and of the late Association, calling themselves the New Association, and meaning in plain Irish, by "New," the Association before the last, met at the Corn Exchange. In the course of the proceedings, which are not worth describing, we find some amusing instances of gentlemanly feeling, and dignified resentment, excited by the late dinner catastrophe. The total failure of that "national" affair has evidently goaded Mr. O'Connell almost to madness, as we think will be seen in the sequel.

The first alarming symptom recorded on Saturday se'nnight was Mr. O'Connell's ire, because one of the Reporters, "in an extremely low voice," asked a question. Mr. O'Connell, indignant that instead of taking notes of him they should be talking themselves, stopped, in the middle of a set speech, to remark, "that if persons who were there on sufferance did not conduct themselves as they ought, he would move that they be excluded." Upon this one of the Reporters gave Mr. O'Connell rather a sharp lecture, and asserted his right to be there as a member of that august body. Several other Gentlemen of the Association denied that any interruption had been offered.

Mr. Lawless spoke in favour of "the Rent," and against the "d—d Algerine Act," as he called the law which put down the first, or grand Catholic Association. He lamented the treatment which the Press had lately received, and spoke of the services rendered by those connected with it.

The report thus proceeds:—

Mr. O'Connell said, that it was highly improper for Mr. Lawless to connect his (Mr. O'Connell's) name with his encomiums, relative to the Press.

Mr. Lawless said he had not done so.

He (Mr. O'Connell) had no anxiety that his speeches should be reported; indeed, he would be much better pleased that they should not; for he never in his life saw any thing so shameful, so disgraceful, as the brevity, the inaccuracy, and the imperfection of the reports, during the last thirteen days. Not even a single speech of his had appeared in any paper in Dublin which was not grossly incorrect. His arguments were all misunderstood; what he said was misrepresented, and things he never uttered were reported for him. It was quite a mistake to think that he was anxious to have his speeches reported; if the Proprietors of Newspapers did not find it their interest to publish them, they would not of course do so.

Mr. Lawless said, that he had not perceived such incorrectness. (Hear, hear.) At all events, Mr. O'Connell's speeches read better than his (Mr. Lawless's).

Mr. O'Connell said, sarcastically, that might be caused by Mr. Lawless reporting his own speeches, whilst he (Mr. O'Connell) did not.

Mr. Lawless said he did not report his own speeches.

Mr. Conway had not read the speeches, having heard them delivered, but he would take upon himself generally for the Press to say, that if incorrectness appeared it arose from the difficulty of reporting accurately, and that particularly towards Mr. O'Connell no designed misrepresentation would be used.

Mr. O'Connell wished to be understood as not saying that the fault arose from intention, but from total incapacity. (Cries of "Oh, oh!")

Other Gentlemen praised the labour and talent which had been devoted to reporting their debates, and lamented the affront recently offered to the Journals, by not inviting the conductors of them to the dinner.—Their exclusion, Mr. O'Connell avowed, was his own work, because, if they had attended, as usual, "the speakers would all have been misrepresented, and it was better not to have them reported at all."

This was going beyond the contemptuous expressions of "Pshaw! nonsense!" which had previously escaped him when the ability of the reporters was acknowledged by Mr. Lawless. In conclusion, when a motion on the subject was proposed, Mr. O'Connell remarked, that to act in that manner was "attaching importance to persons whom neither God nor nature intended to elevate into consequence." The Newspapers, he added, would not publish his speeches if they did not find their account in it.—Doubtless, he considers that every column he furnishes is a mine of gold to those who print it. We should not, however, be surprised if the Dublin Papers were to teach him, that they can exist even without the benefit of his eloquence.

A SEAT IN PARLIAMENT FOR MR. COBBETT.

A Meeting was convened for one o'clock Wednesday, at the Freemason's Tavern, Great Queen-street, for the purpose of considering the most effectual means of procuring a return to Parliament for Mr. Cobbett. At the appointed hour the building was crowded to excess, and the Chair not having been taken much confusion ensued. At length one of Mr. Cobbett's sons announced that the Meeting had been adjourned to Lincoln's Inn-fields, whither those assembled in the room immediately proceeded.

Sir Thomas Beevor, who occupied the Chair, placed on a waggon, explained the object of the Meeting, and at the same time professed himself under important personal obligations to Mr. Cobbett; by whose instructions and advice he said he was enabled to disencumber the very considerable hereditary estate which he possessed.

Colonel Johuson, in rising to propose a string of resolutions, declared his conviction that Mr. Cobbett's great talents would be productive of infinite public good, when exerted in Parliament. He was himself Member for Boston, and so impressed was he with the superiority of Mr. Cobbett's powers, that a sense of his country's good impelled him to wish his own seat transferred to Mr. Cobbett. His resolutions went to express the value of Mr. Cobbett's abilities, the opening of a subscription for the purpose of procuring his return to Parliament, and some unimportant matters of detail.

The resolutions were seconded by Mr. Walker.

Mr. Cobbett addressed the Meeting at much length, reprobating the late commercial measures, and asserting that Ministers began at the wrong end, when they removed prohibitions by which this country obtained a monopoly in trade, and allowed the Corn Laws to subsist.

Mr. Henry Hunt also spoke.

The following is a copy of the Resolutions:—

Resolved—1. That it is the opinion of this Meeting, that it would be beneficial to the country if Mr. Cobbett was a Member of the Commons' House of Parliament; and that it is therefore the opinion that there ought to be raised, by public subscription, a sum of money sufficient for discharging any expenses that may become necessary for the attainment of that object.

2. That Sir Thomas Beevor, Bart. be the Treasurer of such subscription.

3. That the subscriptions be paid to the Treasurer, or to a person authorised by him to receive subscriptions.

4. That each subscriber shall, at the time of paying his subscription, receive a receipt for the same, in the following form:—"Received of A. B. the sum of £——, as a subscription towards discharging any expenses that may arise from any steps that may be taken for the purpose of obtaining the return of Mr. Cobbett to serve in Parliament."

5. That if it should so happen that there be not raised a sum sufficient to warrant an attempt to obtain the object in view, then in the space of ten days after the close of the next general election, each and every subscriber shall, by presenting or causing to be presented his aforesaid receipt to the Treasurer, or other per-

ADELPHI THEATRE, Strand.—On MONDAY, April 3, Mr. YATES will have the honor of presenting an entirely New Entertainment, in three parts, entitled Yates' Reminiscences, or Etchings of Life and Character.—Boxes, 4s. Pit, 2s. Gallery, 1s.—Doors open at 7, and begin punctually at half-past 7. Half-price at 9.

ROYAL AMPHITHEATRE, (ASTLEY'S,) Westminster-bridge, under the Management of Messrs. Ducrow and West. To morrow, Monday, April 3, and during the week, the New Grand Eastern Military and Naval Spectacle of the Burmese War; or, Our Victories in the East. Equestrianism in the Circle by Miss E. Ducrow, Mr. Ducrow, and Mr. Woolford. The Entertainments to conclude with the whimsical sketch of Out of Place; or, Flats and Sharps. The Managers respectfully announce that from the pressure of the crowd while waiting for the opening of the doors to witness the new spectacle of the Burmese War, they will be thrown open at a quarter past 5. The performance to commence at a quarter past 6. Owing to the immense preparations for the piece in general, but principally for setting the ponderous platforms, bridges, &c. for the second act, half-price cannot be admitted till the conclusion, at 9 o'clock.

NEW ARGYLL ROOMS, REGENT-STREET. Mr. HAWES respectfully acquaints the Nobility and Gentry that his ANNUAL CONCERT will take place at the above Rooms on THURSDAY, 27th April. Tickets 10s. 6d. to be had at the Royal Harmonic Institution, Regent-street; at all the Music Shops; and No. 7, Adelphi Terrace, where application for Boxes are requested to be made.

KING'S THEATRE.—The Public are respectfully informed, that a GRAND MASQUERADE on a new principle, will take place at this Theatre, on Thursday next, April 6, on which occasion the unrivalled local resources this Establishment offers will be employed so as to produce a Masked Fete, in the style of those given on the Continent during the Carnival, especially at Venice, Naples, Milan, and Paris. The interior of the theatre, which will be converted into a spacious saloon, will be brilliantly illuminated, as well as the King's Concert Room, in both of which choice and efficient bands will be placed for country dances, reels, quadrilles, and waltzes. A Royal military band will also be stationed in the theatre, to relieve the others by the performance of some of the most approved symphonies and other pieces of music. Several of the performers belonging to this theatre, and others in the metropolis, have volunteered their services, and a variety of groups will be introduced. The approbation bestowed on the last masquerade, with regard to the selectness of the company, has induced the managers of this not to revert to the former injurious practice of distributing a number of character tickets; therefore in this instance they will be but sparingly given to those persons whose respectability and acknowledged talent will be considered as likely to conduce to the hilarity of the evening's entertainment. Tickets, one guinea each, including the usual refreshments of tea, coffee, lemonade, orangeade, &c. Character tickets, 10s. 6d. each. A supper laid out with the taste and discrimination evinced on most occasions by Mr. Grogan, will be provided in the gallery coffee-room; for which tickets may be procured at 7s. 6d. each; and some of the very best wines the cellars of Mr. Chas. Ince, of Craven-street, Strand, (His Majesty's Purveyor,) can produce, will be placed at the disposal of amateurs, lists of which and prices will be placed in conspicuous places about the theatre. A certain number of boxes will be detached from the other parts of the house, for families and parties to see the Masquerade, and may be had on application at the Opera Office, 27, Old Bond-street. two guineas each. Masks, dominoes, &c., to be had at the Theatre. No person admitted without a mask. The most complete arrangement has been made with respect to the police, which will be under the direction of Mr. Handley, Queen-square Police Office. It is deemed necessary to appraise the public, that no ivory tickets will be admitted; and, in order to guard against the intrusion of disorderly persons, no tickets can be had but at the doors at night, at 27, Old Bond-street, and at the following masquerade warehouses:—Mr. Millard, Lower Brook-street; Mr. Hunt, Davies-street, Berkeley-square; Mr. Nathan, Berwick-street, Soho; and Mr. Fentum, Strand. Admission to the gallery 3s. The doors will be thrown open at ten o'clock. Supper rooms at one.

THE DEFEAT of the TURKS by the GREEKS, at Sea and upon Land; also the Capital Cities of Albania and the Moria, Joanina, and Maina, now OPEN at the Great Room, entrance 70, Great St. Martin's-lane, five doors from Long-acre. The original new PERISTREPHIC or MOVING PANORAMA, in 14 different views, painted by eminent English and Greek artists, upon nearly 20,000 square feet of canvass, 10,000 figures are represented—those in the foreground size of life. Together with connected Views of the Storming of Seringapatam. Movements accompanied by a military band, and a correct description given. Day Exhibitions every hour from 12 to 5 o'clock. Evening Exhibition at 7, and the last precisely at half-past 8, brilliantly illuminated. Boxes 2s. Gallery 1s. Children half price. Books descriptive 6d. each.

NOW OPEN, for a short time, in the GOTHIC HALL, 7, Haymarket, (adjoining the little Theatre.) In consequence of the death of the Emperor Alexander; the whole having been most expensively enriched for the Imperial Cabinet of St. Petersburgh! The Magnificent EXHIBITION of MECHANICAL and MUSICAL AUTOMATONS! Comprising nearly Twenty different Subjects, together with a Grand Display of ANCIENT ARMOUR! (which surrounds the Spacious Hall,) the whole forming the most interesting, Amusing, and costly Exhibition ever opened to public inspection! The Automatons comprise the following subjects:—

The JUVENILE ARTIST! Whose astouishing Performance in Drawing and Writing (alternately) in the presence of the Company, defy all attempts at rivalship, in regard to their beauty, and correctness of design and execution! (This exquisite and complicated piece of Mechanism was the labour of six years.)

The MUSICAL LADY! Who performs upon an elegant Finger Organ, a variety of pleasing Airs. The facinating sweetness of her Countenance, and lovely motion of the Eyes, never fail in securing admirers! She bows gracefully to the audience! her bosom heaves as if naturally influenced by the lungs; and every note is produced by the brilliant touch of her fingers, with the exception of flats and sharps, which are played by the feet!

The ROPE DANCER! Whose surprising performances surpass, in agility, attitudes, and evolutions, every professor of the Art! keeping correct time to the Music of the Machinery.

The MAGICIAN! Whose inimitable Performances afford the greatest interest and delight, by the sagacious answers he returns to every question proposed to him! The construction of this wonderful self-acting figure has hitherto puzzled all the first-rate Mechanics in Europe!

The WALKING FIGURE! Which, moving entirely by its own powers, excites the greatest surprise! it having ever been held to be a thing utterly impossible, by any sort of machinery, to produce a self-moving figure capable of supporting its own equilibrium.

A MAGNIFICENT CLASSIC VASE! This exquisite piece of Mechauism was manufactured in Paris by order of Napoleon! The enrichments are in the finest taste from the antique; the principal parts of the mechanism exhibit, in two separate divisions, the stories of Charon ferrying departed spirits over the river Styx, and Vulcan forging Armour for Achilles!

Also, two Siberian Mice! of Pearls and Gold.—Tarantula Spider!—Golden Snake!—Two beautiful Humming Birds! which warble the sweetest notes.—Ethiopean Caterpillar!—Egyptian Lizard! all of the most exquisite workmanship, &c.

The whole exhibiting, by their exact imitations of Animated Nature, the astonishing Powers of Mechanism!

 At 1, 2, 3, and 4 o'clock, will be introduced performances on the Sostenente Pianoforte, by a celebrated professor.

☞ The Surprising GIAN'T, Mons. Louis, the tallest man who has appeared in this kingdom since the days of O'Brien, and his favorite little Horse, Nonpariel, only 30 inches high, are also Exhibiting, for a short time, in an elegant apartment upon the same premises.

TO THE PROPRIETORS OF EAST INDIA STOCK.

LADIES AND GENTLEMEN,

I HAVE the Honour respectully to submit to your consideration the subjoined and RESOLUTIONS of a numerous MEETING of PROPRIETORS of EAST INDIA STOCK, held this day, at the City of London Tavern.

From the encouraging assurance of support, and from those I have received from the Proprietors generally in the course of my Canvass, I entertain the most confident hopes of being placed, by your kind Suffrages at the approaching Election, on the 12th of April next, in one of the Vacancies occasioned by the retirement of the Hon. William Elphinstone and James Daniel, Esq.

Should I, through your favour, succeeded in this object of my ambition, I beg leave to assure you that it will be my duty and pride zealously to devote myself to the promotion of the important interests of the East India Company. I have the honour to be, Ladies and Gentlemen, Your obliged faithful servant,

Baker-street, March 17, 1826. JAMES RIVETT CARNAC.

At a numerous and highly respectable Meeting of Proprietors of East India Stock, held at the City of London Tavern, on the 17th of March, 1826.

Sir CHARLES FORBES, Bart. M.P. in the Chair:

the following Resolutions were passed unanimously:—

1. Proposed by General Sir John Doyle, Bart. G.C.B., and seconded by the Hon. Colonel Lincoln Stanhope, of his Majesty's 17th Lancers.

That, considering the great extent and vast importance of the British dominions in the East, it is the opinion of this Meeting, that Gentlemen who have served in India, in high political offices, with acknowledged ability, integrity and experience, are indispensably required for the efficient administration of the Company's affairs; and there not being at present an adequate number of military men in the Court of Directors, compared with the greatly augmented force of the Company's army, this Meeting is further of opinion, that in the selection for supplying a vacancy in the Executive Body, preference should be given to a gentleman whose services have been distinguished in both these capacities.

2. Proposed by James Alexander, Esq. M.P. and seconded by Thomas Redhead, Esq.

That this Meeting fully appreciates the ample testimonials of Major Carnac's services in India in several arduous and delicate situations, requiring the exercise of great prudence, temper, and ability, as successively recorded in the most honourable manner by the Government of Bombay; confirmed by the Supreme Government of India, and honoured by the entire approbation of the Court of Directors.

3. Proposed by Edward Jeremiah Curteis, Esq. M.P. and seconded by Mr. Alderman Atkins.

That in accordance with the foregoing Resolutions, this Meeting strongly recommend Major James Rivett Carnac to the favourable consideration of the Proprietors of East India Stock, as a gentleman whose acknowledged political and military services have shown him to be eminently qualified for a seat in the Direction of their Affairs; and they pledge themselves zealously to support his well-founded pretensions, and to exert their utmost endeavours to secure his election. CHARLES FORBES, Chairman.

Sir Charles Forbes having quitted the Chair, it was taken by Thomas Wilkinson, Esq.

And on the motion of E. J. Curteis, Esq., M.P., seconded by Sir John Doyle, Bart., G.C.B., it was resolved unanimously,

That thanks of this Meeting be given to Sir Charles Forbes, Bart., for his very able conduct in the Chair.

Major Carnac's Committee will sit daily at the City of London Tavern, where communications regarding his interests will be thankfully received.

FOREIGN INTELLIGENCE.

REVOLUTION AT TUCUMAN.

(From the Buenos-Ayres Mensagero.)

When we lately announced the revolution of Tucuman, we were reluctant to sully the columns of the Mensagero with the details of that event, which merits the bitterest execration, and which ought to be for ever buried in the darkness whence it originated. We therefore confine ourselves to the publication of the following circular, addressed by the national executive power, to the Governments of all the provinces of the republic:—

"Buenos-Ayres, Dec. 20, 1825.

"The Government intrusted with the national executive authority has learned with surprise and indignation the events of the province of Tucuman, which have terminated in the deposition of the Governor Don Xavier Lopez, and the occupation of the seat of Government by Don Gregorio Araoz de la Madrid, the author of the revolution, which was effected while he was intrusted by the General Government to convey the contingents of the provinces to the army of Uruguay.

"This unlooked-for event is the more alarming, because, in our present critical circumstances, it cannot fail to excite in the public mind a feeling injurious in its tendency to the order and prosperity of the Republic. The national Government, in thus addressing the Governor of the Province of ———, feels assured that he will be fully convinced how necessary it is for the maintenance of the order, stability, and good organization of the state, that the existing authorities should be respected, and measures adopted to prevent those disorders which keep the Government and the people in a state of insecurity.

"Penetrated with these sentiments, the National Congress, to which an account of this event has been communicated, declared in the sitting of the 13th instant—

"'1st. That the conduct of Colonel La Madrid is tumultuous and anarchical.

"'2d. That the Hon. Representative Junta of the Province of Tucuman cannot feel itself free to deliberate and elect under the circumstances of disorder in which they have been forced to assemble.

"'And lastly, the Representative Junta fully authorizes the National Executive Power to adopt whatever measures may be deemed most suitable for re-establishing order in your province, and for correcting the mischievous effects which the late event is calculated to produce on the national honour and security.'

"The Government has deprived Colonel La Madrid of the commission he held, and has ordered him immediately to appear and answer for his conduct, and the hon. Junta of the Province is directed to adopt all consequent measures and resolutions agreeable to legal forms.

"The undersigned transmits this resolution to the Governor of the Province of ———, in the confidence that he will employ all the means in his power for carrying it into effect; and that a measure, which is essentially necessary for the maintenance of the constituted authorities, will not fail to be executed by the above-mentioned Governor in a way that may ensure the fulfilment of the important objects which the National Government has in view.

"The undersigned salutes the Governor of the Province of ——— with his accustomed respect,

"MANUEL JOSE GARCIA."

(From the United States Telegraph, of Feb. 17.)

It was rumoured at Vera Cruz, that the Colombian Government was fitting out an expedition to attack Cuba, and that the Mexican Government was to furnish a certain quota of the force. As a confirmation of the correctness of this report, it is stated that the Scio, Graves, of Philadelphia, had been chartered by the latter Government, to transport troops to Campeachy, which was to be the general rendezvous, and that it was in treaty for a number of other American vessels for the same purpose, they being preferred.

A number of troops had assembled at Vera Cruz, and more were momently looked for, as they were marching from all parts of the country. The quota of troops to be furnished by Mexico is said to be 7,500. The Colombian troops were assembling at Carthagena—the quota of that republic is said to be 12,500. The forces were expected to sail for the general rendezvous about the middle of January, and the combined army to arrive off Cuba about the 1st of April.

Those at Havannah, who were in favour of a more liberal government, were anxiously looking for the arrival of the expedition.

A very splendid dinner and ball was given at Vera Cruz on the occasion of the surrender of the Castle of St. Juan d'Ulloa.

PUENTO CAVELLO, Jan. 26.—An act of piracy the most horrible that can well be imagined was committed on this coast on the night of the 24th instant. A German, named Frederick, who had arrived with cocoa from Chorony, was returning thither with 4,000 dollors in gold, and had with him his wife, who had been spending some days in Puerto Cavello. This unfortunate woman had with her her best jewels, as is customary on such occasions; two other women also accompanied her to Chorony. Frederick anchored as usual off the island called "del Rey," to stop during the early part of the night. At eight o'clock they were surprised by about ten persons from Borburata, led on by one Julian Ibarra, alias Iztueta. These villains fell on them, and assassinated the three women and two sailors; Frederick jumped into the sea, and had the good fortune to reach the shore, where he lay concealed until the brigands withdrew. He then returned to the boat, in which he proceeded immediately to this port, bringing with him the killed and wounded, amounting to six, all of whom were buried yesterday, the wounded having died a few hours after their arrival. It filled one with horror to behold these unfortunate wretches covered with stabs. Colonels Cala, Bogueir, and Esteves, immediately despatched a flechera with troops to Borburata, under the command of Captain Batista, who, after apprehending Julian and three of his accomplices, returned hither yesterday morning. These criminals are to be forthwith tried by the Admiralty Court, and will doubtless suffer death in a few days.

The French papers of Monday were chiefly filled with political discussion. Those devoted to the Royalist interest contain long panegyrics on the virtues, and minute details on the funeral, of Duke Mathieu de Montmorency. The following are extracts:—

(From the Etoile, dated Wednesday, March 29.)

A letter from Vienna, of the 18th of March, says—"It would be difficult to describe the state of our capital for some days past. The people, who from the first notice of the Emperor's illness, crowded to the court-yard of the palace, and even into the antechamber of the Sovereign, to learn the contents of the bulletins, and to the churches, where the multitude implored, with the most ardent prayers, the preservation of the life of their beloved Monarch, gave loose to the most lively joy as soon as it was declared that the danger was past. The crowds which went to the church of St. Stephen, where Te Deum was performed on the happy occasion, was such, that a vast number of persons could scarcely enter, and there were at the doors 1,200 noblemen's and gentlemen's carriages, besides an infinite number of hackney-coaches.

'Three salutes of artillery and musketry announced this happy event to the inhabitants of the environs. Dr. Standenheimer, who at the critical moment was brought by the Empress into his Majesty's apartment, and after having held a consultation with a physician in ordinary, Baron Stifft, insisted on taking more blood from the patient, which produced the desired relief, has received a valuable snuff-box from the Empress.

"General Count Guilleminot arrived yesterday evening. This morning he was admitted to a private audience of the Dauphin and Dauphiness. This afternoon, at four o'clock, he will have a private audience of the King.

"Accounts from Bucharest, of the 9th of March, say that on the 22d of February nothing was said of the arrival of Mr. S. Canning at Constantinople. The Greek journals are circulated without hindrance in that capital, while they are prohibited in Russia.

(From the Pilote of Tuesday.)

"AUGSBURG, March 20.—We have been in the greatest consternation here for some days, on account of the alarming news of the illness of the Emperor of Austria. As the official bulletins give but an imperfect knowledge of the dangers which have threatened the life of their sovereign, I will add all the details that I have been able to collect, not only respecting the illness which had nearly carried off the Emperor, but also to the remoter causes which led to it; and lastly, to the political causes which the death of Francis I. may one day produce.

"For several years past the constitution of this Prince has been visibly impaired, but it was particularly during his stay at Presburg that the disorder assumed a decided character. The physicians call his disorder a phthisical fever; asserting, however, that the life of his Majesty may be prolonged many years. A careful regimen, to which his Majesty is accustomed, and above all a pure and salubrious air, were however indispensable to prolong his life, as well as to avoid the sudden attacks to which he was subject at certain seasons of the year. The climate of Vienna not being quite suitable, because it is at all times rigorous, and and often variable, we see why there was (and still is) an idea of a visit to Italy, and even of fixing the imperial residence in that beautiful country, either in one of the great cities of Austrian Lombardy or at Florence, which has particular recommendations, both as his Majesty's native city, and on account of the purity and salubrity of its atmosphere. As for the political consequences to which the death of the Emperor would lead, there are various reports in circulation respecting the person of his eventual successor. According to that which enjoys the most credit, though we are far from warranting its authenticity, the Archduke Ferdinand, the Emperor's eldest son, who, as heir apparent to the throne, has the title of Prince Imperial, has renounced it beforehand; this Prince being too fond of a studious life not to sacrifice to it every kind of ambition, even that of one day wearing one of the greatest crowns in Europe. It is pretended that an act of resign tion, signed by this Prince, is deposited in the archives of the several kingdoms which compose the Austrian monarchy. It is added, that stipulations to this effect are contained in the act signed at Tegernsee on the marriage of the Archduke Francis Charles, the Emperor's second son, to the Princess Sophia, of Bavaria; and that this Prince will immediately succeed the Emperor Francis. Lastly, people go so far as to affirm that the Prince Imperial had already taken orders, and intends to fill a high station in the church. None of these transactions would be made public.

IRISH ASSIZES.

CARLOW, March 20.—CROWN COURT.

Lord Norbury entered the Crown Court at 12 o'clock, when the panel was called over, and the gentleman sworn on the grand jury list, Walter Blackney, Esq., after repeated calls, came forward and expressed to his Lordship an unwillingness to join the grand jury, as he was, in his magisterial capacity, and as a witness, closely interwoven with a criminal case that should come before that body. The objection was, however, overruled by his Lordship.

SINGULAR EXAMINATIONS.

Stephen Harpur, a deaf man, was examined on a trial, that of James Curran, charged with stealing a horse.

Cross-examined by Mr. Bethel—Prisoner was in witness's employment for years: prisoner was lent money and trusted. Paid him 3s. wages the night before.

Lord Norbury—How is corn now, Finlay?—"Getting up, my Lord."

Lord Norbury—"Oh, we'll all get up by-and-by." (A laugh.)

Philip Newton, Esq. knew the man to be employed by Mr. Crosthwaite; knew nothing ill of him; heard them give a high character of Harpur.

In charging the jury, Lord Norbury said that Harpur gave a fair testimony—"he was no blind Harpur"—(A laugh.)—Guilty.

Mr. Bethel appealed to his Lordship for remittance of the amount of punishment of the prisoner by a short confinement. His Lordship, who assented, said, "Why, Mr. Bethel, as they are meal-mongers—you have sifted them well." (A laugh.)

On another trial Lord Norbury asked—Is your husband a common labouring man?—"Yes, my Lord." Upon my word, you are a very decorous-looking woman—a respectable woman—a high character—(Great laughter.)

The husband was brought up—said he lived on Colonel Butler's land.

Lord Norbury—You are very fortunate in having such a woman for your wife.

Husband—Thank your Lordship; she is the mother of ten children, your Lordship. I hope your Lordship will give her a trifle for the children. (Roars of laughter, in which his Lordship heartily joined.)

James Sheridan and Richard Hurley were indicted for stealing four sheep, the property of Nicholas Wilson.

N. Wilson said he traced his sheep to a person of the name of Hetherington, &c.

The following dialogue took place between this witness and Lord Norbury:—

Lord Norbury (to Wilson)—Who's your landlord?

Wilson—Captain Crichly was, my Lord; but he is now diseased (deceased.)—(Laughter.)

Lord Norbury—Where do you live?

Wilson—I live in Hacketstown, my Lord.

Lord Norbury—At Hacketstown! ay. You recollect the rebellion. Were you at the battle of Hacketstown?

Wilson—I was, my Lord—but doing no harm; I was only a little chap—about the height of my stick.

Lord Norbury—Were you there when Hanlon the Newryman was hanged?—No answer.

Lord Norbury—Are you strong in your farm?

Wilson—I am, my Lord.

Lord Norbury—You're a monstrous clever fellow—take care of your farm, and be ready to fight for it.

Wilson (making a profoundly modest acknowledgment)—Long life to your Lordship.

Lord Norbury—How many sheep did you lose?

Wilson—Four, my Lord.

Lord Norbury (to the Clerk of the Crown)—Well, give him four guineas. And, do you hear, Sir? put that in your pocket, go home, take care of your farm, and don't be afraid of the rebels. (Immense laughter.)—Acquitted.

James and Mary Kenny, for stealing wearing apparel, the property of Pat. Bulger.

His Lordship indignantly inquired, what magistrate had sent such a case to assizes? He was about to send it to the quarter sessions, as before the proper tribunal, until he learned that the prisoners had been already six months in custody. He then examined the prosecutor, who stated that the prisoners, man and wife, came to his house to look for lodgings, that having got in, they rose at night and stole the articles in question.

Lord Norbury.—Give this poor man 30s.; acquit the wife, as she acted under the influence of her husband: find the husband guilty, and make way for Mr. Brown.

A woman was indicted for stealing notes from a man named Coady.

Chief Baron O'Grady.—Coady, you can only prove that she took 14l., and you acknowledge ou owe her 20l. Now suppose you pay her the balance? I only throw it out as a hint; we will leave it to your honour.

Coady danced abont the table like a madman, and asked his Lordship did he want to join in robbing him too? (Great Laughter.)

It was then proposed to the prosecutor that he should receive 22l. 2s. 9d. in the hands of Captain Wright of the Police; and that 6l. should be added to the 14l. taken by the female prisoner.

Coady made a furious appeal to his Lordship—"Was it honest or honourable, or justice, or any thing, for a poor man like him to be robbed by such rogues? Why, what was now proposed was 8l. less than what he was offered yesterday."

Chief Baron.—Yes; but I think you may very fairly allow us the other 8l. for all the trouble we have had with you to day. (Laughter.)

A man was indicted for stealing an old saddle. One of the retiring Jury, not considering 6 months' imprisonment sufficient punishment for stealing an old saddle, wished to retire. His lordship directed that the old saddle be given to him, that he might retire upon it. (Loud laughing.)—Not Guilty.

Owen Conroy was indicted for stealing twelve stone weight of potatoes, the property of Thomas Hill. The proseeutor, a schoolmaster, swore, that worried by repeated thefts, and weary of watching his potatoes, he drove pins of bogwood into these potatoes; that on the night of stealth, he found potatoes in prisoner's house corresponding to those he lost.

Court.—Who knows that the prisoner did not pin his own potatoes? (Laughter.)

"Oh, no, my Lord, my pins were peculiar; some were long, some short, and some designedly broken." (Laughter.)—Guilty.

The next case of interest was the trial of the Charter-school teacher for cruelty.

A witness stated, that after each of five or six whippings with a rope, he was sent back to work a sum, which he did not perform.

The Court observed that he was getting the sum on the wrong end. (Laughter.)

Lord Norbury, Chief of the Common Pleas, and Baron O'Grady, Chief of the Exchequer, have gone Circuit together on the present occasion.

TYRONE.—Owen and James Cleary, James Henry, and Peter Devlin, were indicted for the murder of Francis M'Cullough, at Bannyfeagh, on the night of the 6th of Nov. 1825.—(The deceased was a gamekeeper of Sir William M'Mahon, the Master of the Rolls.)

Alicia M'Cullough, examined by Mr. Johnston.—(Witness said she understood some English words, but could not speak it—she was examined by an interpreter, one of the turnkeys of the gaol.)—She said she knew Francis M'Cullough; he was her husband; he is dead. She recollected the night of the 6th of November last: on that night she and her husband went early to bed: she retired to rest before he did, and he barred the door of the house. Her husband and herself were the only persons in the house; some time after they had retired to rest, they heard a noise about the house; her husband started up in his bed. The door was soon after broken open, and the first thing she saw was the prisoner Owen Cleary coming in, and Peter Devlin coming in after him; another man came in after him, but she did not know him; she had sufficient light from the fire to know them. After they come in, they beat her husband; they then beat herself. She saw her husband striking at them with his fist: Peter Devlin struck her husband. There was a big fire put on in the evening, and there was sufficient light from it to enable her to distinguish the persons. After they struck her, she got up from her bed, and hid from them; she did not know who struck her; she was severely beaten, and stabbed in one of her feet. In the morning she found herself sore and bruised. She escaped from them by hiding herself under some rushes and heath. They dragged her husband out of the house. She could not say what arms they had. She did not leave the place she was concealed in till they quitted her husband, but she heard him crying out to them, "For God's sake, do not murder me!" and she heard him shouting outside of the house. When he came in, and the party had quitted him, she heard him moaning dreadfully. She also heard the voice of James Devlin, and saw him outside of the door. They were neighbours, and she knew his voice; she heard Henry Devlin bidding them beat her, for that she was as bad as her husband; then Devlin said, he did not know how she could have escaped from them; she heard one of the Clearys say, she had hid in the thatch; they then searched for, but did not find her, and when they could not find her they left the house. Her husband died before day-light the next morning; he was very ill when he came in, and she said to him, "Frank, my dear, you are killed," and he said to her, "I am."

Here a question of law arose, and was argued by counsel on both sides, on the admissibility in evidence of the dying declaration of the deceased, on the ground of his not being conscious at the time of his immediate death.

Dr. Hamilton was then called and examined.—Witness is a surgeon; he visited the deceased immediately after his death: deceased had two large wounds on the side of his head, and one on his forehead; several on his arms and thighs, and one on his belly, which let out his intestines, and which, of itself, was sufficient to occasion his death; his skull was not fractured.

Mr. Justice Jebb cited several cases on which he grounded his opinion, that the deceased's declarations made to his wife in this case were admissible, namely, 2d Leach's Reports, 566, 638; Archbold's Criminal Pleadings, second edition; and decided that the evidence should be received.

The examination of the prosecutrix was resumed.—Witness said, she asked her husband if he knew the persons that beat him, he said he knew some of them: the party were Black Peter's family and the Clearys; Black Peter's was the name the family always were called; their names were James, Peter and Henry; James Cleary resided near them, but Owen lived far away; they all lived in the town land: she had no knowledge of any quarrel between her husband and the Clearys before this; they had some dispute about a mountain; her husband had taken a lease of the mountain, which was formerly held by the prisoners; they were always talking about the mountain; she knew the several prisoners since they were children; the Devlins are her sister's children.—(Witnrss identified the five prisoners.)

Here Counsellor Rolleston cross-examined the witness at great length, and with his usual talents and ingenuity, but elicited no fact from her evidence which had the effect of weakening her direct testimony.

The prisoners' defence consisted of an alibi, which it was believed was sufficient to warrant the jury in acquitting the prisoners; but after two hours' consultation they returned their verdict—Acquitting James Cleary and Henry Devlin, and finding Peter and James Devlin, and Owen Cleary, guilty. Sentence—to be hanged on Monday, the 20th ult.

OXFORD CIRCUIT.—MONMOUTH, March 28.

CROWN SIDE.—Before Mr. Justice PARK.

Abraham Owen, a very respectable looking countryman, was indicted for the wilful murder of Morgan Saunders, by choking and strangling him with his hands.

Mr. Maule stated, that on the 12th of November the unfortunate affair occurred. On the evening of that day, the deceased, who was foreman to Messrs. Hunt, who were ironmasters, had appointed the workmen to be paid at a public house. It happened, that outside the public house a man kicked a dog, belonging to a person named Williams. That person interfered, and the man beat him, when the deceased came out, and a person who was with the man who beat the dog, said, that his friend would fight any one. The deceased declined fighting; but the person who kicked the dog, rushed at him, and seized the deceased by the throat, threw him down, and held him so fast by the throat, that in less than half a minute Morgan Saunders was a corpse. This occurred in a November night, and it was not easy to see persons; but one witness, who would be called, would state, that the prisoner was the person who so fell upon the deceased. With regard to the law of the case, he apprehended that if one man attacked another, intending to do him any mischief, and death ensued, that would be murder.

Philip Williams examined by Mr. Justice, said—I am a mason, I worked for the deceased. I was at the Pentwyn Tavern on the 10th of November; that is near Pontypool. I went out of the house between seven and eight o'clock. We had been receiving our wages from the deceased. He was a mason, having men in his employ. I had a dog with me. When I went out of the house, there were two men standing on the road; one of them was a bigger man than the other. Morgan Saunders was then in the house. The bigger man kicked my dog, which cried out; I asked him why he did so, and he knocked me down and kicked me; I cried out murder. Mark Price, one of my fellow workmen, then came out of the house, and asked the man whether he meant to kill me, and he knocked Price down, and kicked him on the ground, and then returned to me, and taking me by the hair of the head, he began kicking me again. Morgan Saunders and others then came out, and the bigger man, who had been at us, let me loose, and went up to the deceased, and either he, or the man who was with him, cried out, that he would fight any man upon the road.—Morgan Saunders said, I am no fighting man, and don't strike me, for if you do, you will repent it. The bigger man who had beaten me struck Morgan Saunders.

Cross-examined by Mr. Russell.—Our party there was eight or ten persons, or more. They were all Saunders's men. They had been used to be paid there, and to spend sixpence or a shilling a-piece there; Price and I went out about the same time, and the two men were twenty yards off. When my dog was kicked, I raised my hand, and I believe his hat went off. When I raised my hand, it went against his head, and I suppose his hat went off. This was before he knocked me down. When Price was knocked down, I was within a yard of him, but I was on the ground. When the deceased came out, a dozen people were with him—all the mason's men. They all came up to the bigger man, who then retreated from me, and struck Morgan Saunders.

Re-examined.—I was quite sober, and so was the deceased. I raised my hand, because he was striking me.

James Duffield examined—I am the landlord of the public-house; I heard a woman cry out murder; I went out and saw the deceased, with the hands of another man pressed round his throat; the man's back was against the bank; I cried out, you villain, you are throttling the man—loose him, if you don't I will strike you; he did not loose him, and I gave him a blow; I could form no opinion of the man's size; I was struck down and kicked severely; I got up and seized the man whom I believed to have kicked me; that proved to be James Owen, the prisoner's brother; I took him into my house, and on going out again I met several persons coming towards my house, and they were beating some man with clubs; I cried out, don't beat him, bring him in quietly, and they partly loosed him, and he made a struggle, and leaped over the hedge; he jumped down a precipice of eighteen or twenty feet, into a brook; the deceased and his men were sober; the shot of the whole party was eight and sixpence, and the party was about ten or twelve; all of them the deceased's men.

Mr. Thomas, a surgeon, examined by Mr. Maule—I examined the body on Sunday, the 13th of November; I examined his throat; it had the marks of four finger nails on one side of it; the skin was off; I saw no other appearance of violence; I also examined his lungs, and from the appearance of those, I conceive that he died of suffocation caused by strangling; I observed a livid appearance about the ears and neck, and down the back; that also indicated strangulotion; I think that was the real cause of the death; he appeared otherwise healthy. I have been in practice 23 years; I opened the head, the throat, and chest; I don't think that great exertions would have caused these appearances.

The prisoner said in his defence, that as he stood in the road, a dog ran against him, and after that a man came up and knock d his hat off; the man and he scuffled, and a crowd came and beat and kicked him; he tried to get away, but they beat and kicked him very much.

Evidence for the prisoner:—

William Boswell said, I am a navigator; I went to receive my wages of Mr. Charles Trew; I met the prisoner there; we were paid at a public-house, called the Gallon House; we were a great many; at that house they don't sell beer by less quantity than a gallon at a time; we had beer there; it is not allowed to be drank in the house; the prisoner had drank a great deal of beer; I went to a Tommy shop (a shop where provisions are sold to navigators). The prisoner and I then joined company again; and as we were standing near the Pentwyn public-house, two men and a dog came out of the house; the prisoner threw out his foot, and the dog appeared to run against it, and the dog gave a sort of a squall; the owner of the dog came up, and knocked off his hat, and said, what did you kick my dog for? The man then ran, and the prisoner ran after him and overtook him; I did not see the prisoner knock him down, but he was down. Another man came up, and said something, and the prisoner struck him, and that man ran into the house. A number of persons came out of the house, and I told the prisoner's brother that the men were going to beat him. A man, named Wheeler, was there; I fetched them out of the house; and when I went out I saw the prisoner and deceased down, and I saw some men kicking the prisoner on the side. This was against the bank. More than one kick was given, but I kept away, as I had some things in a handkerchief.

Mr. Justice Park recapitulated the facts of the case to the Jury, and left it to them to say, whether the prisoner was guilty of murder or manslaughter.

The Jury, after deliberating for about a quarter of an hour, found the prisoner Guilty of Murder.

The Learned Judge, after commenting in a very feeling manner on the enormity of the case, sentenced the prisoner to be hanged, and ordered him for execution on Thursday next.

Beer Brewers, &c.—1825: The number of intermediate brewers (persons who brew beer of an intermediate strength, between strong and table, under 4th Geo. IV. cap. 51) in Great Britain, is 26; common brewers, 1,904; victuallers who brew their own beer, 22,847. Total number of persons licensed to brew beer of all descriptions, 24,777.—1826: intermediate brewers, 10; common brewers, 1,599; victuallers, 23,248; retail brewers, 971. Total, 25,828.—Number of barrels of beer brewed: strong, 6,961,471; intermediate, 7,054; table, 1,692,188.

War.—Mr. Thrust, late a Captain in the Royal Navy, whose renouncement of his profession upon conscientious principles most people must remember, has lately published "Observations on the Causes and Evils of War," intended as an apology for withdrawing himself from the Naval Service.—"It is certainly a hard case," says the Gentleman's Magazine, remarking upon this pamphlet, "that a fighting cock should kill an unoffending craven; that the earthquake should swallow a child in a cradle, and that passions create vices; but we are inclined to think that such evils are only permitted because they are necessary instruments of effecting some greater good."—Captain Thrust says, "when Christianity arrives at maturity, armies will disappear;" and no doubt we shall catch sparrows when we can put salt on their tails."

THE ARMY.

Detachments belonging to the 25th, 36th, and 90th Regiments of Foot, arrived in town on Thursday, from Portsmouth, on route to join their respective Depots.

The Depot of the 97th Regiment of Infantry, embarked on the 28th instant, at Liverpool, for Dublin.

A Detachment belonging to the East India Company's Service, was ordered to embark on Thursday, at Billingsgate, for Gravesend, on route to Chatham.

Detachments belonging to the 80th and 90th Regiments of infantry, marched on Thursday morning, from Westminster, for Coventry.

A Detachment belonging to the Royal Staff Corps was ordered to embark on Thursday at Deptford. as a guard, on board the Chapman convict ship, destined for New South Wales.

The following is a copy of a letter from the Adjutant-General addressed to Colonel Wyndham of the 10th Royal Hussars:—

"Horse Guards, March 7, 1826.

"Sir—Having laid your letter of the 3d inst. before the Commander-in-Chief, I have it in command to acquaint you that his Royal Highness is satisfied with the explanation given of the late transaction at Exeter.

"His Royal Highness has commanded me, at the same time, to remark, that Major Græme has failed, from a mistaken lenity on this occasion, in the duty due from him to the support of the discipline of the service, by not bringing private Harvey to an immediate Court Martial, upon the first appearance of his refractory conduct. I am instructed to add, that the Commander-in-Chief has derived great gratification from the report made by the Magistracy at Exeter, of the good conduct of the 10th Hussars.

I have the Honour, &c.

(Signed) H. TORRENS, A. G.

"Col. Wyndham, 10th Hussars."

CRIMINAL LAWS.

Mr. Peel's Bill for Consolidating and Amending the Laws in England, relative to Larceny and similar offences, has been printed, as amended by the Committee.

The first part of the process of amendment, is repeal. It begins with the Chartâ de Foresta, a Statute of so early date as the 9th of Henry III., which contains the punishment for stealing the King's deer. Thsn follows an Act of the 3d of Edward I. against trespassers in parks and ponds. Afterwards the trespassers in the King's Forests of vert and venison, statutes relating to hawks, an Act against stealing, or withdrawing of any Record, and so on, through a great variety of laws against thefts and spoliations of different kinds, the titles to some of which Acts are sufficiently vague, while others are remarkably minute and particular; for instance, one (2d Jac. I. c. 27.) "against the destroying of hares with hare pipes, and tracing hares in the snow;" another (13 Geo. III. c. 32.) "for more effectually preventing the stealing or destroying of turnips, potatoes, cabbage, parsnips, pease, and carrots;" and a third (13 Geo. III. c. 33,) "for extending the provisions for preservation of timber-trees, woods, underwoods, roots, shrubs, and plants, to poplar, alder, maple, larch, and hornbeam." This minuteness of specification, reminds us of the Country Justice, who was puzzled by a charge against a juvenile offender for stealing gooseberries. "Look out the Gooseberry Act," said he to his clerk; but as no such title could be found in the statutes, the young rogue was suffered to escape, for want of a law to protect this particular species of fruit.

The present Bill enumerates no less than ninety-five Statutes, which, in whole or part, it repeals. It then proceeds to enact the punishments applicable to the following offences—robbery from the person—stealing from the person—stealing in a church—breaking and entering a dwelling house, and stealing therein—stealing in a dwelling house, and one therein being put in fear—stealing in a dwelling house to the value of 40s.—stealing from furnished houses and lodgings—stealing goods in any shop or warehouse—breaking and entering any coach-house or stable and stealing therein—stealing goods from any vessel on a canal or navigable river, or in any port, or from any wharf or quay—stealing lead, iron, or other fixtures, from any buildings—stealing, destroying, or damaging with intent to destroy, various specified kinds of trees—and also other trees, shrubs, fences, &c.—stealing, destroying, &c. any vegetable production in a garden or nursery, and also in other places—stealing from certain mines—stealing records, wills, public securities, British or foreign, bonds, bills, notes, and writings—stealing horses, sheep, cows, &c.—stealing deer from inclosed grounds, and also from uninclosed grounds—entering warrens, and there killing and taking hares or rabbits in the night-time, and also in the day-time, or setting snares there—stealing dogs, beasts, or birds, usually kept in confinement—destroying pigeons—entering inclosed places, and there stealing fish in rivers, ponds, &c.—also taking or destroying fish in waters adjacent to inclosures—stealing oysters, or oyster brood, from oyster beds—unlawfully dredging for oysters within the limits of any fishery—stealing silk, woollen, linen, or cotton goods from bleaching places—plundering wrecks—stealing goods, money, notes, &c. from masters or employers by any clerk, apprentice, or servant—embezzlement by servants, clerks, &c.—also, by agents, with whom money, notes, &c. are entrusted for safe custody, investment, or other special purpose—agents pledging for their own use goods or documents relating to goods entrusted to them for consignment or sale—obtaining money or goods under false pretences—receiving goods knowing them to be stolen.

The Bill also enacts the general punishments for Grand and Petit Larceny, and makes a great variety of provisions for the more effectual detection of certain crimes, by authorising search to be made in particular cases; and also authorising persons found in the prosecution of certain illegal pursuits to be arrested, and detained without warrant. It distinguishes as to first and second offences—prevents the taking away of a witness's competency, by reason of a conviction of petty larceny—gives a discretion in certain cases, to a Justice, to discharge a first offender; and allows an appeal in all cases of summary conviction.

Such are the outlines of this Bill, which, we doubt not, will be found no less efficient in its provisions, than it is comprehensive in its extent.

WESTMINSTER ABBEY.

The Return of the Dean and Chapter of the Collegiate Church of St. Peter, Westminster, to the Order of the Honourable House of Commons, dated 16th March, 1826, for an account of the Sums charged by the Dean and Chapter of Westminster for the admission of each visitor to view the public Monuments in that Abbey: the total amount received from that source, in each year, for the last five years, and how the same has been appropriated.

The Dean and Chapter of Westminster are unable to make the precise return described in the order of your Honourable House. The order requires an account of the sums charged for admission to view the "Public Monuments" in the Abbey. But no charge has ever been made for viewing the "Public Monuments," as distinguished from the private ones. The whole are viewed together for a fixed sum; and by far the greatest part of the Monuments are those of private persons; for viewing which, the greatest part of the charges is incurred. The Dean and Chapter, however, having not the smallest wish that any part of the subject should be concealed, will furnish such information as they possess concerning it, though beyond the terms of the order of your Honourable House.

1st. As to the sums charged for the admission of each visitor to view the monuments, private as well as public, for the last five years:—

Before his Majesty's Coronation, in 1821, the whole sum permitted to be charged was one shilling and eleven-pence. But the guides had obtained additional gratuities from the visitors, and complaints were made against these exactions. When the Church was re-opened, after his Majesty's Coronation, a new order was therefore made, and the utmost sum to be received was two shillings, all compensation to the guides being included in this sum.

This regulation, under which less was paid by the public than before, was continued till June, 1825, when the sum was lowered to one shilling and three-pence.

2d, The total amount received from the above source in each year, for the last five years:—

1822	-	-	-	-	2,317	9	3
1823	-	-	-	-	1,664	13	9
1824	-	-	-	-	1,529	0	5
1825	-	-	-	-	1,585	1	0

3d. How the same has been appropriated:—

All the above sums have been received by the minor canons and the gentlemen of the choir, and divided among themselves, after portions allowed to the officers of the choir; the Dean and Chapter neither interfering, nor knowing when the division was made.

This grant was made to the Choir in the year 1697, on the condition that, receiving the benefits from the exhibitions of the monuments, they should keep the monuments always clean. This, however, had not been done, and when the Dean and Chapter wished, after his Majesty's Coronation, to give to the Abbey as much beauty as possible, they cleaned all the monuments at their own private expence, with the sole exception of the Royal Monuments, which were subsequently repaired and cleaned, without any agency of the Dean and and Chapter, who only knew the amount of the charge for that work from the list of contingencies lately submitted to Parliament.

The Dean and Chapter have made the above statement, in order to meet the wishes of your Honourable House. They will now beg leave to say a few words on behalf of themselves.

They would humbly represent, that their church is entitled to its share of the general favour and protection given by law and usage to the Church of England at large, and that it has its common rights, which it must always be anxious to preserve.

It is their duty and their pride to represent farther to your Hon. House, that they have the honour to hold their church under a special charter, granted by the benevolence of the Crown. In this charter Queen Elizabeth has, of her free bounty, conferred the Church on the Dean and Chapter for ever, and has subjected it to their sole and lawful management.

And farther, their founder has not only empowered, but required them to defend the privileges and immunities which she has thus bestowed upon them, against all aggression or encroachment.

By order of the Dean and Chapter,
GEORGE GILES VINCENT,
Chapter Clerk.

BALLOON ASCENT.

Wednesday Mr. Green, accompanied by his brother, made his 48th ascent, from the Eagle Tavern tea-gardens, City-road. It being expected that a great concourse of people would assemble on the occasion, strong barriers were erected against the avenues leading to the gardens, a precaution which in the sequel was found very useful, for long before the hour fixed for the ascent, immense crowds had collected in the lane leading to the tavern, and in the part of the City-road in the front of it, and also in the fields at the back. On the whole, as great a number was collected on the present as on any former occasion during the last year—a circumstance which, when the frequency of exhibitions of the kind is considered, may at first excite surprise, and can only be accounted for from the curtailment or suppression which of late has taken place of many of the popular amusements of the present period. The space within the gardens was also very well filled, the price having been reduced to 1s. with the exception of a small inner circle, in which the balloon was fixed, the admission to which was 2s. In all, the number collected in the gardens could not be less than 1,000, among whom were a great proportion of very genteelly dressed persons of both sexes. A band was as usual stationed in the gardens, who in the course of the afternoon played a variety of favourite airs. The process of inflating the balloon was completed by noon, after which the preparations for the ascent were tardily proceeded with, it evidently being designed to delay the ascent till as late an hour as could coveniently be done, and which was the more excusable as crowds of persons kept arriving long after four o'clock. By half-past four, however, tee preparatious were annnounced to be complete, and a pilot balloon was despatched, which taking a north-easterly direction, was soon out of sight. In a few minutes afterwards, Mr. Green and his brother placed themselves in the car attached to the balloon, The signal for letting go the ropes was then given, and the balloon, after rising a height of nearly 200 feet perpendicularly, so as admirably to clear the trees and surrounding houses, bore away in the direction taken by its precursor, and mounting higher and higher, was in less than five minutes lost to sight. Although the wind was rather high for an expedition of this kind, the balloon did not oscillate in the least. At 10 o'clock at night Messrs. Green returned to the Eagle in the City-road. It appears they had landed without any difficulty near Barking. Their return was greeted with considerable applause.

Mr. Green made another assent with his balloon on Thursday, from the Bowing-green of the Eagle Tavern, City-road. He was accompanied by his brother and Master Green.

The Lady in Search of a Husband.—On Sunday, at three o'clock, immense crowds were attracted to Merrion-square, by an advertisement that appeared in a Morning Paper, in which "a Lady" announced her intention of perambulating the north side of the square, in the expectation of receiving a matrimonial proposal. Carriages and four, and pair, and vehicles drawn each by only one horse, dashed along, containing les curieux, who, while they and the pedestrian smiled at the credulity of others, in being duped into giving their attendance on the pare upon so absurd an occasion, forgot that by being there, they themselves "dropped in" also the victims of a waggish advertisement. One female of respectability, habited accidentally nearly as the article described, appeared about four o'clock, leaning on a Gentleman, and was quickly surrounded by such a mob of well and ill-dressed persons, that she was right well pleased to seek shelter beneath the hospitable roof of a Gentleman residing in lower Merrion-street. One of the frail sisterhood, habited in Keodal-green bonnet and robe, with a dashing white plume of feathers nodding over her locks, was returning from Sandymount about a quarter after four; some one exclaimed, "There she is!" and hundreds instantly rushed along, shouting and pressing forward in so troublesome a way, that she also was obliged to seek shelter, and was protected by peace-officer Sheil and others. The celebrated Mr. Anthooy Frank, who is still unprovided with a helpmate, was "in attendance." The crowd immediateiy recognised him, and proceeded to treat him with considerable roughness. Alarmed by their manoer, he besought the protection of the peace officers who were present, and was by them conveyed to a place of safety.—Freeman's Journal.

THE AGE.

LONDON, APRIL 2.

THE KING.

We are rejoiced to state that HIS MAJESTY is convalescent. The harsh winds have hitherto retarded his complete recovery. But the milder weather, which seems about to set in, will we hope effect his complete restoration.

HIS MAJESTY is supposed to have abandoned Brighton altogether; and the folly of at least a portion of its inhabitants amply deserved its punishment. Avarice and ingratitude ought to suffer. But the Brighton air was always found salutary to HIS MAJESTY; and it would be much to be regretted that any circumstance should stand as an impediment to a result so nationally important as the health of the SOVEREIGN. Change of air is one of the great secrets of prolonging life; even the change from a good air to a worse has, for a period, a salutary effect. Windsor is marshy and monotonous; and we strongly doubt whether all HIS MAJESTY'S drives through the deep verdure and unsunned avenues of its noble park could give him half the spring and vividness of frame that might be found, even in the blasts that scour the cliffs and downs of Brighton. We should like to see a deputation from the town to invite him back.

If any thing were necessary to root more deeply than it now is the love of the people to their SOVEREIGN, it is enough to say, that HIS MAJESTY, sensibly affected by the distressed situation of the SPITALFIELDS WEAVERS, and their daily increasing misfortunes, has presented the Committee with a second donation of 1000*l.* and we are induced to hope, that such an illustrious example, in so deserving a cause, will be followed by all classes of the KING'S subjects, according to their respective capabilities.

The Newspapers are still loaded with whole columns of the late Chancery Commission. Nothing can be more abominable than this waste of paper and printing. Are there no "Fires" to feed paragraphs, no Irish quarrels, no speeches of SIR WM. CONGREVE, no poems of my LORD NUGENT, no puns of LUTTREL, with a much older pedigree than himself, no demands of HORACE TWISS for the Chancellorship of the Exchequer, now that he has declined the Chief Justiceship of the King's Bench! Has no one horsewhipped BROUGHAM on the circuit? Have the fooleries and afflictions of this bustling world all run dry so suddenly, that even the Morning Post, "as silly as its sheep," should fill whole perches and furlongs with this preposterous stuff, which no man but the writers will ever read, and which ten to one if the writers themselves understand. Our old and tender friend the Post looks miserable in this Chancery Suit. The Chronicle has lost its jokes, and they are often pleasant enough; "our flat friend," the Courier, overloads his natural gravity with this lugubrious costume, and the whole tribe look like a procession of undertakers' men at the funeral of Common Sense.

Does the Commission contrive that the Lord Chancellor shall do a hundred things at once? No.—Does it contrive that he shall be at White-hall and at Lincoln's-Inn at the same moment? No.—Or in default of this, does it divide his offices, and put men capable of doing at least the minor duties, managing the Bankrupt Commissions, the Lunatics, the Wards in Chancery, the Lords' Appeals, &c., leaving to his Lordship the controul in Equity, and his place in the Cabinet? (though, why a Judge should have a place in the Cabinet, is altogether inconceivable.) If they have not done something of this, they have done nothing but waste paper, pens, ink, and play the deuce with the circulation of the Newspapers.

ESPIONAGE AND MR. CANNING!

We are Englishmen from top to toe; we hate slavery, lettres de cachet, and wooden shoes, in our inmost souls; and, as the consummation of all, we hate a French police. What must be our astonishment to find that the system is actually on foot among ourselves. That individual movements are traced step by step, that a man cannot mount his horse, nor turn that horse's nose to any point of the compass without an "Espion" at his tail. We give an abstract of this system in its surveillance of a very respectable gentleman, in whom we have not hitherto detected any treasonable intentions. We question whether a closer map of a suspected person's movements was ever deposited in the bureau of the Bastile.

The document has got wind, and is thus given in a Morning Paper. The accuracy of the observations are formidable:—

Tuesday Morning, soon after seven o'clock, Mr. Secretary CANNING left town, and proceeded as far as Marlborough, where the Right Honourable Gentleman slept that night. Early on Wednesday morning he proceeded to Bath, where he remained during that day and night. At ten o'clock on Thursday morning Mr. CANNING left Bath, and proceeded on his way to London to Salt Hill, where he arrived about six o'clock to dinner, where he was met by Mr. STAPLETON, his private secretary, who had come from London in consequence of some important business occurring in the Foreign Office, which required the immediate attention of Mr. CANNING. Soon after eleven o'clock yesterday morning, the Right Hon. Gentleman left Salt Hill on horseback, his saddle horse having arrived the previous evening at Salt Hill from London. The Right Hon. Gentleman rode to the KING'S Lodge at Windsor, where he remained two hours, during which time he had a long audience of HIS MAJESTY, to take his commands on some state business; after which Mr. CANNING mounted his saddle horse again, and rode as far as Hounslow! where he dismounted, and entered his travelling carriage, which had followed him, and proceeding to London, arrived at his house in Downing-street, about four o'clock.

The Established Church has sustained a great loss in the death of the BISHOP of DURHAM. This prelate died on Saturday, the 25th ult. at his house in Cavendish-square. He was a manly, intelligent, and upright-minded man. He looked out for merit, and honoured it. Feeling that a Bishop's powers of protection and patronage are not given for himself, for the aggrandizement of his own family, or still worse, for the purpose of playing a political game, he exercised them in a way that we trust will long be an example to the Bench. As the result of this, the clergy of his diocess are now unquestionably the most learned, able, and active body of the Established Church. His Lordship was the youngest son of WILLIAM, first Viscount BARRINGTON. He was born May 26, 1734; was appointed Canon of Christchurch, 1761. In 1768 he was nominated Canon Residentiary of St. Paul's, and was raised to the See of Llandaff in 1769. In 1782 he was promoted to the See of Salisbury, whence he was removed, in 1791, to that of Durham. This prelate died, therefore in his 92d year, and had enjoyed the episcopal dignity for upwards of 57 years. He was twice married, but left no children. His first wife was Lady DIANA BEAUCLERC, a daughter of the Duke of St. ALBAN'S. His second lady was daughter and heiress of Sir JOHN GUISE, Bart., of Gloucestershire. The Bishop of DURHAM is represented to have been gifted with uncommon benevolence. His acts of munificence, though deliberate and discriminating, were as frequent as they were void of ostentation. Although he was inspired with a conscientious dread of the political results of admitting Catholics to exercise the powers of a Protestant State, he exhibited a practical example of the triumph of that feeling which binds us to our distressed fellow Christians. When a large body of foreign ecclesiastics found that refuge in Protestant England which, amongst people of their own faith and blood, had been denied to them, the Bishop of DURHAM was a generous protector to many of those exiles, while the dispenser and confidential director of his beneficence was Mr. CHARLES BUTLER, and who never forfeited the friendship of the Bishop, though engaged in a controversy with his Lordship's own chaplains. On the whole, the late Bishop may be described as employing wealth with liberality, power with moderation, zeal with meekness and charity, and learning with the industry of a conscientious clergyman.

His publications, which were first collected in 1811, consist of:—

A sermon, preached before the Lords, Westminster-abbey, 1772.

A sermon, preached before the Incorporated Society for the Propagation of the Gospel in Foreign Parts, Feb. 17, 1775.

A sermon, preached before the Lords, Fast-day, Feb. 27, 1799.

A charge delivered to the Clergy of the Diocess of Salisbury, 1783.

Four charges delivered to the Clergy of the Diocess of Durham, between the years 1791 and 1810.

A charge delivered to the Churchwardens of the Diocess of Durham, 1801.

A Letter to the Clergy of the Diocess of Salisbury, and a Circular Letter to the Acting Magistrates of the County Palatine of Durham.

Lord DEERHURST has made a public entry into Worcester, and has been received with every possible testimonial of popular enthusiasm. After a very general canvas of the city, the success HIS LORDSHIP expeperienced was so complete, as to place the chance of failure beyond the shadow of a doubt.

OBITUARY.

FOR ONE THOUSAND EIGHT HUNDRED AND FORTY-SIX!

WE have been so beset with remonstrances and petitions on this subject, most of them entertaining the suspicion of its being entirely abandoned, that we have no alternative but to continue it, from the great desire we are anxious at all times to manifest, of affording all possible amusement and information to our readers. It appears to us a most remarkable thing, that mankind are so solicitous to bestow the tribute of their respect, admiration, and grief over their friends when dead, whom, when living, they cannot treat with common civility or decency—a position that was never more fully developed, than in the numerous communications sent to us upon this very subject, the chief direction of which has been to desire a recapitulation of every virtue the deceased parties so eminently possessed, each particle of which they have one and all been aiming to deny them during their lives. In that spirit, however, upon which we have invariably acted, of speaking plainly, but truly, we have not been able to gratify the wishes of every one: and while we regret the necessity which has prevented us so doing, we are induced to believe that nearly all the survivors of the "departed" will find more "cardinal virtue" bestowed on most of their bygone relatives, than even their most sanguine expectations had led them to hope for.

"Few persons have gone down to that 'bourn from which no traveller returns,' more regretted than Mr. BALL HUGHES, just departed this life. As a wit, a scholar, a finished gentleman, a TENDER father, and a DEVOTED HUSBAND, he has left behind him no equal. About seven or eight-and-twenty years ago, this noble gentleman burst out upon the town with a fortune of nearly 700,000l., the greatest part of which he, with a too great liberality, gave away in the holy cause of Charity, retaining just enough to enable him to support his establishment in a becoming manner. Mr. HUGHES is a singular instance of the victims mankind are to calumny; for, in spite of his well known character, it has been malignantly said of him, that when he took Mademoiselle MERCANDOTTI, (the present Mrs. HUGHES) accompanied by her mother, out of town, in the year 1823, (on which event so many epigrams appeared, amongst which was the celebrated one of the facetious G. COLMAN, ending with

he had not the remotest idea of marrying her; but not being able to effect his purpose without, and urged by Lord FIFE, wheedled by the mother, and denied by the Lady, he finally consented. The tongue of slander has further said, that some time after his marriage, he had such a prediliction for a maid, instead of a matron, that he supported one for a long time at No. 139, Regent Street, from which place he removed her to the Quadrant, in the same street, and finally removed her to the Continent in the year 1826. They did also say that he was addicted to gambling, and lost heavy sums to the notorious CROCKFORD, part of which he never paid—and that the debt for the purchase of Oatlands from the then Duke of YORK, was never all discharged. But we have reason to believe that the whole of these reports are a tissue of malice, and invention. Mr. HUGHES spent a great part of his life with the late TOM RAIKES, (whose regard for his sister, Lady BURKE was well known.) They were at Paris together for some time, when Mr. H. acquired that perfection in the French language for which he was so distinguished; as a proof of which, the following epitaph was some time since written by himself, and is placed on his tombstone, agreeably to a codicil in his last will and testament.

Here's Mr. BALL HUGHES stretched at length,
Whom all the maids that knew, pay
A tribute of regret to find
Son vie est sitôt coupé!

We had always understood, that the late Lord De la Zouche was one of the most liberal men in existence, but the subjoined extract from the inscription on the monument, which the family has just erected to his memory, appears to deny the point:—

His life is spent, but few can bring
Their minds to be quite broken hearted,
As he never spent another thing
Until at last with life he parted.

The late Mr. John Mills, commonly called a specimen of Mosaic, from Duke's-place, was distinguished for many manly and agreeable qualities, and universally respected by all who had the pleasure of his acquaintance. He possessed such a fund of humour, and made himself so pleasant in society, that the tricks he played his friends, and which would have been deemed great liberties in any other persons, were all considered jokes in him—indeed on such intimate terms was he with Tom Raikes, that he, once at White's, threw a pack of cards in his face, without any notice being taken of it, and gave the lie to the late Mr. Lambton, M.P. many years ago, at Lambton Hall, without his host calling him out—to be sure a duel was "talked of," but whether from Mills being so brave and so good a shot, it was abandoned, or from any other cause, we really do not know. His particular traits of character are thus recorded:—

For valor distinguished, and jeu d'esprit too,
At last here reposes the esprit de Jew!

Under an effigy which has lately been erected to the memory of "dirty Irby," as this facetious gentleman was called, these lines have been engraven:—

"Man is a compound but of clay,"
Or dirt, 'tis just the same—
A compound of them both lies here,
And Irby is his name.

We are extremely concerned to announce the death of the Countess Saint Antonio, who departed this life yesterday evening, after a lingering illness, which she bore with all christian fortitude. Before her marriage the Countess was distinguished as the play-fellow of Mr. Keppel Craven, previous to that gentleman's acquaintance with Sir William Gell, or his Vice-Chamberlainship to the late virtuous Queen Caroline, of glorious memory; and, after her marriage, she became the first patron of our arts and sciences, and more particularly music, one professor of which, a Signor Torri, she especially noticed—and when on one occasion her husband kicked the foreigner out of her Ladyship's box, at the Opera, it became a matter of doubt at the time whether it was done from any jealous feeling, or for the establishment of political principles—but certain it is, that the Count was ever after looked upon as a Whig, from his having so ill-treated a Tory. A tribute of admiration has been subscribed on a neat tablet, erected in the family pew, of which the following is a copy:—

Though some who knew the Lady's worth,
And private attributes, avow
She was, perhaps, a Saint on earth,
They're doubtful if she is one now!

We cannot understand the direct meaning of the subjoined epitaph on the late Sir Gilbert Heathcote—whether it refers to any exploit of his, before or after marriage, or what—we however give it, as we saw it, and shall be happy to insert the incubrations of any correspondent on the subject, with a view to clear the matter up:—

Sir Gilbert Heathcote, now in peace,
Lies mouldering below,
Which every person thought him in,
Full thirty years ago!

After a life of singular variety, Mr. Wellesley Pole Tilney Long (commonly called "Wellesley Pole," and by the wags christened Long Pole), died on Thursday last. He was the eldest son of the present Lord Maryborough (now in his 79th year), and nephew to the illustrious Duke of Wellington. Upon the principle, we presume, of the family motto, "Moreover, one thing is 'needful,'" he set out in life in search of that "one thing," and after many trials and disappointments elsewhere, he contrived to influence the affections of the rich heiress of the late Sir James Tilney Long, whom he married, with a fortune of more than 60,000*l.* a year. After thirteen years of matrimony, the greatest part of which he spent in riot and debauchery, and particularly in the prosecution of an intrigue with a Mrs. Bligh, in Italy (whither he had taken his wife, owing to the dilapidation of her fortune) the lamented lady died at Richmond, in the year 1825, of a Broken Heart. From this time the fellow wandered about from place to place, despised by every thinking person, and totally exiled from his most respectable and exalted family. His personal pretensions were nothing remarkable, and the best opinion to be given of his mental qualifications will be found in his monumental inscription:

That title and character are not the same,
Is shewn here as plain as it can,
For he who of Long Pole had always the name,
Was far from a long-headed man!

The late Lord Euston, who, ever after the arrival of Claude Ambroise Seurat in this country in the year 1825, shared with that foreign gentleman the appellation of The Living Skeleton, has lately died; and the slender construction of his Lordship's frame is very aptly hit off in his epitaph:—

Lord Euston is gone,
And though some will declare
He might have been spared,
There was little to spare!

The nation at large will deeply lament the demise of that gallant and intrepid officer, the Right Honourable Lord Harborough, Vice-Admiral of the Red, Earl Noodle of Dean-street, in the county of *Middle*sex, Baron Pluck of Dover, in the county of Kent, K.W.* A.S.S. &c. &c. and Commander of H.M. ships in Chelsea Reach. The distinguished conduct of this valiant officer in the ever memorable action with Lieutenant Graham—in the equally glorious conflict with Lord Wallscourt, and the still more sanguinary encounter of himself and a friend with a very old watchman in Bond-street, are deeds which have enrolled his Lordship's name among the brightest ornaments of his country. His Lordship's celebrated "love affair" is too well known to need any comment now; but the personal beauty and elegant accomplishments of this Nobleman rendered the circumstance very interesting at the time. A grateful people anxious to testify their sense of the Noble Lord's services to his country, have erected a splendid monument to his glorious memory, and thereon thus recorded his naval character:—

After a cruize the world around,
From every tempest past,
A British Sailor here, aground,
Is anchored safe at last.

The Honourable Mr. Augustus Stanhope, lately departed this life, was youngest son of the last, and brother of the present Earl of Harrington. He was originally intended for the army, but in consequence of his becoming an extensive dealer, and such business not being thought consistent with military discipline and principle, he was removed therefrom by a Court-martial in the year 1816. The particular and more immediate cause of this step was an "odd trick" played by him and a respectable gentleman of the name of Twysden, (who, from his striking Lord Stair, always went by the name of "Wapping Old Stairs") on the then Lord Beauchamp, a lad of 16, which produced a profit of about 16,000*l.* to these genteel speculators. Mr. Stanhope was generally known by the name of Filch, but whether from this circumstance, or any other, has not been ascertained. He lies interred in the family vault, with these lines on the tablet over his coffin:—

Here Stanhope lies—by this time who has felt
The very scurvy trick that Death has dealt,
Done to retaliate, by way of whim,
And make his tricks on others fall on him:
His game is up—and free from care and toil,
At length he's "shuffled off this mortal coil."+

Over the mortal remains of the late Lord Arthur Hill, commonly distinguished, by the Ladies, by the title of *al*bum, and by the Gentlemen Bum Hill, a very handsome monument has been erected, in the centre of which are engraven, in large capitals, these lines:

Whatever his enemies say, they will find
His Lordship has left not his equal behind?

* Quere, Knight of the Watchhouse?
+ Hamlet. Edit.

His Holiness the Pope is at work again. A fit of illness kept him quiet for the last year, and his subjects, including the whole Roman Catholic population of the world! were unfavoured by any active measures of Legislation. But he now walks about, shoots partridges, as we understand, and probably goes through all the pleasant and much talked of indulgences of his better days. The life of the Cardinal is likely enough to be dear to even the Pope, and his Cardinalship was generally understood to have been a very pleasant career.

Still, those matters are his own affair, and he is welcome to all the pleasures that Rome provides for her scarlet-robed sons and daughters. But it becomes altogether different when we find his Holiness sending his Rescripts beyond the purlieus of Rome, and turning from pleasure to business.

"When the Devil was sick, the Devil a Monk would be;
"When the Devil was well, the Devil a Monk was he."

Yet the old adage goes unnecessarily far; for the monk and his sable majesty might have retained their connexion without offence to the principles of either. It is now declared, that the Pope is about immediately to issue a "Bull to all the Catholic Clergy throughout that part of Christendom where Popery is the established religion, calling upon them to pursue and extirpate the political sects, whose (alleged) object is to overturn the throne and the altar, to undermine public tranquillity, and to spread licentiousness and murder. His Holiness not only exhorts the clergy, but commands them, to employ all the means in their power, as well to discover the secret societies already existing, as to prevent the formation of new ones."

What will that celestial joker, the Reverend Sydney Smith, say to this? We leave him to the happiness of recollecting that he has made a goose of himself! What will that chief of Statesmen, Mr. Wilmot Horton, say to this? We leave him to the happiness of recollecting that his pamphlet, in behalf of himself and the Pope, has found its refuter in the Pope, and that his whole reward must be bottomed on the feeling that he erred through ignorance of the matter in question—of his own faculties—and, what will grieve him still more pungently, of Mr. Canning's real opinions. Let those men read the Pope's Rescript, and learn that his Holiness throws their protestations in their teeth; that he asserts, aye and will maintain his ancient, traditional, and preposterous claim to be Lord and Master of mankind, in defiance of ten such pamphlets as either the celestial Joker's or the sagacious Secretary's; and that they may feel themselves lucky if his angry Sanctity does not include them in some "secret society," (a pleasant and stretching net for all sorts of people unwashed by holy water,) and set his priests upon them, "to pursue and extirpate" their freemasonship from the face of mankind.

DEATH OF THE DUC DE MONTMORENCY.

The Duke had been Minister for Foreign Affairs on the establishment of the Royalist Ministry in 1821. He was present at the Congress of Verona, where he was commissioned to propose the war with revolutionary Spain. His connexion with the Ultra Royalists became suspicious to M. Villele, who removed him in 1822, on the ground of having exceeded his instructions. From this time he lived in private, extremely addicted to religious exercises—gradually became an enthusiast—and he died the death that such a character might have desired. He had undergone the pious fatigues of the Roman Catholic Holy Week, and on Good Friday, in the Church of St. Thomas Aquinas, dropped on the pavement and expired. He was an amiable man, and was, probably from this quality, appointed governor to the young Duke of Bourdeaux. He had been a rather prominent personage, at least in his sacrifices, in the early part of the revolution; as, in the Constitutional Assembly, he was among the Nobles who first came forward to abandon the ancient privileges and titles of that body. His family was of the first rank in point of antiquity—but there is a mistake in calling him the first Christian Baron—that distinction belongs to his Cousin.

THE LIFE OF NAPOLEON.

There is bad and good of every thing; and Puffery shares the common fate. There are Puffs running at this hour about London that can take in no one but the clumsy scribes who scribble them,—but the puffer gifted by nature with any genius for this delightful and delicate production, a genuine puff, goes about the affair in a very different manner from the men of the Maccassar Oil, the Anti-Attrition, and the Edinburgh Ointment. None but a bungler, for instance, ever lays his ground in London. Whether in France, or Germany, under the Pole, or in New South Wales, lies the true region of success, may be doubted—but one essential is, that it lie beyond Dover at least. But we must break off this captivating subject, and come to our example.

There have been occasional doubts about the authorship of the Waverley Novels, though there can be none about the talents of the individual to whom they have been ascribed. But, all the world knows, that to write the novel is but half the battle—the worse half. The true art is to bring it before mankind with eclat. Here comes in the province of puff; and a failure in the accouchement is fatal to the babe, and sometimes also to the parent. That individual is now concocting a "Life of Napoleon:" it will probably be a lively romance—it will certainly be a bad history; it will probably be profitable to the author for six months; it will certainly be forgotten by the public in six months more. Now comes the puff preliminary—Scene, Germany—Plot, ——. The book is to be so popular, that it is to be pirated by every nation of the reading universe.

"AUGSBURGH, MARCH 2.

"Messrs. Schumann, brothers, Booksellers at Zuickow, have advertised in the Algemeine Zeitung, and other papers, that the 1st volume of the Life of Napoleon, by Sir Walter Scott! has been lately published in London! that it will consist of 5 large vols. 8vo. and be all published by the end of August: that a Dr. Barmann is making a translation, which they will publish, in 7 pocket volumes, (with copper-plates,) the first two to be delivered to the subscribers in June, and the whole before the end of the year. They will also print an edition in English, and the price is to be about fifteen pence a volume."

"Mr. Bayley, Vicar of Margate, is to be appointed to the Prebend in Canterbury, vacant by the promotion of Dr. Sumner to the See of Landaff."—Morning Post.

This is all as it ought to be: there is nothing like the promotion of humble merit, and there is of course no merit so humble as that of which nobody has ever heard before. Mr. Bayley's learning, activity and eloquence are all in sacred obscurity: they have the greater room for public expansion. The hot-bed of a Canterbury stall is proverbial as a forcing-house for reluctant genius. It would be pleasant to know what books he has written:—it would be still pleasanter to know whose fair cousin, or cousin's cousin, has whispered his modest virtues in the ear of promotion. In all this we throw no blame whatever on the individual; he is right to get a good thing if he can; but as his merits have utterly escaped publicity, the honour of their discovery should in justice be referred to the singular sagacity of his patrons.

THEATRICALS.

Benyowsky had nearly escaped our recollection, but having promised a word or two on the subject, we fulfil that promise. It is by no means a good play, but there are so many worse every season making their appearance, that we ought to be satisfied with what we have got; and then in addition to this, we do not consider the characters properly allotted, for, to say nothing of any other ones, Mr. Bennett and Mr. Wallack should certainly have played each the other's character. The former of these worthy personages is a very good actor, and appears to have made a much more favourable impression on the faculties of the Drury-

Lane auditors than he did on those of its rival: there is an earnestness in every thing he does, and if he will divest himself of a few mannerisms, and be an original instead of a copy, he will certainly become an established favourite. There is little for HARLEY to do, but he makes more of a little than any of his contemporaries: and after that, the only other person entitled to notice is Miss FOOTE. The part of Athanasia was most agreeably played by this lady, and indeed, in characters of this description she has no living rival; it is in the assumption of the first grade of acting, that we have always condemned this actress, and ever shall—but in a part requiring the interest of a subdued, yet an intense feeling, and of a pensive yet pleading beauty, she may set at defiance the utmost malevolence of criticism. The comparatively cold reception nightly given to this performer, should be looked upon by her as the natural consequence of an exhausted and overstrained enthusiasm, which being paid to her circumstantial situation, and not to her talents, would naturally decrease when its application was required merely for the appreciation of those talents, and Miss FOOTE is now received and estimated professionally exactly as she was before the late trial in the Court of King's Bench. The scenery of Benyowsky is very good, but it is impossible to say as much for the music—and even were it agreeable, the idea of entrusting concerted music to Mr. BROWNE, Miss FOOTE, and others of the same musical reputation, is the height either of the sublime or the ridiculous, as peoples' fancies may suggest—perhaps, however, these things have been improved upon since the first night, and if they have not, they ought to have been.

The opinion we last week expressed on the subject of this theatre forestalling, at least by name, the opera of Oberon, in preparation at Covent Garden, remains unaltered, but that prejudice does not in the least prevent our paying the full tribute of approbation to the manner it has been here produced, for we do not think it would be going a jot too far to affirm that a more successful piece, or one more deserving the success it has received, has not glimmered pro tempore before the Cocknies for many a season past. It would be superfluous, and it is impossible to enter into a general analysis of its merits, but we may be permitted to give full sanction to Mr. BENNETT's spirited personation of Sir Huon, and, far above every thing of the kind we ever witnessed, to Miss VINCENT's astonishing performance of Oberon—then the appearance of the Tiger, which literally awes, and is enough to frighten every one—and finally, to the painting of Mr. STANFIELD, who seems to improve on former excellence every first opportunity that is afforded him. The Harbour of Tunis is almost without a rival in the annals of scene painting. Imitations are sometimes agreeable—sometimes accidental—sometimes impossible to avoid—but at other times they are the presumption of a weak intellect and matchless impudence. We will not tax a Mr. W. BENNETT with either of these attributes, but we will not hesitate to affirm, that a more annoying thing than his imitation of BLANCHARD cannot be conceived, more especially as he does not possess one particle of the genius of the great original.

Mr. MACREADY, we are glad to see, re-appears at this Theatre to-morrow week—certainly not before he is wanted, and not before he will be cordially welcome—Mr. C. KEMBLE has been performing at Edinburgh, to an indifferent attendance, as respects quantity, of auditors, but that is no fault of his. Miss PATON has had a double calamity—personal indisposition, and the untimely loss of the youngest branch of her family, through which lamentable circumstances we have been deprived of her great abilities since Monday last—the Haymarket positively opens on the 17th with Paul Pry, well assured of a roaring season—the Morning Post informs us that one of its Company, Mrs. WAYLETT, has been astonishing the good people of Lynn, who have given the lady the compliment at her benefit of "a bumper at parting"—we further understand that, on the strength of a first impression, Miss FOOTE returns to BATH—we advise her NOT—and in addition to all this important intelligence, we hear that the fascinating actress, whose late arrest in Dublin we some time since alluded to, gave the avaricious creditor leg bail—and that both parties were accordingly satisfied; we are glad to hear all these things—there is no profession half so interesting as this one, and these worthy people alluded to hold a very prominent station among the fraternity and sisterhood.

The fashionable, literary, and dramatic part of mankind, will be delighted to find that the "Life and Times" of REYNOLDS, the celebrated dramatist, are on the eve of publication. There is no work more calculated to excite, or to satisfy, the curiosity of every reader—an eminent wit himself, and the observer of that rare quality in others, it is but natural to suppose that his work will contain some of the most interesting, and, at the same time, most intelligent and amusing characteristics of nearly the last half century.

Two of the Representatives for the City of London have announced their intention of not again offering themselves as candidates, Mr. Wilson, and Mr. Curtis. Mr. Wilson, if not distinguished as a senator, was respected as a steady and enlightened advocate of the commercial interests; while Sir William Curtis, during his long Parliamentary career, has been always considered as a sturdy, uncompromising supporter of English freedom.

THE EQUITABLE TEA AGENCY COMPANY.

Wednesday Mr. John H. Torriano, solicitor of Fenchurch-street, applied to the Lord Mayor, at the Mansion-house, upon the part of a country tea-dealer, Mr. Nicholas Bell, for his Lordship's assistance in obtaining restitution of a sum of money which the managing director of the Equitable Tea Agency Company contrived to get from him.

The prospectus stated, that it would require no elaborate calculations, nor any verbose detail, to point out the advantages that may be obtained by taking shares in this Company; that it was well known, that for half a century the tea trade had been a monopoly to a few houses of large capital, who have made princely fortunes, and the country tea-dealer has been ground down by a combination of wholesale dealers; that the most experienced judges should be employed for the purpose of examining and reporting on the quality of all teas intended for sale by the East India Company; that the shareholders should be allowed 25 per cent. on the commission of all orders procured by them, which privilege was to follow the shares when transferred; and that the management of the Company be under five directors, chosen from the shareholders who held 50 shares each, as a qualication for a director; every shareholder of 10 shares to have one vote, 20 shares two votes, 50 shares three votes, 100 shares four votes, and no shareholder to have more than four votes.

Mr. Torriano stated, that his client had become acquainted with William Goundry, the Managing Director, a Member of the Society of Friends, when the latter was traveller for an extensive tea-dealer, named Nicholson, with whom Mr. Bell used to deal. The acquaintance was very slight, but Mr. Goundry took care, at a meeting which accidentally took place afterwards in the country, to improve it, and introduced himself as a partner in the Equitable Tea Agency Company, which he represented as a Company abounding with the most brilliant advantages, and infinitely superior to any other in existence. Mr. Bell was induced to transmit to Wm. Goundry bills for upwards of 90*l.* for tea, and to which he received the following answer:—

"Respected Friend,—I received thy letter yesterday. The bill on Masterman and Co. I got discounted on Saturday last, and within one hour I forwarded a chest of tea 73 breah, per Snell and Co., as per receipt. I have given the other bill to be discounted, and if it is not done immediately, I will return it. I even asked the acceptors if they would discount it themselves. I know the bill to be as good a one as any in London, but our Directors will not send tea until the bills are in cash.

"Annexed are a copy of the tea declared for next sale; Congoes are at a profit.

"I shall not lose one hour when the bill is discounted in forwarding the teas. I remain, thine respectfully,

"WM. GOUNDRY."

All he received of the tea ordered was one chest, value about 21*l.* or 22*l.*, and all his subsequent applications proved ineffectual. In answer to a pressing application, Mr. Goundry sent the following letter, which contained the number of shares in the Equitable Tea Agency Company. These shares, though their value was stated as very considerable, proved to be altogether useless, and not at all marketable. Mr. Bell, although he had sent his bills for the tea, and not for the shares, was debited with the amount of the shares which he had in his possession, and which were not acknowledged by the gentlemen whose names appeared along with that of Mr. Goundry, in the list of Directors. The bills were paid when they became due, and Mr. Bell was out of pocket by the transaction, and likely to remain so, except the Lord Mayor would interpose:—

"Respected Friend, N. Bell.—Enclosed are 20 shares; 10 for thy brother, and 10 for thyself; six of each are left blank, so that you may hold them yourselves, or any of your friends, by adding the name and address, and forwarding them to me, will be entered in the books to the person holding. Each share is worth in London 7*l.* 10*s.*

"I hope to-morrow to forward thy teas, as money is a scarce thing, better to-day. I shall not lose one hour that can be saved in time. I am now examining all the transactions that have taken place during the panic, and if any mistakes have occurred they will be immediately rectified. "W. GOUNDRY."

The LORD MAYOR said he perceived by the prospectus that there were to be immense profits arising from this Company; and he also saw, by Mr. Goundry's letters, that there were to be no lawyer's bills to eat up the profits (a laugh); and that the shares sent in lieu of the balance of 71*l.* or 72*l.*, amounted, upon the very face of them, (for upon each of them it was stated, that the holder was entitled to 5*l.*) to the sum of 100*l.* Besides all this, it appeared that the country dealers were the persons principally to be benefitted. He supposed, putting all these advantages together, that Mr. Bell was induced to take the shares.

Mr. Torriano said his client would swear, that he had never consented to take the shares in lieu of the money due to him. The company was got up by Mr. Goundry himself, and nobody knows any thing about it but the projector. There is nobody on the premises but a poor blind man.

The Lord Mayor then gave some directions to Mr. Bell's solicitor upon the subject, declaring at the same time, that he would most willingly assist in procuring the amount of the money which had been so imprudently lost sight of.

It is needless to say, that the dividends, which were promised on the 1st of February, were never heard of.

Friday, Mr. Goundry, the managing director of the Equitable Tea Agency Company, appeared before the Lord Mayor, to answer the complaint made by Mr. Torriano, upon the part of Mr. Bell.

His Lordship, upon taking the chair, having seen the complainant, asked whether Mr. Goundry had paid any attention to the second summons?

Mr. Goundry said, with a smile, that he was ready to answer any thing alleged against him.

The Lord Mayor.—You have been sent for to answer the charge of having obtained, by false pretences, two bills of exchange for the amount of upwards of 92*l.* 2*s.*; and you are also charged with having appropriated money put into your hands to other purposes than those for which it was delivered to you.

After considerable discussion,

The Lord Mayor said, he saw no sufficient reason to adjourn the case. The evidence for the prosecution, on which he was called to decide, made out a case of fraud, which must go before a jury. The defendant had pretended that a company existed, of which he was the managing director, when, in point of fact, there never had been any such company formed. He pretended that 9,000 shares had been issued, and more than that, by his letter that the list was full, when, in fact, but 1,000 shares had been issued; and assumed the character of director and manager of a company which had no existence, and upon these false pretences had obtained 10*l.* His Lordship felt it his duty to order the defendant to find bail to answer this charge. He did this under the act which subjected the person convicted of the offence to transportation. The other charge of the misappropriation of the 92*l.* might stand over.

The defendant not having any bail ready, went in search of some persons. He returned, however, without having succeeded. The Lord Mayor, under these circumstances, required two good bail to the amount only of 40*l.* each, and the defendant's own suretics to the amount of 80*l.* At about half past four o'clock, no bail having arrived, the defendant was committed to prison.

The Viceroy of Egypt, Mohammed-Ali, has ordered to be constructed for him in London an apparatus for lighting with gas his palace at Cairo, and the square in which it is situated.

MISCELLANEOUS.

Letters from Paris state that the King has invited M. de Chateaubriand, and other Members of the Opposition, to travel for the benefit of their health. This gracious invitation has been delivered, and there the matter rests for the present.

We are sorry to state an extensive failure at Petersburgh, that of Messrs. Livio, Brothers, for two millions and a half of rubles (about 100,000*l.* sterling). They were eminent Bankers, and of great credit.

It has not yet been determined whether St. Martin's workhouse, which occupies a large space at the south-west angle of Hemming's-row, is to be taken down to make way for the projected improvements in that quarter.

EXTRACT FROM A FRENCH PAPER.—"The English Ministry have adopted the principle of Free Trade, and yet they pass an Act to abolish Lotteries; which have given freely to the Public, without any expence to the State, upwards of One Hundred Millions of Pounds Sterling, in Capital Prizes, during the last Century. Surely every person ought to have the liberty to pay Eighteen or Nineteen Pounds for Twenty Thousand Guineas, as long as Mr. BISH will offer such terms? but, no!—we find the British Parliament have determined there shall be no more Lotteries after the present and one more drawing."

The retirement of Mr. Wilson from the representation of the City of London, was, we believe, an event wholly unexpected.

DIORAMA IN THE REGENT'S PARK.—This beautiful exhibition continues to attract crowds of fashion. It is considerably superior to the former exhibitions at the same place. The illusion is incomparable, and those who have seen Rosslyn Castle, or the City of Rouen, must duly appreciate the fidelity of their delineation, while the execution of both views it is impossible for art to surpass.

SHERIDANIANA.—Among all the persons whose sayings are recorded there is not one whose wit was more lively and pregnant than Sheridan's, or whose jeux d'esprit are better adapted for being chronicled; and we are therefore not sorry to observe a volume announced, under the title of "Sheridaniana; or, Anecdotes of the Life of Sheridan; his Table-Talk, and Bons-Mots." Many of the best things in this volume, we are informed, have never been printed before."

LETTERS FROM THE EAST.—In consequence of the very favourable reception of the specimens of these Letters, in the New Monthly Magazine, Mr. Carne has been induced to publish a complete volume, comprising his Travels through Asia Minor, Syria, the Holy Land, Arabia, Egypt, and the Morea. They will be found to give a most lively and accurate description, not only of the splendid ruins of antiquity, but of the present state of society, in those classic countries; and must be pronounced a valuable addition to one of the most interesting classes of literary productions.

MASQUERADE.—We have the satisfaction to announce a magnificent entertainment of this description to be given at the King's Theatre, in the course of next week. It is singular that this should be the first in England attempted on the precise principle of the fascinating Carnivals of Italy, of which we have read so many glorious and romantic accounts. Many young men of the first fashion are, we understand, much interested in its success.

MESSRS. WELSH and HAWES, of the Harmonical Institution, Regent-street, have just published a very charming song, called "I've been Roaming." The music by HORN is in his best stile, and the words are also superior to the generality of these things. We have no doubt, with the advantage of Madame Vestris' singing, it will become as popular as "CHERRY RIPE," by the same composer.

ASTLEY'S AMPHITHEATRE.—This very popular theatre opened last Monday, with a splendid spectacle, giving a history of the Burmese War. It quite sustained the high reputation this House has obtained for its correct delineation of the horrors and splendours of war. The horses, who are considered the principal performers here, were, as usual, unrivalled in the difficulty and apparent danger of their manœuvres. The perfect tuition these animals have received reflect great credit on their indefatigable instructor, M. DUCROW, who was welcomed by the audience with loud and continued applause.

THE COSMORAMA.—Amongst the many beautiful panoramic views submitted to the public, within the last few years, the Cosmorama, now exhibiting at 209, Regent-street, is highly deserving of notice. The moonlight view of the Bay of Naples, with Vesuvius vomiting forth smoke and flame, is in admirable keeping. The three views at Versailles, which are evidently the work of the same artist, are correct delineations of what they are intended to represent, and are finished with great care. The interior of the view of the City of Berne does not come up to many other parts of the exhibition, but a small patch of verdant pasturage in the foreground is a good specimen of landscape painting. The view of Trinity Chapel (the principal chapel of Canterbury Cathedral) is also very well executed.

We lament to have to record the loss of Colonel Delancey Barclay, of the Grenadier Guards, and Aid-de-Camp to the King. This valued officer died yesterday morning, after a few days illness, at his house at Tellingborne, near Dorking, deeply regretted by his relatives, and a large circle of friends.

Every one has read of the Knights who, during the civil wars of England, took oaths not to cut their beards till certain events were accomplished. There were vows made stranger still. "Froissart," says Mr. W. Stewart Rose, (in the notes to his translation of Ariosto's Orlando Furioso,) "speaks of seeing certain English nobles, with one eye blinded with a patch, which they had sworn not to uncover till they had made a certain number of prisoners in the French wars."

BIBLE SOCIETIES.—There are 3,000 of these societies—great, small, and auxiliary—in existence, extending over various countries, and founded in the course of the last twenty years. Their receipts have exceeded a million sterling, and more than 3,000,000 of copies of the Bible, in 140 of the different languages of the five parts of the world, have been printed and distributed. It is in contemplation to send 40,000 Spanish Bibles to South America, where the people have testified an anxious desire to possess the holy writings—so much so that 500 Bibles, and the same number of New Testaments, sent to one of their towns, were disposed of in three days' time.—Bulletin de la Societe Protestante de Paris.

TO MR. ROWLAND,

PROPRIETOR OF THE MACASSAR OIL.

What! shall the sons of genius lend their aid
To female charms, triumphantly array'd?
Shall they still add to beauty, and the Muse
The grateful tribute of applause refuse?
O, no!—too universal is your worth,
Whose skill hath call'd such pleasing handmaids forth,
And she too, proud in regist'ring your fame,
By snatching from oblivion your name.
Accept then, Dear Sir, a nation's praise,
That round your brows entwines the civic bays:
Long shall the heav'n-born sex admit your pow'r,
And own with conscious pride the happy hour,
When such a worthy Briton had to boast,
To deck with elegance each beauteous toast;
To enhance those charms, the proudest oft subdue,
With graceful tresses of the loveliest hue:
And though base rivals may attempt, for gain,
By paltry arts, your wonted praise t'obtain,
Nor time nor fate such merit shall oppose,
Or blast the tribute which the Muse bestows!

Finsbury-square, March 22, 1826. C. I. H.

SPORTING INTELLIGENCE.

Lord Jersey's Henrico is matched against Mr. Greville's Elizabeth (8st. 7lb. each, at the next First Octoher Meeting, for 100 sovs. h. ft.

Mr. Greville's Whalebone is matched against Mr. Mills's Apelles (8st. 5lb. each), at the next Houghton Meeting, for 100 sovs. h. ft.

At the Craven Meeting next year, Mr. Mills's Panic (8st. 7lb.) is matched against Mr. Greville's Elizabeth (8st. 4lb.), for 500 sovs. h. ft.

TROTTING MATCH.—The match between the Plover mare, the property of Major Huskisson, of Anwell, and Mr. Forbes' horse Trinculo, sixteen miles, took place yesterday morning, over three miles of ground, at Anwell, Berks, each carrying feather weight. The mare was backed at 6 to 4, and the like odds that the winner performed the 16 miles within an hour. The horse broke into a gallop in the seeond mile, or the 16 miles would have been done within the hour. The mare was heat in the 14th mile.

FOOT RACE ON CLAPHAM COMMON.—The above neighbourhood was erowded yesterday afternoon by some thousands, to witness the performance of a pedestrian match for one hundred sovereigns; the runner being a crack Yorkshireman, a protege of Josh. Hudson. The time appointed was three o'clock, but the parties were not on the ground till five, when the pedestrian appeared ready for the start. The distanee to be run was ten miles, a mile being measured from opposite the Plough, on the road leading to Wandsworth, which necessarily oecasioned nine turns, and for which 27 seconds were added to the hour, the time in which the ten miles were accomplished. Each two miles were run as follows:—

2d -	11 32	5th do. -	11 40
3d -	11 36

Total, 57 minutes and 58 seconds; winning by 2 minutes and 29 seeonds, including the allowed 27 seconds. The pedestrian is short, but very museular; carried himself in true running style, if we exeept his going rather wide. He appears eapable of great things, and his backer offered to run him for 100 guineas, 10 miles against any man in England. Betting was against time.

ROYAL HUNT.—A fine deer was turned out on Easter Monday, on Farnham Common, for the day's diversion, which the King's hounds hunted. A numerous assemblage of sportsmen, of all ranks, were assembled at the Common, to partake of the sport, as well as a number on foot. The deer, on starting, proceeded in the direction of Dropmore-hill, through the woods leading to it, when he was headed by the sportsmen on foot; the deer then made a double round towards Clibton, and ran down the hill towards the Thames. The sportsmen, who imagined that he would cross the water, proceeded togeiher with the hounds over Maidenhead bridge, and took to the right, but the deer was running along the bottom of the wood under Clibton-hill, by the spring. One of the yeomen frickers, who was following the deer, gave a signal for the huntsmen and hounds to return over the bridge, which they did, and turning to the left, renewed the ehace. The deer proceeded up the hill towards Lord Boston's seat at Hedsor, taking to the left by Woburn, up the hill, and through Beaconstield, then to the right and back again through the woods and inclosures down by Burnham, erossed the Bath road towards the Thames, which he erossed opposite Braywick, whence he ran with great swiftness. The sportsmen and hounds went over Maidenhead bridge, and many of the sportsmen were now thrown out, the remainder renewed the ehace. From Braywick the deer took across the fields towards White Waltam, then to the left towards Benfield, and through the inclosures near Lord Brookes' park, where this fine deer was at last taken, after an excellent ehace of above five hours, during which time it is supposed to have run above sixty miles.

THE DOVER STAG-HUNT—GREAT CHACE.—The unprecedented runs with stags, afforded this season by Sir A. Chichester's hounds, throw the Brighton and all other crack packs in the back ground. Within the present month several runs have oceupied from two hours and a half to three hours, without a check, and are at least equalled in speed and time by the following:—On Monday the hounds found a fine stag in Bray Ball Wood, with which they hroke cover in beautiful style, but from this promise of sport they were checked, and suddenly a beautiful hind was roused which ran through Charles Wood, down the water, under Repham Wood, and was there joined by a stag; they continued together to Bradley bridge and through Lord Fortescue's park, Bremridge Wood, over the Lime-pits to Heale Wood, near Kingsnympton park; here a herd of deer got up in the midst of the pack, and the hunted hind and stag were lost after a sevcre run of upwards of three hours.

RACES FOR NEXT WEEK.

Monday.—Middleham.

Tuesday.—Caistor (Lincolnshire). The Caistor Stakes (11 horses entered): the Macaroni Stakes of 10 sovereigns eaeh, 3 horses entered; and a Hunters' Stakes.

Thursday.—Exton-park. The Noel Stakes, 2 horses entered; the Billesdon Coplow Stakes, 3 entered: the Cottesmore Stakes, 6 entered; the Ranksborongh Stakes, the Farmers' Plate, and a Handicap.

FOX CHASE.—Mr. Conyers's hounds had a famous run on Wednesday. They met at Screens-wood, and unkennelled a brace of foxes, and went away with one of them to Barnish-wood, and headed back to Screens. Mr. Conyers being convinced that it was a vixen, had his hounds stopped, got on the dog fox, at a slapping paee, through Moore-hall, Lady Groove, Edney, Wattle-park, crossed the river to Lord Petre's country, and killed at Bishop's-wood, after a gallant run of more than two hours.

THE RECENT ABDUCTION.

William Wakefield, the brother of Enward Gibbon Wakefield, and one of the parties charged with the abduction of Miss Turner, arrived in eustody of a peaee-officer on Wednesday morning, from Dover, where he was apprehended immediately on his arrival trom France.

It appears that information had been formally lodged on oath before the magistrates of Lancaster, against all the parties accused, and they in eonsequence issued their warrants for their apprehension. On Monday last these warrants arrived in London, and were endorsed by Sir R. Birnie, who is in the commission of the peace for Kent, and transmitted to Dover, where Taunton, the officer, was waiting to receive and execute them, if opportunity should serve. Taunton had left Paris some days, having conceived a notion that if he left France, the parties would be likely to return to England. A hint indeed had been given that pressing business rendered the presence of one or two of them here neeessary. On Tuesday Mr. Wakefield, jun., landed at Dover, and was taken into custody by Taunton upon a warrant, in which he stood charged with aiding and abetting in the abduction of MissTurner.

We understand that Mr. William Wakefield was sent off for Lancaster yesterday afternoon, in the custody of Barrett, a constahle of Maeclesfield, who was with Taunton at Dover, and who brought the warrants from the former place. Taunton remains at Dover. It is confidently expeeted that Edward Gibbon Wakefield and his valet, Thevenot, will be in custody very shortly.

By statute 3 Henry VII., c. 12, it is enaeted, that if any person shall, for lucre, take any woman, being maid, widow, or wife, and having substance either in goods or lands, or being heir apparent to her aneestors, contrary to her will, and afterwards she be married by such misdoer, or by his consent to another, or defiled; such person, his procurers and abettors, and such as knowingly receive such woman, shall be deemed principal felons; and by 39 Eliz. c. 9, the benefit of clergy is taken away from all such felons who shall be principals, procurers, or accessories before the fact.

POLICE INTELLIGENCE.

BOW-STREET.—A man named Wedgbury, well known as a conduetor of dog-fights, bull-baits, rat-killing, and other of the elegant sports which some of our "Corinthian capitals of polished society" delight to patronise, was brought before Thomas Halls, Esq. on Tuesday evening, charged by a Mr. Fox, a broker in Earl-street, with a violent assault.

It appeared from the statement of Mr. Fox and his man, that Wedgbury occupied some rooms in Green Dragon-yard, St. Giles's, where he and his assistants, his bear, his badger, and his bull-dogs, and the other brutes of his establishment, eat, drink, and sleep in perfect amity together. Wedgebury, it appeared, had hired these rooms of a man who was himself an under-tenant, and to him he paid the rent, but the under-tenant was arrested and sent to prison, and then the original landlord came to him for the rent of the premises for the whole of the time that he had occupied them. Wedgebury, however, said that he had paid one man, and he would be d——d if he parted with his money a second time for the same thing. Repeated applications meeting with the same answer, the landlord empowered Mr. Fox to levy a distress upon Wedgebury's goods and ehattels, and on Tuesday morning he went with his man and his warrant, but met with a reeeption perfeetly novel even in his unpleasant ealling. Wedgebury's apartments are up a flight of stairs, and there is a door at the bottom which Mr. Fox found fastened. He contrived with some difficulty to get the door open, and the first person he saw was Wedgehury, standing at the top of the stairs, and the latter the moment he saw Mr. Fox, called out "Bill, bring the bear, they are come." The broker having no desire to encounter such an opponent paused for a moment, while his man, with bristling hair, "nudged" him behind, and advised a retreat if his master did not wish to be eaten up alive. Mr. Fox, however, possessed a little courage, though perhaps rather of a negative kind, and he remained at the foot of the stairs until in about a minute a huge black bear with a chain about his neck made his appearance upon the landing-place, under the guidance of Wedgebury who held the chain. Having fixed Bruin, who growled as if in defiance of the besieging party, in a convenient position, he called to "Bill" to bring the dogs, and in a moment four or five sturdy bull-dogs, amongst which was Turk, who assisted in baiting the lion Nero, ready for any mischief which their master chose to urge them to, made their appearance. Thus entrenched, Wedgebury laughed at and bade defiance to Fox and his man, and told him that if he had no desire to be torn to pieces by the dogs, or hugged to death by the bear, he had better "nash" (go away.) Mr. Fox desired a parley, and proposed terms, hut Wedgebury, knowing that he could have nothing to fear except from an armed force, refused to aceede to any thing but an unconditional raising of the siege. Mr. Fox refused to stir from the place, and remained there for several hours, occasionally holding a dialogue, composed of a mixture of threats and entreaties, with Wedgebury, to the great amusement of a erowd of 100 or 200 persons who had assembled to witness the fun. At length Mr. Fox mustered courage enough to approach within a yard of the bear, and suddenly making a grasp at Wedgebury's leg (he was then standing by the side of bruin,) he attempted to drag him down stairs, but the torturer of animals knew also the use of his fists, and he gave Mr. Fox a pat on the head which sent him with eonsiderable rapidity to the bottom of the stairs. Mr. Fox then came direct to this office, and procured a warrant for the assault. Stevens, a police constable, armed with the warrant, his staff, and a brace of pistols, proceeded to the place, and found Wedgebury with all his forces drawn up as before. Not choosing to run the risk of a fraternal hug from the hear, or of being pinned by the nose (he possesses a very substantial one) by the dogs, he showed his staff and the warrant, and called upon Wedgebury to snrrender quietly. "I'll tell ye what, master," said Wedgebary, "I have a very great respect for all you Bow-street gentlemen, because I knows as how you must do your duty, but I considers that in this here instance I am in a right eause, and b——t me if I'll be took by you nor nobody else, though you have got a slang (warrant) agen me, so you may as well morris (another phrase for "go.") Stevens remonstrated upon the folly of resisting the civil power, but finding that of no use, he threatened to shoot the bear at all hazards. This threat wrought a wonderful change, for almost without another word Wedgebury surrendered at discretion.

In his defence he admitted that he gave Mr. Fox a "pat" on the head, but said he considered that he was only acting in his own defence.

He was held to bail for his appearance at the sessions.

On Wednesday evening, Mr. Arnold, the proprietor of the English Opera House, and a magistrate for Middlesex, preferred the following charge against a man named Metcalf, a street-keeper for the Piazzas, and constable of Covent-garden theatre. Mr. Arnold stated, that as he was walking through the Piazzas that evening, he heard the sound of a heavy blow, and on turning round he saw a girl about eleven years of age, and a cripple, prostrate on the ground, and the defendant standing over her, with a thick stick raised in his hand. The girl was screaming as if with pain, and the witness thought the act so brutal, and so unwarrantable in an officer, that he went up to Metcalf and remonstrated, observing, that whatever might have been the conduct of the girl, he could have no right to treat her as he had done. Metcalf, in a rough tone, replied, that the girl was a young strumpet, and a pest to the neighbourhood, and he should do his duty as he liked, without being dictated to by any body. The witness told him that if the girl had committed any offenee, if she was the character he described, it was his duty to take her before the magistrates; nothing could justify the exercise of such brutality to such an object. Metcalf became very insolent, and said "Who are you, I should like to know?" Witness told him that he was a magistrate, and desired that he would accompany him to Bow-street, and there account for his eonduct. On the way a crowd gathered about them, and the defendant endeavoured by his language to excite a a strong feeling amongst the people against him (Mr. Arnold.) The girl, who seemed terribly afraid of the defendant, slipped away as they were coming to the office.

In defence, Metcalf said that the girl spoken of was one of a gang of young prostitutes, whose conduct and language were such that the inhabitants of the neighbourhood were most shockingly annoyed. He denied striking the girl.

Mr. Arnold declared that the defendant admitted having struck the girl.

Sir R. Birnie and Mr. Minshull both said, that if the girl was what the defendant described, it was his duty to have brought her before them.

Metealf said, that if he were to bring every girl who behaved ill all day long before their worships, he should have nothing else to do, and the magistrates would be pestered to death.

After some conversation, Sir R. Birnie said, he was of opinion that Metcalf had been guilty of a violation of his duty of a gross description, and the magistrates, he thought, would not be doing their duty if they were not to mark the ease in such a manner as to hold out a warning to other officers. If they acted otherwise, they might fairly be accused of delegating power to men who had been found to be eapable of abusing it. He was of opinion that the defendant ought to be suspended from his office.

Mr. Minshull was of the same opinion, and he was suspended accordingly.

ACCIDENTS, &c.

A fire broke out on Wednesday morning, between two and three o'clock, at the Old South Sea House, which for some time past has been designated by the name of the Old South Sea Chambers, in Broad-street. This spacious building is nearly all consumed. Happily no lives have been lost, but the amount of property destroyed must be immense, as the whole of the building was let out in counting-houses and suites of chambers. When the fire was discovered, it was evident it had been raging for a considerable time. It unfortunately happened, that on the arrival of the engines there was a scarcity of water, and before a more plentiful supply could be obtained, the fire had reached to a great height; fortunately, however, some of the inhabitants recollected that in the gardens belonging to the premises, there was a fountain with a large reservoir of water; to this two engines were immediately conveyed, and commenced playing with considerahle effect, and to the exertions of the men who worked them may be attributed the saving of some of the adjoining premises. At one period of the morning great anxiety was manifested for the safety of the Excise Office, to which the attention of the conductors of the engines was directed, and we are happy to say with ultimate success. Two children, who were in bed in one of the rooms on the second floor, must have perished, had it not been for the great presence of mind evinced by Mansfield, one of the waiters at the North and South American coffee-house, who rushed up stairs, at the imminent peril of his life, to their rescue, which he appily effected. It is supposed that the fire originated in one of the vaults underneath the building, which was let to a wine-merchant Most of the gentlemen and merchants who inhabited the Old South Sea Chambers were fast asleep when they were aroused by a tremendous knocking at the gate, with the alarm of fire, a little after two o'cloek in the morning, hy the watchman. When the gates were opened, a great quantity of smoke rushed out of the counting-house of Mr. Waters, which was under the gateway, where the fire is supposed to have originated. An alarm was immediately given to the several inmates. The gentleman that appeared was Mr. Lutchers, who inhabited one of the chambers, who immediately rendered every assistanee to his neighbours, at the same time forgetting his own propenty; missing his gold watch, which he left in his drawers, and various papers of value, he returned and found his bed-room full of smoke, and, at the risk of being suffocated, he rescued his watch and most of the papers. All the rest of his property has been consumed. Unfortunately, he is not insured. Mr. Curtis, brother to the Alderman, made his escape instantly.—His property there was consumed, hut he was insured. A vast quantity of papers belonging to the Excise-office have been destroyed. Several other gentlemen, we understand, have experienced great losses, as they only escaped with what clothes they could throw on.

A most shocking and brutal murder was committed at Preston, on the night of Saturday last, on the person of John Shorrock, a poor labouring man residing at Radburn, near Chorley. The deceased, who was working at Preston, left a public-house there about ten o'elock on Saturday night, in company with Peter Thorp, a weaver, at New Preston, with the intention of proceeding home, and it seems, that when passing down Stanley-street, something occurred to occasion a quarrel between them, when Thorp struck the deceased a dreadful blow on the temple, which brought him to the ground; and, not content with this, he gave him several severe kicks. On being remonstrated with by a woman who happened to be present, he said that if he had not killed him already, he would do so, and thereupon gave the poor man another most violent kick in the bowels. When he was taken up from the ground, the vital spark had fled. On Monday an inquest was held upon the body, and the jury returned a verdict of "Wilful Murder" against Thorp, who has not been heard of since he committed the dreadful deed. The poor man has left a wife and four small children to deplore his loss.—Stockport Advertiser.

A most distressing accident occurred at Greenwich Fair, to a very interesting young woman. She went, accompanied by a party of friends, to pass a day of pleasure at the fair, a place of almost general resort during the Easter holidays; and, in the round of amusements, was unfortunately prevailed upon to trust herself in one of those dangerous swinging ears (which should not be tolerated), and so nervous did she beeome, from the frightful height she was so repeatedly tossed in the air, with a back and forward motion, that she lost all power of herself, and letting go the cords by which, for a short time, she maintained her position in the ear, she was hurled in a full swing to the ground, with a violence that surpasses description. She vomited a quantity of blood as she was carried into the Hope Tavern, a speechless and almost lifeless victim of the unpardonable negligence of her friends. A medieal gentleman was called in, and by blending, the use of restoratives, &c. he partially revived her. On examination he found several of her ribs broken, her head greatly eon tused, and other bodily injury. He ordered that she should be conveyed, by an easy stage, to one of the London Hospitals, and gave very doubtful hopes of her ultimate recovery.

About eight o'clock on Thursday morning the family of Mr Penny, resident at the house of Mr. Hunt, picture-dealer, of Tavistock-street, Covent-Garden, was thrown into the utmost dismay by the report of a pistol. On entering the front room, they found the younger Mr. Penny weltering in his blood, having discharged a pistol doubly loaded through his breast. So heavily charged was the deadly weapon, that it flew out of the deceased's hand, and actually broke the windows on the opposite side of the way. No cause can be asigned for the rash act. The unfortuaate young man was only twenty-one years of age.

The contest for the office of vestry-clerk of the parish of St. Luke, Old-street, terminated last night. The numbers were—For Mr. Wilks, 553; for Mr. Florance, 383.—Majority for Mr. Wilks, 170.

A "BEAR ACCOUNT."—Thursday morning, about 10 o'elock, the neighbourhood of Bridge-street, Westminster, was thrown into a good deal of confusion and alarm, by the appearance of a huge bear, proceeding with awful strides down Bridge-street, without a chain, a keeper, or any eheck whatever. At the sight of so formidable a stranger the passengers fled for refuge to the first open house they could meet with. On his approaching Parliament-street he gazed wildly around him, and then scampered down it with a quickened pace to the terror of all who saw him. On reaching the first turning of that street he halted, and then took the direction to Cannon-row. By this time his owners were in pursuit of him, and did all in their power to arrest his progress, but without effect. At length Bruin entered the fore-court or area belonging to the office of the Board of Control, and probably would have ascended the steps and marched into the hall, had not the pursuers acted with the greatest promptitude. The bear, the moment he entered this place, found the gates closed upon him, and was thus prevented from sallying forth again into the street. But the difficulty now was, how any one could approach him so as to fasten a rope or chain upon him. His owner, however, knew how to suit Master Bruin's taste to a hair; he procured a good supply of bread and other eatables, and with these he entered the forecourt. Bruin, whose appetite was doubtless improved by his morning's excursion, welcomed his master in the most respectful manner. He no sooner saw him than he stood upright on his hind legs, and, placing his rough paw on his shoulder, took his breakfast as comfortable as any bear could do in a like situation. By this time a chain was procured, and having been slipped over his head, this bold intruder on the town was again secured, and led through streets to his own home, without having done any injury whatever. It has not been ascertained how the animal contrived to get loose.

ALBION FIRE AND LIFE INSURANCE COMPANY, NEW BRIDGE-STREET, BLACKFRIARS, EMPOWERED BY ACT OF PARLIAMENT.

CAPITAL—ONE MILLION.

The Premiums of Fire Insurances effected with this Company, of the three ordinary Classes, have, with certain exceptions, been reduced as follows:—

in the first Class,.........to 1s. 6d. per Cent.
In the second Class,.......to 2s. 6d. per Cent.
in the third Class,.........to 4s. 6d. par Cent.

Fire Policies, the renewals of which become due at Lady-Day will expire, unless renewed within fifteen days from that period.

The Company continues to undertake Insurances on Lives, on liberal Terms. No Charge is made on such Insurances, in the way of Admission Fine, or Entrance Money; and a large Commission is allowed to Solicitors, and others, by whom such Insurances are effected. WARNER PHIPPS, Sec.

COLONIAL LIFE ASSURANCE.—BRITISH, COLONIAL, and MARITIME LIFE ASSURANCES may be effected for any particular country, voyage, service, or residence, or generally, to include the common dangers of Sea and Climate.

For the present convenience of the assured, the premiums have been calculated as low as is consistent with security; and four-fifths of all excess, with its accumulations, revert to them at the periodical divisions.

The Institution has Referees in every part of the Kingdom and Colonies. A Medical Officer attends at two o'clock daily, in Cornhill—Forms of Proposals, Prospectuses, &c. may be obtained at either of the Establishments of the Company. HENRY P. SMITH, Actuary.

Eagle British and Colonial Life Assurance Offices,
Cornhill, and Regent-street.

SURREY, SUSSEX, AND SOUTHWARK FIRE and LIFE ASSURANCE COMPANY, St. Margaret's-hill, Southwark.

This Company has been formed upon principles combining the most perfect security, with advantages equal to, if not greater than, those offered by any similar Institution.

The Fire and Life Departments are kept distinct, thus affording the same advantages as if the Assurances were effected at separate offices.

Persons Assured, either against loss by Fire or upon Lives, will periodically participate in the profits, without any liability on their part to contribute towards Losses. REDUCED RATES OF ASSURANCE.

The following Reductions have taken place on the Rates of good Risks in the undermentioned Classes:—

First Class......from......2s to 1s 6d per Cent.
Second, ditto..............3s to 2s 6d ditto.
Third ditto................5s to 4s 6d ditto.

But this Reduction will not apply to Assurances, where it would bring the premium to less than 5s.

The premiums on Life Assurances are lower than those generally required.

Officers in the Army and Navy are not charged with any additional premium, unless called into actual service.

No entrance money, or admission fees, are required, from persons effecting Life Assurances; nor is any charge made for Policies beyond the amount of the stamp.

A liberal Commission is allowed to Solicitors, and Army and Navy Agents, and others, on effecting Life Assurances.

March 25, 1826. G. W. WILSON, Secretary.

TO THE PUBLIC.—Having submitted to you, my "best" Friends agreeably to my usual custom, the Scheme, at length, of the present Lottery, I feel it will be unnecessary for me to say more than express my grateful thanks for all past favours, and to assure you, I have been most anxious in this, My Farewell Contract, to retain and improve all the popular points of late Schemes, and I regret to state,

This is the very last Lottery but one that will ever be drawn in England.

I have the honour to be your devoted Servant,

4, Cornhill, and 9, Charing Cross. T. BISH, Contractor.

In the present Scheme, every Number is sure of being a Prize, with

SIX GRAND CAPITALS OF TWENTY THOUSAND GUINEAS EACH,

&c. &c. forming an aggregate of £337,760! All in One Day, 3d of MAY.

Tickets and Shares are selling at BISH's, the Contractor's Offices, 4, Cornhill, and 9, Charing Cross, and by his Agents in all the principal Cities and Towns of the United Kingdom.

BISH's GREAT LUCK!—The tide of success continues to flow uninterruptedly to BISH's Offices—every drawing affords him the gratification of announcing that a very large portion of all the Prizes have been sold by him. In the Lottery just ended he shared and sold several Capitals, including Two PRIZES of £20,000 EACH, viz.—

7,340...............Class A, a Prize of.............£20,000!
19,004...............Class B, a Prize of.............£20,000!

In the previous Lottery, which was all drawn 6th December last,
BISH SOLD TWO OF £30,000!
And in the Lottery immediately preceding, drawn on the 18th October last,
BISH SOLD THREE OF £20,000!
And within the last Eleven Months,
BISH SOLD FIVE £30,000 and ELEVEN £20,000!

THE BRITISH SPECIFIC, for re-producing and promoting the GROWTH of HAIR.—The principle of its operation is to cool and contract the pores which are opened by a redundancy of heat, occasioning a relaxation of the roots, and render them incapable of retaining the hair; to counteract which nothing is better calculated than the British Specific, as, from its invigorating and oleaginous properties, it almost immediately arrests the falling off, and affords such effectual nourishment to the roots, that persons giving it a fair trial may assure themselves of its speedily restoring it even where it has become completely bald, however long it may have been so, and, if grey, gradually to restore it to its natural colour. The superiority o this preparation (the invention of a medical man) derives additional recommendation from its being, unlike other compositions for the hair, so extremel clean and agreeable, that its application is a real pleasure, and is only requisity to be generally known to receive the preference of every article in use for similar purposes. To be had only of D. Peden, 15, Burlington Arcade, Piccadilly, in bottles 6s. each, or cases of four bottles for 1l., forwarded to order, on receiving the amount, post paid.

THE ARABIAN VEGETABLE PILLS, free from Mercury or Antimony, are unrivalled in their beneficial effects in Nervous, Bilious, and Liver Complaints, Indigestion, and its numerous train of maladies, and are particularly mild and pleasant as an aperient. The superior efficacies of these Pills has increased the demand for them so much, that an additional number of Venders has been appointed in London for the accommodation of the Public; and they may now be obtained in Boxes at 1s. 1½d. and 2s. 9d. each, of J. V. Simpson (Proprietor,) 28, Henrietta-street, Covent-garden; Messrs. Stradling, Royal Exchange; Anderson, 156, Bishopsgate Without; Sequeira, 132, Whitechapel High-street; E. and F. Odling, 159, High-street; and 171, Union-street, Southwark; Ward, 324, and Hose, 309, Holborn; Prout, 226, and Burfield, 189, Strand; Stanley, 14, Tavistock-row, Covent-garden; Payne, 5, St. Martin's-court; Simpson, 21, Piccadilly; Hawkins, 11, Old Bond-street; Grignon, 174, Regent-street, opposite New Burlington-street; Colley, 5, Holles-street, Cavendish-square; Sanger, 150, and Chandler, 76, Oxford-street; White, 1, and Yard, 28, Lamb's Conduit-street; and of all Medicine Venders throughout the kingdom. Mr. Renard, 19, Rue Vivienne, is appointed vender of of these Pills in Paris.

DISTRESS in SPITALFIELDS.—At a SPECIAL MEETING of the COMMITTEE, held at the Rectory-house, Bishopsgate, March 30, 1826,

The Lord Bishop of CHESTER in the Chair;

It was resolved, that the following Statement should be submitted to the Public:—

The Committee who have been intrusted with the distribution of the money subscribed for the relief of the distressed Silk Weavers in Spitalfields, have now the painful task of announcing to the public, that, while the funds placed at their disposal are very nearly exhausted, the distress which they were intended to relieve remains undiminished in extent and severity; in point of fact it may be said to have increased; for the relief which the Committee have been able to allow to persons with families has been so small as barely to supply them, and that but scantily, with the necessaries of life, leaving no provision for the payment of rent or of debts contracted under the pressure of distress before the commencement of this subscription. About 700 persons who have received relief have now obtained a small portion of work; but their places have been more than supplied by those who were at work, and are now wholly out of employ. The Committee have now been sitting every day (Sundays excepted) since the 31st of January, in the Vestry Room at Spitalfields church, distributing relief; and nearly 16,000 persons have been supported during the whole of that time, and are still supported, entirely upon the scanty pittance which they have received from this source. The balance now remaining in the Treasurer's hands does not amount to the sum required for one week's distribution.

Under these circumstances, the Committee feel it their duty to make an earnest appeal to the benevolence of those whom Providence has blessed with the means of mitigating the distresses of their fellow creatures; and persuade themselves that the foregoing simple and unexaggerated statement will produce such an addition to their funds as may prevent the sudden drying up of those sources to which so many thousand poor persons have to look for the means of existence.

Amount of subscriptions received............... £13,630 10s.
Amount expended.................................. £12,100 0s.

(Signed) C. J. CHESTER, Chairman.
WM. HALE, Treasurer.

APRIL 1.—The Committee have to acknowledge with gratitude the receipt, by the Lord Bishop of Chester, of ONE THOUSAND POUNDS, being the Second Contribution of his Most Gracious Majesty.

Subscriptions are received by the Right Hon. the Lord Mayor; Wm. Hale, esq., Wood-street, Spitalfields, Treasurer; and by all the Bankers.

KOLNISCHE'S WASSER OU, EAU DE COLOGNE, de Raphael François Marie Farina. The only true importation to be had of J. C. HOSE, late KINNARD, 309, High Holborn. Wholesale and Retail.

MOGUL, or REAL CHETNA SAUCE.

C. HODGSON, original Inventor and Sole Proprietor, is induced to caution his Friends and the Public against several spurious Sauces, offered for Sale, under the title of "MOGUL, or REAL CHETNA."

C. H. will feel obliged if each Purchaser of the above delicious Sauce, will please to observe the Label; which should be signed, " C. HODGSON," and the Cork, sealed and impressed, " HODGSON'S MOGUL SAUCE," without which none can be genuine.

C. H. also begs to acquaint those who have not yet made trial of this much approved Sauce, that the flavor will be found quite different, and far superior to any yet offered, for all kinds of Curries, Steaks, Stews, Chops, Hashes, Game, Grills, Broiled and Wild Fowl, Cold Meat, and for enriching Gravies, &c. and feels assured, that when tasted, it will fully justify what he has above stated. To Merchants and East and West India Captains, it is strongly recommended being warranted to retain its full flavor in any climate.

To be had at the Manufactory, No. 68, Long Lane, Borough; the Piazza Coffee House, Covent Garden; the Queen's Head Tavern, Holborn; and at any of the principal Oilmen and Grocers, in Town and Country.

BURGESS' ESSENCE of ANCHOVIES, Warehouse, 107, STRAND, corner of Savoy Steps, London.---JOHN BURGESS and SON, being apprised of the numerous endeavours made by many persons to impose a spurious article for their make, feel it incumbent upon them to request the attention of the public, in purchasing what they conceive to be the ORIGINAL, to observe the Name and Address correspond with the above. The general appearance of the spurious descriptions will deceive the unguarded, and for their detection J. B. and Son submit the following caution:---Some are in appearance at first sight " Burgess' Essence of Anchovies;" others, " Burgis's," and many more without address.---JOHN BURGESS and SON having been many years honoured with such distinguished approbation, feel every sentiment of respect towards the public, and earnestly solicit them to inspect the labels previous to purchasing what they conceive to be of their make, which they hope will prevent many disappointments.

Burgess' New Sauce for general purposes having given such great satisfacfaction, continues to be prepared by them, and is recommended as a most useful and convenient sauce; will keep good in all climates.

IMPOSTURE UNMASKED.—The progress of Merit, although frequently assailed, is not impeded by Envy and Detraction. The aggression of ambuscade terminates in defeat; and conscious rectitude ultimately triumphs in the attainment of the grand object—public approbation The test of experience is the guarantee of favour, and has established WARREN's BLACKING in general estimation; of which there exists not a stronger proof than the tacit acknowledgment of a host of servile imitators, who surreptitiously obtrude on the unwary a spurious preparation as the genuine article, to the great disappointment of the unguarded purchaser, and manifest injury of WARREN, whose character and interest by this iniquitous system are equally subject to detriment. It becomes therefore an indispensable duty to CAUTION THE PUBLIC against the manœuvres of Unprincipled Venders, who having no character to lose, and stimulated by avarice in their nefarious pursuits, aim at the acquisition of money through any medium than that of honour! The original and matchless BLACKING bears on each bottle a short direction, with the signature

ROBERT WARREN

All others are counterfeits; and in many instances the imposition labels are artfully interlined with a different address, in very small characters, between the more conspicuous ones of " No. 30," and " STRAND." It is earnestly recommended to Shopkeepers and others who are deceived by base fabrications of WARREN's BLACKING, to return the detected trash to the source whence it came, and expose the machinations of rascality to merited obloquy.

WARREN's BLACKING is surpassingly brilliant;—it excludes damp; gives pliancy to the leather; retains its pristine virtue in all climates; and, combining elegance with comfort, is an article equally of indispensable fashion and utility. Sold by every respectable Vender in Town and Country, in bottles at 6d. 10d. 12d. and 18d. each.

A BIOGRAPHICAL DICTIONARY of PAINTERS and ENGRAVERS, from the Revival of Painting, and the alleged Discovery of Engraving by Finiguerra. By MICHAEL BRYAN.

"We congratulate the lovers of the Fine Arts on the appearance of this important publication. The Work, a great improvement, as well as enlargement, of Pilkington's design, is evidence of the diligence and talents of the Author, which will hand down his name with distinction to the latest posterity. Having constant need of reference to it, we can take upon ourselves to Vouch for its general accuracy, research, and ability. Several of the original sketches are, indeed, admirably written; and the whole forms a compendium and index of arts and artists unequalled, as far as we know, in any language.—LITERARY GAZETTE.

IMPERIAL PARLIAMENT.

HOUSE OF LORDS.

Tuesday, May 2.

The Earl of MALMESBURY observed, that the Corn Laws had no more to do with the distress than the changes of the moon; but objecting particularly to the second part of the proposition, he gave notice of a motion for Monday, that although it may be expedient to admit into the market the foreign corn now under bond, the House cannot accede to any further alteration in the Corn Laws without inquiry.

Some Peers spoke briefly on the subject, and the question remains to be fully debated on Monday, for which day the House was ordered to be summoned.

HOUSE OF COMMONS.

Monday, May 1.

Mr. CANNING gave notice that he should, this day, move for leave to bring in a bill similar to that of last session, for allowing the corn at present in bond to come into the market..

Mr. TIERNEY expressed his satisfaction at the notice.

Mr. PHILIPS was of opinion that the corn laws in general ought to be discussed—a discussion which Mr. Canning distinctly and pointedly declared to be quite unfit for the present state of the country.

Mr. ELLICE thought a specific sum ought to be appropriated to the relief of the sufferers, and asked if such were the intentions of his Majesty's Government.

Mr. CANNING replied, that it was not the intention of Government to enter into the discussion of any other measure except that of which he had given notice.

Mr. T. WILSON was of opinion, that no subscription would avail unless something was advanced by Government.

The CHANCELLON of the EXCHEQUER and Mr. PEEL deprecated such proposals, as calculated to damp the charitable zeal of the public.

After a few words from Sir JOHN WROTTESLEY, the subject dropped.

Tuesday, May 2.

THE CORN TRADE.

On Mr. Secretary CANNING's moving the order of the day for the House to resolve itself into a committee on the Act of Geo. III. relative to the corn trade,

Sir THOMAS LETHBRIDGE said, he rose with great pain to give any interruption to the motion of the Right Hon. Gent. (Mr. Canning), and with a strong feeling of the responsibility under which any Member must labour who should put himself forward to interrupt what was commonly called and received as a measure of relief to those classes whose sufferings every one must, and which he, for one, did most deeply deplore. Although Lord Milton was of the class called the lauded interest, he was so large a proprietor that it was a matter of little interest to him what was the price of agricultural produce in this country. But that was not the case with the great body, and in their names it was that he objected to this measure, and proposed to show, and he had no doubt he should be followed by others, who would show the improper nature of this measure as one of relief; if he understood the measure, it went to the point of letting the bonded corn out of bond at a duty of 12s. That was the proposition to be submitted in the first place, and to that proposition he had not so great an objection as to the other, which involved the whole principle of the corn laws. If he was incorrect in that assumption, he should only waste the time of the House by going into any further argument. He could not conceive how a proposition of this description could he brought forward without discussing the whole subject of the corn laws. If he were to concur in the proposition of the Right Honourable Gentleman, he should admit at once that the high price of corn was the cause of the present distress. He hoped, therefore, that the Right Hon. Gentleman would not press his measure. He would also press upon his attention, that there was another mode of relieving this distress, and that was, by voting a sum of money for the purpose. If the manufacturer could go on paying the labourer his wages, there would be an end of the distress. If the agricultural interest was destroyed, the manufacturing interest would be destroyed. The domestic trade of the country was three-fifths of the whole; and as this was our best and surest market, so it was of the utmost importance to preserve this part of it. He hoped, before the House gave way to the motion of the Right Honourable Gentleman, that it would be quite certain that it was proceeding on solid grounds. He should, therefore, move an amendment—"That a select Committee be appointed to inquire into the causes of the distress in the manufacturing districts."

Mr. BENETT seconded the amendment.

Upon the SPEAKER's moving the question,

Mr. CANNING said, that, in simply making his motion without prefacing it by any observation, he had been actuated by no want of respect for the opinions of those who differed from him; but he had thought, and he thought so still, that whatever discussion was to arise would have been most conveniently taken in the committee; as some Hon. Gentlemen, however, were of a different way of thinking, he could have no hesitation in adopting whatever course seemed to them most desirable, and would therefore, at once, trouble the House with the very few words which he had to offer upon the question. And, first, he begged to assure the Hon. Member for Wiltshire, that no man could think more unworthily of Government than Ministers, and he, for one, would be inclined to think of themselves, if there was any foundation for the charge, that they were now attempting, by a side wind, to alter the established system of the corn laws. Whenever that subject might be brought forward, gentlemen would do him the justice to recollect, that he had hitherto had no discussion upon it. The Right Hon Gentleman sat down by repeating to the House his assurance, that ministers, in asking this discretion from the House, asked that which, but for the peculiar exigency of present circumstances, their greatest comfort would be the failing to obtain.

Mr. BANKES thought that the measures of Ministers ought to have been taken much earlier; he thought too, that there could be nothing in their policy which might not be more fully explained than it had been so far.

Mr. WHITMORE could not, as some gentlemen seemed to do, consider the present measure as unconnected with the general question of the corn laws, which he so lately had brought forward to the notice of the House, and however he might have succeeded in making himself intelligible to those who heard him on that occasion, he was fearful that his views and opinions had not gone forth to the country in as clear a way as he could have wished. He stated then, and repeated now, that the time was arrived when the subject of the corn laws should engage the most serious attention of the House. Government, however, had thought otherwise, and the further agitation of that great question was accordingly deferred. Under the present afflicting circumstances, he was of opinion that the measure proposed by his Majesty's Government would have the best effect: and, looking at the existing distress, he was persuaded, that if Parliament dissolved without alleviating that distress as far as might be practicable, consequences the most disastrous would have followed.

Mr. CALCRAFT thought that no measure was more likely than the present to create disunion between the agricultural and manufacturing interests. It would be better for his Majesty's ministers to obtain regularly the opinion of parliament as to what should be done with the corn laws, and there would be no discontent whatever, whether the decision were one way or the other. Taking off the restriction on foreign corn would have no effect in relieving the distress of the manufacturing districts, (hear); neither could individual subscriptions do it. He hoped that ministers would not persevere in the second proposition, and that a vote would pass for the relief of the distressed manufacturers.

Sir J. NEWPORT said that he would vote for the committee on the express condition that it be an instruction to it, that after first considering the question as to letting the bonded corn into consumption, it should afterwards take into consideration the general question of the corn laws, in order to see how far the second measure proposed would be proper, under present circumstances.

Lord J. RUSSELL thought it was matter of just complaint against ministers, that they had a few days ago refused to interfere in any way with the corn laws, during the present year, and now they came down and proposed a direct interference, as a necessary means of relief to the country.

Mr. HUSKISSON said, that after the long discussion to which the motion before the House had given rise, he was still of the opinion he had before entertained—that the present was neither a fit nor a convenient season for going into a consideration of the Corn Laws. It seemed, that since yesterday new lights had been let in on this question. Whether they arose in that House, or were inoculated from another quarter, he would not say; hut they appeared to have impressed some Hon. Members with the notion, that Government intended to proclaim to the country, that the present distress arose from the operation of the Corn Laws. Without any disrespect to those who held this opinion, he must say, that it was almost absurd to suppose Ministers could come to that House with such a proposition. He would now say, as he had always said, that those laws were not the cause of that distress, and he would be able to satisfy the House that the relief proposed was not proposed on any such assumption. The measure was intended to afford a certain relief, and to allay the irritation which prevailed on this subject in many of the distressed districts. But a few facts would be better than general reasoning on this point, and therefore he would call the attention of the House to what was the state of the country at the corresponding period of the last year. At that period, when the most active employment prevailed in the cotton trade—when every exertion was made to extend it—when the whole world was ransacked for materials for building new factories—when credit was very high, and the whole of the manufacturers were in full work; during all that period of prosperity in the trade, corn was at some 6s. or 7s. higher per quarter than it was at present. With such facts before him he would ask, could it be for a moment supposed that any reasonable man would come forward with a wish to spread such a declaration as that the Corn Laws were the cause of the distress? When he said that corn was higher last year than at present, he meant that it was nominally so; but considering the difference in the price of other commodities at present, and the difference in the price of labour now, from what it was then, the present price was not much lower in reality. He had said, he thought, enough to show that the price of corn was not the cause of the present distress. He would now advert to another part of the argument. It was said that a want of credit was a cause; hut if so, he would ask how that could be remedied, unless an increased demand could be created? That could not be until prices looked up. It was true, that a want of demand caused a want of employment; but at present all were not out of employment. Many were still at work, but on reduced wages. Now, if the legislature could, by the proposed measure, so reduce the price of corn, or at least prevent its rising beyond its present price, as to enable the manufacturers to eke out the time until a more brisk demand arose, it would accomplish no inconsiderable good. Let it be borne in mind, that without the measure now proposed, corn (if the ports were not opened before the 15th of this month—of which there was not a possible chance), might rise, not merely to 80s. but to 180s. and still the ports could not, by law, be opened before the first week after the 15th of August, unless Parliament were in the interim called together. Were they then, to enact until that period! Would it be a proper time to enter into a discussion of the whole subject of the Corn Laws when famine stalked the land?—Could a temperate discussion of the subject be hoped for under such circumstances? It was, therefore, better to provide in time, and not to depend on such contingencies. Let not gentlemen, then, run away with the impression, that by the adoption of this measure, the ports must necessarily be opened. They would remain shut, unless such circumstances occurred as would render their opening an object of paramount necessity. There was another difficulty, which he begged leave to suggest to the Hon. Baronet. The Hon. Baronet had said, that upon former occasions Ministers had acted upon their own discretion, and had then come down to Parliament to obtain an indemnity. But the Hon. Baronet, when he made use of that observation, ought to have recollected that the prohibition of foreign corn in the first instance, and then its importation at a fixed duty in the second, were the inventions of modern times. He asked the Hon. Baronet whether the Crown could of itself impose a duty of 17s. upon foreign corn! The duty, the Hon. Baronet ought to know, was contingent on the price in the home market, was fixed in its amount, and was besides imposed by Parliament; and therefore when the Hon. Baronet said, "let Ministers act upon their own discretion, he had merely to reply that the only discretion, indeed, the only power which ministers had left to them to act on, was the opening of the ports at once, free from all duty whatsoever.

Mr. J. WILLIAMS contended that the country was reduced to that desperate condition which called for the most grave and immediate attention of the House.

Mr. E. WODEHOUSE said a few words, inculpatory of Mr. Jacob's report on the foreign corn trade.

The gallery was then cleared for a division.

The numbers were—

For the amendment, 82—Against it, 214.—Majority, 132.

The original motion was then agreed to without a division.

On re-entering the gallery, we found the House in a committee, and

Sir J. SEBRIGHT declaring that he would oppose the second resolution, because he considered that it involved the whole question of the corn laws.—(Hear.)

Lord MILTON moved, as an amendment, "that the Chairman do report progress, and ask leave to sit again."

The House divided on the amendment, and the numbers were—

For the amendment, 109—Against it, 60.—Majority, 49.

The other orders of the day were gone through, and the House adjourned.

Thursday, May 4.

The Scotch peerage restoration bill was read a third time and passed.

STATE OF THE NATION.

Mr. HUME said, that in presenting himself to the House, to state a question, which formerly had been submitted to it by persons whose talents and eloquence had induced Parliament to give them its utmost attention, he had to crave as much indulgence as the House could possibly grant to him, whilst he brought under its consideration a statement which was of the utmost importance at the present moment, and which he had given notice that he should make more than two months ago. The motion, of which he had then given notice, had been introduced by those able and eloquent persons, with a view of interfering with the policy of ministers and of removing them, if possible, from the offices they held. He had no such intention in his motion, which he had denominated a motion on the state of the nation, because it was out of his power to apply any other words to it. Ministers had acted in a spirit with which he was much pleased, and though they had not gone as far as he could have wished, and as he thought the interests of the country required, in reducing the public expenditure, still they had acted creditably enough upon the whole; and he had therefore supported them upon every motion which they had introduced this session, save those which referred to the public expenditure. (A laugh.) He had looked at the condition of the country in a very different light from that in which ministers and their friends had been accustomed to contemplate it; and he regretted to find that attempts had been made from time to time to induce the country to believe that the present degree of taxation, which was much greater than it had ever endured before, or than any country ought to endure, was not more than commensurate to the expenses which it must inevitably and of necessity incur. He regretted sincerely that any attempts had been made to impress such an opinion upon the country, and he should now endeavour, as far as in him lay, to remove that ill-founded and unfortunate delusion. By the courtesy of the Treasury, he had been enabled in order to render himself intelligible, to place in the shape of printed resolutions, certain propositions which he intended to enforce that night in the course of his speech. Those resolutions were at present in the Vote-office, and were of such a nature that any gentleman by looking at them would understand without much difficulty all his propositions, except those which related to the sinking fund. The resolutions which related to that fund would require the undivided attention of the House, and he would therefore discuss them singly at a future period, in order not to embarrass with unnecessary matter the discussion of the present night. He should endeavour to show, that the present system of the sinking fund inflicted upon the country a degree of taxation which no country ought to suffer, and that it enforced a system of unequal laws, which rendered the attainment of universal prosperity utterly impracticable.

After entering very fully into the discussion, the Honourable Member concluded by moving, "That an humble address be presented to his Majesty, praying that he will be graciously pleased to take into immediate consideration the present state of the nation; and to direct an immediate inquiry into the causes that have produced such wide-spreading distress; and also that he will be pleased to direct such measures to be adopted as will terminate, as speedily as possible, the existing embarrassments."

The motion having been seconded,

The CHANCELLON of the EXCHEQUER rose.—It was not, he said, until 11 o'clock that morning, that he was put in possession of the series of resolutions to which the Hon. Gentleman had just called the attention of the House; and when he (the Chancellor of the Exchequer) stated, that those resolutions were no less than 47 in number, and occupied 26 printed pages, embracing the intricate question of the finance of the country in all its minute details, the funded debt, the unfunded debt, the sinking-fund, the general state of the revenue,—divided as it was into a great variety of branches, to many of which these resolutions referred;—when he stated, that the proposition of the Hon. Gentleman comprised almost every topic that could be introduced into a discussion on the great interests of the country, he thought the House would not be surprised when he said, that it was absolutely beyond the mental and physical powers of any man to deliver his opinions at so very short a notice on the complicated, extensive, and important subjects which the Hon. Gentleman had submitted to the House. (Hear.) He must, therefore, take the liberty of asking pardon of the House, if, on the far greater part of what had fallen from the Hon. Gentleman, he found it impossible for him to enter into any satisfactory, or even intelligible statement. He certainly had no conception, when he that morning received the Hon. Gentleman's long series of resolutions, that the Hon. Gentleman's motion would have been that which he had thought proper to propose (hear)—namely, an address to the Crown, praying his Majesty to take into consideration the various embarrassments of the present period, and to adopt measures for their relief, the principal of which measures appeared to be the reduction of taxation. (Hear.) This seemed to him to be the most extraordinary result from the propositions which the Hon. Gentleman had stated, that could be conceived—and one to which, he thought, the House could not accede, if they meant to act on the resolutions which the Honourable Gentleman had read in the course of his speech. (Hear.) When, however, he received those resolutions, he felt that, formidable as they might be in extent, it was his duty to make himself acquainted with the points to which they adverted, and to examine how far it would be in his power either to admit or to deny their accuracy. In the very first resolution, he found that the Honourable Gentleman charged him with making false statements to the House. This was done he knew in indirect terms; but of what consequence was that, if, in substance, the resolution went to inculpate him? The substance of the resolution did, in effect, charge him with having, either from gross ignorance, or wilful delusion, or fraudulent design, stated to the House that which was not consistent with the fact. Now he would take the liberty to deny that assertion, and farther, he would take the liberty to say that there was, in that very accusatory resolution, a statement of the kind which the Hon. Gentleman had imputed to him. (Hear.) He would presently point out what that statement was. But he must in the first instance observe, that it was a most unprecedented thing to charge a member of that house with a deliberate falsehood, the accusation being founded, not on an accurate knowledge of what that gentleman said at the time referred to, but on some unauthorised report of his speech. (Hear, hear.) In the Hon. Gentleman's first resolution he had referred to what was stated to have been said by him (the Chancellor of the Exchequer) on the 3d of March, 1823. Now he must observe, that he was not answerable for what had been published as his speech; he had never noticed it, and, he must say that looking to the common principle of justice, the Hon. Gentleman had no right, on such authority, to charge him with deliberate falsehood. (Mr. Hume intimated that he had not done so.) He (the Chancellor of the Exchequer) could not qualify the expression; for, if that resolution were true, then he (the Chancellor of the Exchequer) was guilty of fraud—he was not fit to sit in that house—he was unworthy of holding any situation in his Majesty's Government. (Hear.) But he would contend, that it was the resolution which contained that which was not true. It was impossible to expect that the house should, on 47 resolutions—not one of which number had been proposed in the regular way—be called upon to vote an address to the Crown. No man could vote for that address, because the first resolution was at variance with fact. In common sense, therefore, and common justice, no man could vote for the rest of those resolutions. He for one should withhold his assent to the address—not, however, that he did not feel as he should feel the distressed and difficult situation in which the country stood at the present moment. The man must be cold indeed, who could not commiserate the distresses to which his fellow-men were reduced. (Cheers.) The Hon. Gentleman had no right to charge his Majesty's Government with a want of commiseration, or to infer that they were deficient in humanity, because they were not over eager to adopt his measures. It would surely be the highest injustice to draw the inference, that because Government were obliged to decline the adoption of any measures which Hon. Gentlemen might endeavour to force upon them, that therefore they were deaf to the distresses of country. (Cheers.)

The motion to adjourn was negatived without a division, and the house divided on the original motion, when the numbers were—

For the motion, 51 | Against it, 152 | Majority, 101.

Friday, May 5.

LORD NORBURY.—PETITION OF MR. O'CONNELL.

Mr. SCARLETT rose to present a petition from an eminent barrister of the Irish bar. The petition was from Mr. Daniel O'Connell, a distinguished member of the Irish bar; and it called the attention of the House to the facts, that Lord Norbury, the present Chief Justice of the Common Pleas in Ireland, was in a very advanced state of old age—now 85. That from physical infirmities incidental to that advanced period of life, he had become utterly unfit to discharge efficiently the high and important duties of his judicial situation ; and that he was so deaf, as that he heard with great difficulty, unless he was addressed in a tone unusually loud. It was also stated that he was frequently affected with a lethargic stupor, which caused him to fall asleep while in the performance of some of his most important judicial duties. One instance was mentioned in which this occurred on a very important trial, in the course of which the learned lord fell asleep, and one of the harristers employed felt it necessary to request the jury to take notes of what was passing, that they might be able to inform his lordship when he awoke. Another case was given—that on the trial of a person for murder, the Lord Chief Justice fell asleep during part of the time, and subsequently in his address to the jury he omitted that part of the evidence, and charged the jury. The jury, however, having heard all the evidence, found the prisoner guilty, contrary to his lordship's charge.

On the question that the petition be brought up,

Mr. GOULBURN said the petition was signed by only one individual, and it related only to that individual's statement of the noble lord's age, and to his opinion of his incapacity from that circumstance. He would not say that age might not incapacitate a man from the discharge of important duties—but he did not know that Lord Norbury was older than other judges who were now discharging the duties of their office with ability and advantage to the public. He had had frequent intercourse with that learned lord, and in the course of it he had not found in him any unfitness for the duties of his situation. He had not the honour of being a member of the Irish bar, but he could produce evideuce from the opinions of the judges iu Ireland, of the competency of the learned lord.

The petition was then brought up and read.

CORN LAWS.

Upon its being moved by Mr. CANNING that the Speaker leave the chair.

Sir T. LETHBRIDGE said, that after the discussion which had already taken place on this question, he should not oppose the Speaker's leaving the chair ; but he should forward the objections which he entertained against this measure in the Committee.

Mr. CALCRAFT did not conceive that the Hon. Baronet would have been guilty of any want of courtesy if he had opposed the going into a committee. For his own part, he trusted that ministers would meet with a stubborn opposition to the remaining part of the proposition which they now sought to carry.

Sir E. KNATCHBULL observed, that owing to its having been repeatedly stated by ministers that they would not at all interfere with the corn-laws this session, he had communicated to his constituents that there would be no occasion for them to trorble the house with any petitions against an alteration in these laws. Under these circumstances, he could not think of acceding to the proposition now proposed.

Mr. CANNING stated the details and defended the principle of the measure. He began by endeavouring to show that ministers had not acted inconsistently in first opposing the general discussion of the corn laws, and then bringing forward a bill which would have the effect of suspending their operation. The policy of postponing the general settlement of these laws rested on grounds which were at the time deemed satisfactory ; and the circumstances which justified the claim which ministers now made on Parliament had arisen since, and were totally independent of the former question. A week or a day, at certain periods of the year, might alter the prospect of the conntry so completely respecting the supply of its subsistence, as to render a change of measures absolutely necessary. He did not say that any such circumstances had occurred, or that any such crisis was to be apprehended ; but as there was a possibility that we might have a late harvest, if not a scanty crop, it was advisable that ministers should be armed with a power to provide against such a contingency. As nobody contended that the average price of wheat could rise to the limit fixed by the existing law for the admission of foreign grain, without indicating an approach to famine, and occasioning incalculable misery, Government, in the apprehension of an insufficient supply of food from our own soil, had only one of two courses to pursue. Either they would be compelled to suspend the existing law to relieve the wants of the people, and afterwards apply to Parliament for an indemnity, or, in anticipation of such a contingency, they were bound to ask Parliament the power of acting. As government did not desire an unlimited responsibility, their power might be restricted in three ways—either by the price of admission, the extent of duty, or the amount of quantity. After considering the two former conditions, ministers had to fix upon the last. The bill would limit the quantity to 500,000 quarters, or about half the amount of our greatest importation. He did not profess to decide on the price at which wheat should be admitted, though it appeared that it would be somewhere about 65s. A maximum of duty would be fixed as it was at present, but in the exercise of their discretion the government would not be bound by any fixed rate.

With the exception of Mr. Peel's speech, the subsequent debate was chiefly conducted by country gentlemen.

Mr. PEEL denied the charges or insinuations of negligence brought against him in some quarters, and stated that without any application he had doubled the number of troops in the distressed quarters, while he had never refused military aid when the magistrates stated its necessity.

Mr. T. WILSON made a few observations.

Sir Edward Knatchbull, Mr. Holme Sumner, Mr. Canning, and several other members, addressed the committee.

Sir ROBERT HENON expressed his intention, if any hon. member would support him, of dividing the committee upon the question under consideration.

After a few remarks from Sir JOHN BRYDGES, the gallery was cleared for a division, but none took place.

The motion was therefore carried.

FOREIGN INTELLIGENCE.

The French papers of Sunday contained a repetition of the rumours which they had previously circulated respecting the success of the Grecks in repulsing their enemies before Missolonghi. This important intelligence, as it is called, is again vouched for with additional confidence, and published with minute detail. It is now varied with a report that an armistice had been agreed upon between the Greeks and the Infidels, for the purpose of commencing negociations for a final arrangement of their interests, under the mediation of Austria and England. We need scarcely say, that after the numberless contradictions of the late rumours from Greece, the public will require some stronger authority for victories or massacres than that of anonymous letters from Zante, or Corfu, Trieste, or Leghorn. The news that Missolonghi still holds out is given on the authority of a correspondent of M. Delessert, the respectable Paris banker.

It is mentioned in the Quotidienne, that King Charles X. was to walk in the last jubilee procession, which was to take place on the 3d instant.

The French papers of Tuesday contain the two following paragraphs, the first of which professes to be the substance of the ultimatum of the Russian Emperor to the Porte. We have reason to believe that the representation of the manifesto is in the main accurately given :—

From the Etoile, dated Wednesday, May 3.

" Letters from Constantinople of 7th April, say that a courier from St. Petersburgh had arrived in the night of the 4th at the residence of M. Minziacky, and it was reported that he was the bearer of a categorical declaration from the Emperor Nicholas, in which that monarch insists on the necessity of terminating the differences between Russia and the Porte. It is added, that in this note the Emperor complains, though in very temperate language, of the silence of the Porte on the preceding complaints of Russia, and demands the re-establishment of the privileges of the two principalities, as well as the immediate sending of Turkish commissioners to settle, in concert with Russian negociators, and in a place designated by the Porte, the difficulties which have so long subsisted between that power and Russia. M. Minziacky, to whom the same courier has brought very precise instructions, delivered on the 5th of April the declaration of his Sovereign. As the time of six weeks is fixed for the answer, the Porte may very likely profit by the delay, and not answer immediately. Up to to-day there has not been any Divan, and the report, according to which the Reis Effendi, after this declaration, which has produced an extraordinary sensation at Pera, has made declarations respecting a renewal of the claim on the Asiatic fortresses, seems to want confirmation."—Gazette Universelle.

" LAUSANNE, April 28.—The Lausanne Gazette gives the following news from Corfu, of 6th April :—The most recent letters from Zante and Prevesa confirm the news that Ibraham Pacha was mortally wounded in the last attack made on Missolonghi, 23d March, N. S. An English vessel arrived yesterday from Malta ; the Captain has stated to the magistrates that he met near Cerigo the Greek fleet, which having learnt that a large convoy of Turkish vessels was on the way from Egypt to the Morea, had sailed in quest of it, and captured almost the whole. This explains the delay of the Greek fleet in proceeding to Missolonghi, but it is hoped that nothing will now retard it.

" A letter of 9th April says, that Missolonghi still holds out, and even triumphs."

The Austrian Observer to the 24th ult. furnishes the following interesting details respecting Missolonghi :—

" VIENNA, APRIL 22.—Accounts from Corfu, of April 3, say, that since the 20th March, no news had been received there of the fate of Missolonghi, probably on account of the continuance of the north winds. The last quite authentic account was received, when, on the 20th, the Lord High Commissioner returned from Cephalonia, on board the Naiad, Capt. Spencer. General Adam had been on the 17th with Capt. Spencer to the camp before Missolonghi, where he had a conference of two hours with Ibraham Pacha in his tent, in the presence of the Seraskier, Redschid Mehemet Pacha, and of the two Commissioners from the Porte, Husney Bey, and Nedschid Effendi. In this conference he solicited Ibrahim to allow the women, children, and old men, to leave Missolonghi unmolested. Ibrahim declared himself ready to do this, if Missolonghi were surrendered, and the garrison laid down their arms, in which case they should be permitted to retire unhurt as well as the garrison of Anatolico. The proposal was, however, rejected hy the besieged, on which general Adam re-embarked, aud Missolonghi was left to its fate."

THE ARMY.

His Royal Highness the Commander-in-Chief held a Levee at his office in the Horse-Guards on Tuesday. Mr. Secretary Peel was in constant communication with the Duke of York during the day, except while he was engaged at the Cabinet Council, making the arrangements that are necessary for the marching of the different troops.

The King of Prussia has appointed his Grace the Duke of Wellington Colonel of the 28th regiment of Prussian Infantry, in garrison at Cologne.

ARMY MOVEMENTS.

The 36th (Herefordshire) regiment of Foot marched on Wednesday, from Colchester, for Manchester.

One squadron of the 8th (the King's Royal Irish) regiment of Light Dragoons (Hussars) marched on Wednesday from Brighton, for Canterbury.

One troop of the 8th Hussars has received orders to march from Brighton for Deal.

The depot of the 52d regiment of Infantry has received orders to march from Chichester to Brighton.

Detachments belonging to the 64th and 68th regiments of Foot, marched on Wednesday, from Westminster for Plymouth, via Bristol.

Detachments belonging to the 33d, 50th, and 77th regiments of infantry, marched on Wednesday, from Westminster, for Bristol, on route to Ireland.

A detachment of the 17th Lancers, marched on Wednesday from Westminster, for Exeter.

The 1st battalion of the Coldstream regiment of Guards, marched on Wednesday, from Finsbury quarters, to Knightsbridge barracks.

The 2d battalion of the 3d Foot Guards, procceded on Wednesday, to occupy the quarters vacated by the 1st battalion of the Coldstream regiment of Guards.

The 77th (East Middlesex) regiment of Infantry has completed its augmentation establishment.

A detachment belonging to the Veteran Companies, embarked on the 2d instant, on board the Orpheus convict ship, at Chatham, for New South Wales.

A detachment of the 60th Rifle Corps marched on Wednesday from Westminster, for Manchester.

A detachment of the 90th foot, marched on Wednesday, from Westminster, for Radford.

MEETING AT THE CITY OF LONDON TAVERN.

The Lord Mayor opened the business by stating, that he had called the present Meeting at the expressed wishes of many individuals distinguished in the City of London, as taking a lead in whatever was interesting to the City or the Empire, and who felt upon this occasion anxious to set on foot and arrange the means of procuring contributions for the relief of the distressed manufacturers of the country. He begged pardon for having kept the meeting waiting, but it arose from the current of munificent donations which had poured in upon them with so much force. (Great applause.) His Lordship expressed his conviction that this City, which had ever stood forward in the cause of charity, would not be backward upon this trying occasion. They had answered calls from foreign countries—from quarters, far and near, and in causes of every complexion and description ; and he was sure, when the cry of distress was heard from the heart of their native land, the same generous and noble feelings would be inspired, and the same return and assistance be given. (Applause.)

The list of subscriptions, which was very long, was then read.

The resolutions having been read, and unanimously adopted,

Mr. Winns observed, that he thought, as some of the ministers were present, some notice ought to be taken of the causes which had led to the present distress. (Cries of " no, no.")

The Lord Mayor said they had met for purposes of charity, and not for political discussion at all. (Applause.)

The Bishop of London said that as the business of the meeting had thus happily come to an end, he rose to propose the thanks of the meeting to the Lord Mayor.

Upon this, Mr. Burridge (a gentleman who petitions Parliament upon the subject of dry rot in the navy,) rose, and began to address the meeting in the midst of conflicting dissent and applause, upon the subject of the Corn Laws. He quoted several passages from scripture, and moved a resolution respecting the repeal of the Corn Laws.

This motion was disregarded, and thanks were voted to the Lord Mayor, and a motion of adjournment agreed to.

A Mr. Fortune attempted, but in vain, to address the Meeting ; the tendency and matter of his speech, as far as it was possible to judge of it, appeared to be of the same nature as that of Mr. Burridge.

A Mr. Wright then essayed a similar interference with the purposes of the Meeting. The strength of his lungs overcame the tumult of dissent by which his object was met ; and he was plainly enough heard to refer his hearers to the Gentleman's Magazine for the year 1769, for an account of the quantity of wheat ordered by the magistrates for the subsistence of the poor. He was proceeding to draw a comparison betwixt those times and the present, when, by the united persuasions of the Chairman and the Bishop of London, silence and order were restored.

The business of the Meeting had now come to a termination, but there was a manifest indisposition in the assembled crowd to depart.

A loud call was made upnn Mr. Peel, which at length became so loud and unanimous, that the Right Hon. Gentleman was induced to rise.

It was some minutes before the applause which greeted this concession to the wishes of the Meeting subsided. Those at the lower end of the room, whose sight was impeded by the intervening mass of the audience, mounted on chairs, and were very clamorous for the Right Hon. Gentleman to get upon the table, in order to their better view, and hearing of his discourse. Silence, however, being obtained.

Mr. Peel spoke as follows—Gentlemen, I am here merely as a private individual—(hear, hear) ; taking a deep interest, for many persons, in the welfare of those manufacturing districts which are the most distressed, and coming here to co-operate with you in the measures of relief which it may be desirable and practicable to adopt. (Applause.) I return my thanks to those Gentlemen who were desirous of introducing topics of discussion, which it would be well to attend to in other times, for the readiness with which they yielded to the feeling evinced with respect to their intentions, seeing that the more unanimous are our proceedings upon this melancholy occasion, the more likely are we to secure the efficient and extended concurrence of the charitable feelings of the country in the benevolent purpose we have in view. (Applause.) The proofs of distress are so painful, and so obvious, and speak for themselves with a voice so overwhelming, that it is impossible to find language, better calculated than the simple facts, to recommend the objects of the meeting. I hold in my hand a report from one of the districts suffering at the present moment, which, if it is the pleasure of the meeting, I will read. (Hear.) I do this, not for the purpose of harrowing the feelings with pictures of individual distress ; but to shew the paramount necessity of exertion on the part of those who are prepared to assist this meeting, in alleviating that distress, which has already drawn nearly to exhaustion, from the funds which already have been so praise-worthily bestowed for the demands of misery.—This letter is from the vicar of the parish of Bolton, a very populous place, about nine or ten miles from Manchester. It was addressed to me, with the request that I would lay the statement of their sufferings before his Majesty—an appeal to the beneficence of that august Personage, which I need hardly tell you, was instantly met by a contribution, besides that which he has this day presented. (Great applause.) The letter, which was then read by the Right Hon. Gentleman, was nearly to the following effect :—

" BOLTON, April 29, 1826.—As vicar of rhis parish, and Chairman of the Committee for the relief of the poor in this district, I am commissioned by the magistrates and competent authorities here, to request you will represent to his Majesty the deplorable condition of distress to which the labouring population in this neighbourhood are reduced. Considerable numbers are out of employ, and but very few are able to obtain sufficient to support their families. The sufferings from hunger are extreme. The large subscription of nearly 1,200l., which had been raised in the vicinity is nearly all gone ; and although the opulent here are well disposed to alleviate to the utmost the distress, in these times. it is next to impossible to obtain another supply. Under these afflicting circumstances, we are emboldened to throw ourselves upon the known compassion of his most gracious Majesty, begging of you, Sir, to be the channel of communicating the sufferings of the poor of Bolton to our Sovercign." What remains, Gentlemen (said the Right Honourable Gentleman) is most worthy your attention. " It is my duty and pride to add, that the suffering poor of this place are not unworthy the bounty of their King. They have borne their privations with the most exemplary patience ; and no where are the people of this realm more sincerely attached to the sacred person of his Majesty than at Bolton." (Considerable applause.) Now, Gentlemen, although it is most true, that there have been great and culpable excesses committed under the sufferings of the moment, I take it that the description contained in this Rev. Gentleman's letter, is not an unfair speeimen of the condition and behaviour of the great body of the manufacturing classes at the present critical period. Although the direct relief thus afforded to the people of Rochdale will be great, the moral effect produced by the spontaneous assistance afforded, will be still greater. I was told by the Chairman that at the 500l. sent by the King, the people rejoiced more from the knowledge that there were hearts at a distance, in which their sufferings could find such an advocate, that at the immediate relief they obtained from the donation. (Hear.) I will now say no more upon a subject, which, as I have already observed, requires no extraneous recommendation. I might refer to other parts of the country for a picture to move compassion ; but I have presented to you what I think a fair sample of the prevalent distress, and not an unfair specimen of the general patience with which it is borne. Although there are excesses which must, and (with great emphasis) shall be repressed by the strong hand of the law, (hear) ; yet there is in general, all through the country, a meek and patient spirit. But, Gentlemen, I would impress upon you that there are other places, besides those of which we hear, where distress may press with a heavy hand. Manchester, Rochdale, and Bolton, may possess means through the daily press to make known their condition ; but in the mountainous districts of the country this is not, I fear, the case ; and I trust that, nevertheless, these remote parts will be made accessible to your bounty.—(Hear, hear, hear.) Gentlemen, I did not intend, when I entered the room, to address a single observation to you. It is not essential to the object of the meeting ; and I trust we shall be allowed to separate without any discussion upon topics which do not enter into the strict purpose for which we are met.—(Continued cheering.)

The meeting then broke up at a quarter past three o'clock.

STATE PAPER OFFICE.—By the industry and research of Mr. Lemon, very extraordinary and interesting discoveries have recently been made in this office. Amongst other valuable papers, an entire translation of Boethius, by Queen Elizabeth ; the prose in the hand-writing of her Majesty's secretary ; and the whole of the poetry in the Queen's own autograph. Parts of a poetical translation of Horace, written by the Queen, have likewise been found. What is far more important, as it relates to the history of that period, nearly all the documents connected with the events that occurred during the reign of Henry VIII. especially the King's various divorces, have likewise been brought to light ; particularly the whole case of Catherine Howard. The style of these papers, however, is very indecent, and they cannot therefore be published. It is intended to submit these literary and historical relics to his Majesty.

Mr. Gunter has sent in a letter to the committee for the management of the fancy ball on the 12th inst., offering to supply the whole of the refreshment at his own expense.

Some Dramatic Amateurs assembled lately for the feast of reason and a flow of soul, when one of the party said, " I will give you a parody on Hamlet's soliloquy :"—

" To wear spare locks, or on the head which Bald, may yet be covered with a flow
Of hair—That is the question."

A roar of tumultuous applause prevented the orator's proceeding. The call was Rowland—Rowland's Macassar Oil. Many persons in the room having experiencad the benefit of it.

NOTICES TO CORRESPONDENTS.

We are fearful that Y. Y. Y. has misunderstood us, for espionage was farthest from our thoughts. We are anxious to hear from him, and if he will send any alphabet by which we can communicate a word in our usual notices, we will do so immediately.

A. A. is thanked for his different contributions, and although we have not had an opportunity of introducing any of them futly, we shall continue to avail ourselves of them whenever opportunity may serve.

We are really desirous of meeting the wishes of W. I. if we could, but the article he has sent does not appear to us to be adapted either to our style, or the general character and limits of an hebdomadal publication.

The LADY who has written to request an interview with the Editor of the AGE, may have that "indulgence," if it be one, any morning she pleases to call at the office.

*The tirade against "WILLIAM TELL," which is a personality to* another WILLIAM, we reject, with the utmost contempt;—wherever we may have expressed an opinion, we did it on principle, but the genius and private consequence of the party would "laugh to scorn" all pique and personal ribaldry.

*"WORCESTER ELECTION" has been received, and will be submitted, rather unexpectedly, we presume, to the opposite party.*

X. X. is too cross for admission.

LEO, MUSICUS, A. B., CLIO, and ZENOPHON, are too common-place for any comment beyond receipt.

M. N. has sent us the following anecdote of STROEHLING, the Artist, who exhibits the very splendid portrait of Lord ANGLESEA, in this year's exhibition.—If it be true, he is not only a great artist, but a great way:

"When STROEHLING was at Beau-desert, occupied on the "Marquis of ANGLESEA'S portrait, the Noble Lord expressed "himself very anxious to be painted with an Hussar cap on. The "painter objected first of all against the request, and next, "against any interference with his task, and he did it in these "words:—'Mi Lor, I most be de grand generale in my vay—I "admit of de no rivalry. You be de generale in your vay, I be "generale in my vay—in fact, I most be de Duc of STROEHLINGTON, "or noting!'"—If the Marquis be at all jealous of the great CAPTAIN OF THE AGE, there never was a severer reproof. We give it merely on the faith of a CORRESPONDENT.

THE AGE.

LONDON, MAY 7.

The publication of this day closes one year of our editorial existence, and from the obvious necessity of introducing the principal topic which consequently present themselves for animadversion, we may be pardoned, at least we hope so, for any appearance of egotism, which we totally disclaim at the onset.

In returning all necessary acknowledgment for the patronage THE AGE has experienced since its establishment, we would not be thought to arrogate for an instant—the tribute is due to us for attempting to open peoples eyes, but the greater merit is due to the thousands who are now disposed to see their own conduct through a clearer medium, while at the same time they are equally enabled to adjudge that of others, than they had before in either instance the inclination or means of doing—with one exception, and in that case (in addition to the extraordinary ability the Journal possesses) it was aided by the worst but most advantageous engine imaginable—the late QUEEN—to work with, no paper ever established has met with a success equal to our own, in the same short period; and without wishing to make any unnecessary vaunt, it may be sufficient to state, that since the FIRST OF JANUARY alone, our weekly sale has increased more than THREE THOUSAND COPIES.

We are prepared to combat the different opinions that have been already so widely and firmly given, and will from this statement be, perhaps, more obstinately maintained, relative to our usual style of compositien, and the general conduct of our publication. We are not deaf to the very severest remarks we have ever heard, and were they more so than they have been, we should only naturally look upon them as the common virulence of party, alarmed at the exposition of its proceedings, in the proportion every one else is disgusted at the nature of those proceedings. We do not hesitate to admit that we have endeavoured, wherever we have aimed, to strike as deadly a blow as possible, from the necessity we saw, and contemplated with absolute horror, of extending some desperate correction to the vices of society, the violence of faction, and the frightful prostitution of the land generally, twelve months ago—and God knows it is still bad enough, the coteries of high life were one continued scene, varied only in its mode of action and in its degree of infamy, of the most disgraceful profligacy that ever visited any nation,—the intrigues of the closet entrenched on, and commingled with, those of the state, directed, or rather misdirected, the motives of party polity in the most shameless manner, and the best interests of this mighty empire appeared to us to be fast approaching that awful crisis, which had, in other days, levelled other empires with the dust. There was, and never can be, but one way of removing such a visitation (at least as far as the power of the press can do it), and that is, by adopting the directly opposite mode generally used, and instead of the caution of "inuendo," which is for the most part laughed at, to SPEAK THE WHOLE TRUTH, without fear or reserve, and the remedy, in most cases, will follow the disease: and it is on this conviction we have acted, and ever shall, as long as we write one line for the public relative to any who violate those principles, which have hitherto made that public stand up so high and envied in the scale of nations. We have been accused of making a desperate attack on the morality of society, and an inroad into the private recesses of the most elevated persons composing it—of introducing a selection of "epithet" not always the purest, and of a general violence and personality, without a precedent in the etiquette of literature, and altogether reprehensible and shocking in the extreme. To this sweeping condemnation, by the parties condemned, has been added that of many of our contemporaries, together with the ill-will of various neutral cynics. This charge, it is almost superfluous to say, is FALSE, and is at once refuted by a reference to the prostituted writings of Little MOORE, Lord BYRON, SHELLEY, the HUNTS, Doctor WOLCOT, the present POET LAUREAT, the present LICENSER OF PLAYS, the different editors, at different periods, of the Times, Morning Chronicle, Examiner, and the writers of minor papers and pamphlets to an indefinite number, in which the memory of our LATE REVERED KING, and the character of the present ILLUSTRIOUS RULER of these realms, have been lampooned in a manner at once the most blasphemous, obscene, false, and outrageous on record—in which all mercy has been denied towards the first statesmen, dead and living, that ever held the reins of any Government, and in which no class of society has been safe from every possible exposure of the most trifling folly, as well as vice of its members. In addition to this FACT, let any one, who has the entrée of them, reflect for half an hour on the conversation he will daily hear in that given time at any of the clubs, on every soul in every rank, at all known to the world—let him stand at WHITE'S, or CROCKFORD'S any afternoon, and out of fifty females that shall pass those houses in as many minutes, the least claim to character shall be refused to forty-nine, and by these very fellows who are the grand complainants of the severity with which they have been handled in the columns of the AGE; and out of all the Lords and Gentles who are so vociferous at our attacks on themselves, or what is more to the purpose, on the females of their families, MORE THAN ONE HALF are at the same time intriguing with THEIR FRIEND'S WIVES and OWN RELATIONS, and traducing every one with whom they do not intrigue. Only, therefore, let these vituperators of other persons think for a moment on themselves and their proceedings,—only let a balance be struck between the scandal and falsity of many other writers and talkers, and the truth but severity of ourselves, and if it is not LARGELY in our favour, may we vanish for ever from the good opinion or favour of a solitary reader.

In the course of those repeated attempts which have been made to discover the writers of this paper, the grossest calumnies have been heaped on individuals the most harmless in existence, and more ill blood now exists between these parties, through an obstinacy of belief, than ever can be washed away. To such meddling blockheads (consisting for the most part of the scum of nobility, Lordlings from Tipperary, and Barons from the Bogs, with impudent citizens inoculated with the mania of mixing in FASHIONABLE LIFE, and perfectly ignorant of the manners which constitute it,) we say that their researches have been all fruitless—we have not the slightest acquaintance with one individual connected with the Government—we are neither militia nor theatrical mountebanks—neither Dukes sons, nor their dependents,—attornies, nor their satellites—our sources of information, which have been allowed to be equal to any, and beyond most, are, as well as the person who embodies them, removed above the scrutiny of all these pert intruders. In referring to the list of writers enumerated above, by the side of whose venemous lucubrations we should blush for our own to stand, we cannot but reflect that many of them have been repeatedly visited by the corrective arm of the law, for the dissemination of sundry atrocious libels: and with the knowledge of this fact, and the further knowledge of our own writings not having received any such castigation, we may venture to confirm the argument previously entertained, and give the "lie direct" to the charges these malcontents have brought against us.

We shall not take unto ourselves any particular merit for even assisting in bringing about the present peaceful state of the nations, "body politic"—that is to say, peaceful when compared to its former frightful state—but we hope to have had some small share with others in the operation—the SESSION of PARLIAMENT, now shortly about to dissolve, has exhibited that miserable party, denominated WHIGS, in its true light—powerless, even to excite pity, and degenerate, even to excite regret—their earlier effrontery defeated and laid open, they have assumed a neutrality fatal to their cause, as carrying a conviction of their true principles to their adherents, and the issue of the approaching election, (for which all this modesty and repose has been assumed) will, in most cases, give the finishing blow to the presumption, the ignorance, and worst of all, the hypocrisy, of this lamentable and fallen faction. At the commencement of our task, we had the satisfaction of recording how deeply rooted in the hearts of his subjects was their love for the KING—since that period, His MAJESTY'S chief study has been their happiness and welfare, and in times of no common crisis, our BENEFICENT PATRON has devoted his power and his resources to the consolidation of both—he is surrounded by Ministers, possessing the approbation, and what is far better, the confidence of the people: and from HIM and his able counsellors the prosperity of GREAT BRITAIN must continue, however assailed by any occasional conflict of distress and misguidance, the pride of herself, and the envy of every other country.

His Royal Highness Prince LEOPOLD, on Thursday last, subscribed 500l. to the "distressed manufacturers," and shortly afterwards a violent shock of an earthquake was felt at Esher.

MANUFACTURING DISTRESSES.

There can be no difficulty in deciding on the causes of the present calamities in the manufacturing districts. The shock of public credit which a few months ago smote as with the shock of an earthquake the moneyed firms of London, must go through its natural circuit. It has now made its way from the Banker's counter to the workshop and the factory, and we hear but its inevitable result in public violence and individual suffering.

It is not our purpose to protest against the system, naturally as this result may be intermingled with a paper circulation. The evils must be weighed against the advantages. We might as well reject the use of any of the great agencies of art or nature, gunpowder or steam, because our ignorance or carelessness may make them sources of hazard. The services of a paper credit must be taken with all its possible perils to the avarice or ignorance of the multitude.

But where was the avarice that involved the nation in the late moneyed distresses? Let that opulent corporation, which fills the neighbourhood of the Mansion-house with the worst possible architecture, and the most ambitious and grasping possible traffic, answer!—What was it that offered money at four per cent; made square inches of private paper more precious than public gold, and placed no limit on the extravagance of speculation, but the modesty of those who had every thing to gain by desperate adventure, and nothing to lose.

The first step to this overflowing current threatened such a revulsion of the general opulence of England, that nothing but the innate vigour of the country, the sudden application of the wisdom of the Legislature, and the habitual confidence of the nation in its own resources, saved the empire from the most extensive and remediless misfortune.

This passed away, public credit had returned, the solid capital was spreading itself out again like the roots of a great tree, in search of those innumerable secret sources of supply that had once fed the noble stem—feeble and fictitious property had perished: and the commercial grandeur of the nation was beginning to rise to its former eminence, without little of its magnitude impaired, and that little more than compensated by the encreased security of its foundations. Then came another source of hazard. Hitherto the shock had originated in one of those extended operations of commerce, of whose extent the operators had scarcely any previous knowledge. The enlargement of the discounts, and their sudden limitation, were the work of traders in money, altogether unconscious of the formidable consequences. It was the letting out of waters, of whose force or devastation the rude hands that let them loose were ignorant.

But the next work was that of an individual. An undue eagerness to augment the Revenue hurried a zealous officer of Government into relaxing the policy by which the Trade of England had grown into the paramount Trade of the World.

That wisdom of our ancestors which was the perpetual answer to all the demands of political innovation, which was declared to be equal to give us the wisest laws, the manliest institutions and the soundest political system, to be all but inspiration on all the great questions of national welfare, was suddenly and contumaciously asserted to be weakness and narrowness on subjects of trade. A new light had been brought to the earth by a new hand, and the President of the Board of Trade was the PROMETHEUS!

The lifeless form of a commerce which had already filled all the regions of the earth, standing with one foot on the land and another on the ocean; a form to which all eyes had, till now, been lifted in wonder at its grandeur, its force, and its living and conquering energy, was put under the operation of this ambitious Charlatanrie. What was the instant consequence of the ex experiment? The state of our manufacturing interests from that hour to this, is the answer. No animadversion can be required beyond the reports of committees calling on the fatigued feelings and exhausted purse of public charity, for the daily bread of thousands, and tens of thousands.

This melancholy operation was, we fully believe, like that of the lowering of the discounts, done in ignorance; but its immediate result was the cessation of the Spitalfields looms. Those looms are still idle, and the public is still solicited, day by day, for the maintenance of the workmen.

Causes of a more general nature, yet unquestionably connected with both the original shocks, have now stirred up the turbulent spirit of the country manufacturers. The extraordinary extent of paper credit, was the temptation to an extraordinary extent of manufacture; the probability of an influx of foreign articles, was among the grounds for a hasty diminution of that excessive manufacture; a crowd of Irish and other strangers had been drawn into the factories by the sudden and rash speculations of the master manufacturers; the hasty stoppage cast out a large proportion of those strangers, with many of the customary workmen. They were instantly hurried into a mob,—the power-looms, which are of the finest inventions of English ingenuity, became the object of attack, and the public prints are now full of the disastrous exploits of those frantic rioters, bent on destroying their own future means of subsistence.

In this emergency, Government acted with prompti-

tude and vigour. The first necessity was that of extinguishing the mischiefs done to private property. The more remote one, but equally important, was that of supplying the population with food. Troops have been during the last week despatched with remarkable celerity to the different points of riot, and even before their arrival, the increased activity of the military stationed in the districts, and the magistrates, roused at last from their supineness, had subdued the more formidable parts of the disturbance. We presume that Manchester and the neighbouring towns may now be considered secure.

Public commiseration must be felt for the sufferings of the workmen, and particularly for the blood that has been shed in the defence of the factories. But the general peace must be maintained, at whatever risque. Individual property must not be left at the mercy of a mob. Distress, and an ignorant conception of its source, may have let loose some of the rioters to ravage the property of their employers, but nine-tenths of the active instigators were men who had no more allowable motive than a love for disturbance, private revenge, and indiscriminate plunder.

The attempt to destroy the machinery was altogether short-sightedness and folly. One of the most striking instances of the utter deficiency of reason in large and highly inflated bodies of men. It was an attempt to destroy the whole substance, and secret of the prosperity of British commerce! There has, however, been among reasoners of higher pretensions a great deal of discussion on the utility of machinery. It has been alleged, that by abridging labour, it deprives the labourer of bread, and that where, from a redundant population, the great difficulty is to find work for the people. All that finds a substitute, not for the work, but for the workman, is injurious.

But the true and irresistible answer to all this is, that machinery tends actually to increase the employment of workmen. Fifty years ago, the cotton manufacture did not employ a fiftieth part of the multitude that now live by it. The want of machinery rendered this fabric dear, and what is costly will be rarely purchased. ARKWRIGHT invented the spinning-jenny. The trade sprung up as by miracle. It became a great and growing branch of English manufacture. Its workmen were reckoned not by hundreds or thousands, but by millions. Yet the first spinning-jennies threw workmen out of bread; riots followed, and the machines were broken, as the power-looms are now. Government protected the manufacturer; the public demand rose with the cheapness and beauty of the manufacture: it rose with a rapidity which even the wonder-working power of the machinery could not equal, and workmen by multitudes were called in to answer the demand.

The power-loom is probably as great an advance upon the spinning-jenny, as that was upon the rude loom of our forefathers. One workman does the work of many, a child does the work of a man. What is the direct tendency of this, but to give us a continued superiority in the markets of the world. The Continent is turning its capital and its industry to manufactures. America is becoming a manufacturing continent.---We have to struggle against all, and upon their own ground; can this be done by the naked hand? or if not, at what point shall we declare that the ingenuity of our engineers and men of science shall stop. The plough is a machine; would it be wise to fling it aside for the tardy and dubious labour of the spade! But workmen are thrown out of bread by these inventions. Undoubtedly, every man will avail himself of those means which he finds at once the cheapest and the most effective. He will rather employ one plough than a dozen labourers. But the plough has reclaimed and worked an infinite extent of soil which would have defied the spade. There is labour for fifty ploughs now, where there would have been employment for one clown and his spade before,---there are fifty ploughmen for what would have been one digger of the ground. The machine, which once temporarily threw the peasant out of bread, now provides it permanently for fifty times the number.

But if we look from the mere case of the workmen to that of the community, the question clears up at once. By encouraging the manufacture, we give a new source of clothing, or comfort, or power, to the community; we give new opulence to the whole commercial class, an opulence which is suddenly returned down through the whole community; we give a new means of contest in the rising industry of other nations, an honourable rivalry, which ends in putting the comforts of civilized life more within the reach of every rank of mankind.

If the power loom were to become of a still more enlarged application; if instead of throwing off a web of cotton, or a piece of silk, by the turning of a winch in the hand of a child, it could produce our clothing ready made, it would throw tailors and sempstresses out of bread for the time, and those classes would become the proper objects of public assistance until they could exert their ingenuity in other ways. But the community would find infinite benefit—they would have a greater command of clothing—the present expence would be directed to an increase of their comforts in other things. The necessities of life may be few, but its capabilities of rational comfort are boundless. Every shilling relieved from the previous expenditure would be employed in exciting some new branch of industry for some new enjoyment, and man, at every step, would acquire a new power over nature.

The additional consideration of the health of the individual is not to be forgotten--who could regret that the uneasy position, the unvaried labour, the constant confinement of, for instance, the tailor and the sempstress, should be at an end? Almost the whole number of the indoor employments of the working classes are unhealthy; who could regret the extinction of all those consumptive, asthmatic, and cheerless processes, by the employment of a more perfect machinery, rapidly dispensing more and more with personal confinement and unhealthy labour? The imperfection of machinery has hitherto crowded our factories with population. Its perfection would relieve them from this pressure; and at once supply the people with more indulgencies at a cheaper rate, and give them more the command of their situation and their time. But as to the idea that the world would have nothing to do, what can be more chimerical? Are all the secrets of nature developed? is it not possible to conceive almost unlimited occupation in the improvement of our common state, in the more convenient modes of habitation, of transit, of mutual communication? There is a vast quantity of human occupation in which machinery can scarcely ever have a place, in agriculture, in the fine arts, navigation, in commercial intercourse. Science is as boundless as the creation. Or is man to be miserable unless he can be burnt up in glasshouses, and suffocated in smelting forges, or blown up in the mines, or poisoned over dyeing coppers, or boiled in the vapoury atmosphere of brew-houses, or wasted and parched away with bile and yellow blood in his veins, in the thousand deleterious and horrible processes of our daily manufactures. Or is there no period to be contemplated in the flux of ages when all human beings will have leisure for the cultivation of their understandings, and the pursuit of their natural talents, when the human face divine will no more be blackened with the soot and heat of some half infernal contrivance, to make the miserable wages of its bitter bread, when man will let the power-loom do his business for him, and bid the steam-engine walk down into the mine, and dig and smelt by itself; and be able to give himself a taste of the free air of Heaven, without starving, as the penalty of his presumption.

The subscriptions for the Manchester and Blackburn people have been honourable to the proverbial liberality of the Metropolis. At the head of this bounty stands the KING's name, as it ought to do, and as it will be always sure to do, while the FOURTH GEORGE sits upon the throne. His MAJESTY was the first to give upon the early intimation of the distress, and his donation has been most munificent—five thousand pounds.

The meeting summoned at the Mansion House followed up this benevolence in a becoming spirit. Upwards of 13,000l. were subscribed on the spot. His MAJESTY's Ministers, and the chief merchants put down their names, and the subscription is still rapidly increasing. The resolutions were proposed by the Archbishop of CANTERBURY, and seconded by the Bishop of LONDON. This is also as it should be. The great dignitaries of the church cannot be more wisely or honourably employed than in those popular services. They should suffer no man to take them out of their hands.

The resolution of the House of Commons to give Ministers a power of admitting a certain quantity of foreign corn after the rising of Parliament, in case of necessity, completes the round of these important measures. We give willing praise to the activity, promptitude, and good will in which all has been done, and hope that we may henceforth feel secure.

LORD NORBURY'S LAST.

Lady GLENGALL, who, some time ago was addressing Lord NORBURY in her usual strain, finding fault with this, and offering her advice upon that, at last exclaimed, "Then why don't you work your mines?" to which His LORDSHIP replied, "If you were mine, I would work you!"

WORKS OF ART
REJECTED FROM THE ROYAL ACADEMY.

In another part of our paper will be found a notice of the EXHIBITION just opened at Somerset House, and having devoted as much space as we could to those works that have obtained admission, we deem it but an act of justice to spare a corner for a brief note or two on several very clever performances, which either through want of interest, being sent too late, being deemed by rival artists of too much talent, or some other casualty, have not been permitted to be exhibited. From an observation we were enabled to make of a lot now lying at the Academy "till called for," we consider the artists by no means fairly dealt by. We have made selection of a few that in our opinion might vie with some of the best paintings now exhibiting, and which are more entitled to praise than they otherwise would be, from the circumstance of their being the production, with one exception, of honorary members.

No. —. Smugglers Carousing. Lady GLENGALL.—An animated and faithful painting, and conveying an admirable idea of the manners of these outlaws. The old woman in the back ground drawing with care a roulcau of Brussels lace from under her stays, is true TO THE LIFE!

No. —. View of the ENTRANCE to BEHRING'S Straits. Captain WEBSTER.—Though a well painted picture, the subject must be entered into to present an interest to others as well as the artist.

No. —. DEAD Game. Mrs. FOX LANE.—A little too highly coloured, but the subject, though hacked by so many, has seldom been done more naturally than by this old lady.

No.---. The Old Magpie. LADY JERSEY.

> Long o'er my cottage grounds thy feet have run,
> But ne'er so fast as yet thy Mag hath done;
> Thy wings are clipped, but much I wish, among
> My neighbours, some instead had clipped thy tongue!
> Harvest Home.

There is no better picture in the whole lot than this the contrast between the cottager disturbed at his study by the incessant chattering of this silly old inmate of his house, and his children listening in wonder at the bird's audacity, is admirably delineated—the only fault is, the magpie has too much colour on for its age.

No.—DOVER Pier. Lord HARBOROUGH.

No.—Portrait of a Black Bull-dog. Hon. G. BERKELEY.

> "When the blacks shall decrease,
> "The BERKELEYS shall cease!
> Berkeley Ballad.

As spirited a likeness as a pugnose, sharp eyes, and a fine set of teeth! can give of these animals.

No. — A Bible Society at Southampton. Lord ASHTOWN.

No. — View of Brest. Madlle. BROCARD. — A beautiful picture: a fleshiness of colouring is thrown over the foreground, that gives considerable effect to the whole. The view would, however, have pleased more, if it had been even more open than it is.

No. — Portrait of a Puppy. Lord BINGHAM. — The dog is well drawn, but from its head being so closely shaved, it cuts a most ridiculous figure. It gives you the idea of a snarling, but harmless little thing.

No. — An ITALIAN Larder. Sir GEORGE WARRENDER and Lady FLINT.—This subject has been done admirable justice to by the joint labours of these excellent artistes. The introduction of the old man and woman with large carvers, and open mouths, peeping in at the window, is excellent.

No. --- Field of Rape, near Maidenhead, drawn from nature. Capt. FREEMANTLE.

No. --- Portrait of a Gentleman as Othello. Mr. R. SMITH.

> ——— "the jealous well,
> "Those tyrants, teasing, tempting to rebel.
> "Deserve the fate their fretting lips foretell."
> Corsair.

No. --- Portrait of a noted Duellist. J. MILLS.

> "His pistol's a rare one,
> "And wants but a bullet;
> "His trigger's a hair one,
> "If he'd courage to pull it!
> Old Song.

Mr. MILLS deserves great credit for the capital skit conveyed by this painting on the heinous vice of duelling. The Jew-looking figure of the man is very amusing—the poltroon's pistol nearly falling out of a tremulous hand, and his second and the surgeon, in the back ground, laughing to excess at the knowledge of its not being loaded. One would almost think the artist must have witnessed such a scene, from its palpable identity with life.

No. —. View of KEW. Lord A. HILL. This on the back is spelt Queue, we presume by mistake.

No. —. Serenading in Curzon-street. Mr. KEATING.

> "Behold me!—
> "Me! who, in agony, though suing now to you,
> "Would once have seen you damned 'ere make a bow to you.
> "Me, —— ROGER!"—COLMAN'S Broad Grins.

This is one of the best pictures in the lot, and has, we find been purchased for 200l. The figure of the Irishman knocking at the door, half in love and half in fear, endeavouring, as it is called, "to take care of number ONE," is admirable, and presents an odd contrast to the servant laughing out at one of the windows, and pointing to a post chaise just turning the corner. Mr. K. is so clever an artist, that they say of him as they formerly did of APELLES, "Nulla dies sine linea."

No —. The PIGEON-house. Mr. CROCKFORD.

No. —. A Nobleman's Seat in WILTSHIRE. Mrs. DRUMMOND.

No. —. Portrait of a RIFLE-man. Hon. A. STANHOPE.

No. —. View of Goose Green. Mr. HAYNE.

SCULPTURE ROOM.

No. —. } Two fine CASTS by { Lord BLESSINGTON
No. —. } { Lord W. LENNOX.

No. —. Marble Bust to the Memory of the late Dr. Jenner. Mr. TISDALL.

No. —. The figure of a Chanteur, cut in Stone. Signor VELLUTI.

No. —. Bronze Cast of the Colossus of Rhodes. Mr. R. MILNE.

LIBRARY.

No. —. Design for a Small-pox Hospital in the City, to be erected on the site of Old Bedlam. Mr. T. RAIKES---an ordinary member.

No. ---. View of the King's Mews. Mr. SOUTHEY.

No. —. Design for a Foundling Hospital for Fashionable Offspring. Lord SUSSEX LENNOX.

His MAJESTY, with that spirit of patronage which he has ever evinced to literature, has granted his permission for the "Life and Times of REYNOLDS," the Dramatist, to be dedicated to him. We have no doubt that the anecdotes of many persons in political and fashionable life, whom the KING was in the habit of admitting to his table, will recur to His MAJESTY as perfectly characteristic of "auld lang syne"—more particularly from the circumstance of their being related by the witty biographer with equal humour and fidelity —the work will be published the ensuing week.

THEATRICALS.

It was but natural to suppose that something quite out of the way was to be the result of twelve months hard fag, for such it was understood had been the length of time devoted to the preparation of Aladdin, at Drury-laneTheatre--in that time about ONE THOUSAND POUNDS have been paid to the composer, and some hundreds we suppose to the poet, exclusive of other salaries, and a vast expenditure on the scenic and decorative departments. The time at length arrived, about 10 minutes to 7, last Saturday—BARON VON WEBER and "JOHNNY from Wareham," in one private box, GEORGE ROBINS, the new stage-manager, in another; Sir J. R. PLANCHE, the Brompton Rose, in the gallery, Mr. FARLEY, (author of the Covent Garden Aladdin) with blushing nose, in the pit, Mr. BISHOP, in "best white kid," in the orchestra, ELLISTON in—good spirits in the lobby, and WINSTON, in an old great coat, "screwing his courage to the sticking place," and ready to work the machinery. An assemblage of greater talent could not well be collected together, and it was no trifling task for any party concerned to go through their duty before such a terrible ordeal! it was, however, performed admirably, and as the Opera is a work of too much genius to be slightly passed over, we may be pardoned for a little digression. Unlike most compositions of this description, it is written throughout in blank verse, an excellent idea, considering it was to be spoken entirely by singers,—the very best of actors—indeed, we hardly remember a greater effect being ever produced than Mr. SINCLAIR saying—but this was but one instance of many that occurred during the evening; another was on this fine metrical passage:

"Oh! you know not, oh!"

MOUR.——What say you?
ALAD.——Nothing!
only I thought——
MOUR.——Thought what, boy?
ALAD.——Nothing!

then again, where Miss STEPHENS said,

ALAD.——Why, uncle, uncle,
Dear uncle! damned magician! uncle! uncle!

and farther on, where the measure is so classically preserved:

ALAD. A rogue! a knave! a dog! a Christian dog!
a yezedee! a sorcerer!
ZEEN.——A sorcerer!
oh, Mahomet!
HAG.——Oh, Allah!

But none of these beautiful speeches can be compared for a moment to a line delivered by Zeenab, of as good measurement as the first of our poets ever penned:

"My dear MUSTY—now I mount my glasses."

and if there was a momentary objection raised by the most scrupulous, it was at the idea of so old a lady mounting any thing. The dialogue, for the most part, is written in this rich vein; and whenever a difficulty arises of bringing into metre very familiar colloquy, the line terminates either with Allah! Mishallah! Mahomet! Mufti! Rustam! Iman! Schah!—which are all so musical, that they fail not to throw the most inspiring air of poetry over the whole play. It is not, therefore, a matter of surprise that with such materiel as this, Mr. BISHOP composed his most successful music, or that the singers and performers acquitted themselves so wonderfully well.

Miss STEPHENS sung a ballad in the 3d act bewitchingly, and by her performance of Aladdin really seemed both to delight and surprise the judges "in front;" her niece has a melodious, but not a powerful voice, which she displayed to great advantage—she is a fine handsome woman. It would be injustice not to mention the almost gigantic stride Mr. HORN has lately made in his profession, and so increased by his representation of Mourad;—and it would be equal injustice not to mention SINCLAIR, who by his inimitable acting made the only part of the opera that was at all dull quite lively—he would certainly do Falstaff better than ELLISTON, for the arch way in which he deliver the brief line before quoted, convinces us that he would convulse the house, when Sir John says,

"D'ye think I did n't know ye?"

Though all the other performers deserve every possible praise for their exertions in behalf of this talented drama, we cannot stop to bestow it upon them. BISHOP, however, satisfied with the see he is at present in, must have promotion; and SOANE, in addition to A.B. must have the degree of A.S.S. immediately conferred upon him—justice must be satisfied, and genius must be rewarded.

The scenery, which STANFIELD has established this Theatre for, was in the first style of that highly-gifted artist, and the machinery, more particularly the first night, worked with the greatest precision, by that wonderful mechanic (though "very bad actor), JAMES WINSTON---and so ends Aladdin.

The new Farce at Covent Garden called Three Deep, or all on the Wing, is very far from being a bad Farce, although from being written by Mr. LUNN, and shelved by the Theatre, the Cocknies call it "Lunn-done." There are good situations in it, smart dialogue, and good acting. Neither author, actor, or audience can require more.

The benefits are coming on. There have been about a dozen preparatory puffs about Miss FOOTE's. She goes twice into "Smalls" on the occasion, which is surely making her person commoner upon town than it has been. MR. Connubial, as they now call Mr. C. KEMBLE, takes "a Bold Stroke" for his play, and Don Giovanni for his next piece. "The Captain's a bold man"---we hope they will be both done justice to. BRAHAM takes the Slave, and is sure of a house great —as his genius: he cannot be too well rewarded: and "last, not least," BARON VON TOBBLE VON WEBER takes a Concert, at which will be performed a new, and considering the present state of the country, an appropriate composition of his own, called "Peace and Plenty." These German Vons are capital fellows for trying to humbug John Bull.

MACREADY has "a bill of fare" that would alone insure him his "pitch of pride"—a bumper---but if his genius and high respectability were added to the professional attractions submitted, it would fill two theatres.

We took an opportunity a week or two since of throwing out a hint to the Managers, respecting the appropriation by them of a night's receipt in behalf of the Spitalfields sufferers. DUCROW and WEST set the example, and Covent Garden Theatre is about to follow it. The ball about to take here, was to have been given at the King's Theatre, which Mr. EBERS offered gratuitously—but the Fashionable people, who proposed and are to conduct it, preferring Covent Garden, made an overture to Messrs. FORBES, KEMBLE, and WILLETT, treating for the use of the same, and the arrangement was accordingly made. While so many thousands are LITERALLY STARVING, it was to be hoped that the use of the Theatre might have been given gratis, to enable the Committee to stop for a while the mouths of above SIXTEEN THOUSAND sufferers—and the actors would, no doubt, have resigned a night or two of their pay—that was not done—it was then to be hoped that nothing but the sheer current expenses of the evening would have been demanded—that was not done—but while every other soul is giving whatever they can afford to aid a fellow-creature, these precious GENTLEMEN have demanded the sum of 900l.!!! for the use of their Theatre! It is really hardly credible. We may be told the preparations are so extensive, that the house must be closed two nights—be it so—the nightly charge for a benefit is but 210l., and all the painting, lighting, and decorating, they can possibly do, will not cost them 100l. This would, therefore, supposing such to be the case, only make about 500l. and these persons, out of the STARVATION of the poor, are realizing the sum of nearly 400l., and may be much more. We put this "round, unvarnished tale" before our readers, and ask them what they really think of such a proceeding. If the ladies' patronesses have been gulled into the bargain, of course they will pay it rather than see the poor weavers, by their ignorance, robbed of such a sum—but what excuse will either of these persons make for such a despicable proceeding. They are called on, collectively and individually, to explain this transaction to the public, or abandon their avaricious demand; and although the bargain HAS BEEN MADE by their spokesman, Captain FORBES (who would sell them both if he could make any thing by them), yet Mr. WILLETT and Mr. KEMBLE, as being privy to their partner's acts, are answerable for the same. It is our firm determination to sift this matter to the very bottom, and unless it is explained, we will bring it in a more formidable shape before the public—it is no wonder the new farce was so christened in compliment to the managerial triumvirate, for it is very evident they are "three deep" fellows as any going, and what is more, if some explanation be not given, they had better at once be "all on the wing."

SOMERSET HOUSE.

Exhibition the fifty-eighth opened last week. There had been a preliminary meeting to which the favoured and gifted, and so forth, were let in; then a dinner, to which the still more favoured and gifted were admitted. Though we can have no very lofty opinion of the gastronomic delicacy which sits down to feed in the centre of that complication of turpentine, varnish, and all the desperate smells of mineral paints steaming from the fresh hung canvas on the walls—but that is their own affair; and if any member of the Cognoscenti of this nether world choose to dine in a painter's shop, we know of no law to prevent their being fed and stifled at their pleasure.

On this occasion Sir THOMAS LAWRENCE, who is a very gentleman-like and decorous person, whether with knife or pencil in hand, whether in or out of the chair, made a very good speech, which was echoed and re-echoed; as usual, the country was congratulated several times in the course of the evening on the manifest improvement of the British school, the irresistible vigour of British genius, and the general super-eminence of every thing British now and for ever; and all so proceeded until the party broke up, and congratulation champagne, and good-humour, were over for the year.

But day-light, and the hours before dinner, are more inexorable; and the present Exhibition must be pronounced one of the least miraculous that has been for many a year produced by that oratorical miracle-monger, the unrivalled School of Britain!

No. 1.—The Marquis of Anglesca, by STROCHLING. The gallant Marquis is mounted, and his charger naturally absorbs the whole interest. The rider is without his cap, which is, we presume, the way in which the Marquis generally appears in public; and the face is one universal coverture of whisker and monstache, allowing little more evidence than the tip of a remarkably claret-dyed nose for the existence of a face beneath. The picture is showy, but it is proportionably too large for a SIGN.

Then follow a succession of "Flowerpots," Drunken Men, "Learning a new Song;" Margate Piers," and so forth."

WARD has No. 23.—A "Battle near Boston." The fight in which Lord MANCHESTER's cavalry overthrew HENDERSON. The painter has studied the horse, and no man can do more with him then WARD, when he finds the animal quietly sitting for his portrait at rack and manger. But it is a very different thing to paint him in action, at least Mr. WARD has found it so. A dozen cart horses tumbled together on their haunches, heads and heels, shew any thing but the triumph of the art, or the battle of Boston.

ETTY, who has for some years exhibited some pretty mythological pictures, has now ventured on "a Judgment of Paris."

We have, of course, a consummate respect for modern genius, especially in the arts, but we must, notwithstanding, say, that when a modern artist adopts a story which has been already treated by an ancient artist, he might be wise in avoiding the direct competition of telling the story in exactly the same way. The Judgment of Paris has been painted by RAPHAEL and RUBENS, and a host of the Italian painters. Mr. ETTY has, however, chosen to hazard the subject in the established mode, and has given us of course, a naked shepherd, sitting down to decide the merits of three naked female figures. The artist has made some attempts to distinguish them, and save Paris any hesitation; for he has made Juno a shrew, and has given Minerva a beard, and something not very remote from moustaches, probably from his recollection of her military capacities. Venus is palpably the beauty of the three, but the artist has qualified the fatality of her charms by making her face girlish and silly. He ought to have painted her eating the apple, it would have been more in character with the countenance. The colouring is gaudy and glaring. Mr. ETTY has talents for his art. But he must paint on a smaller scale if he hopes to make his art productive, and choose happier and less hazardous subjects than this or his Gladiators, if he is ambitious of popularity.

No. 30.---Auld Robin Gray, by Allan.---Desperately Scotch.

No. 31. ---Othello relating his Adventures. By BRIGGS. Othello is a stout black, and would make a capital drummer for the Guards; or a no less capital footman: a kettle-drum, or a tea-kettle would equally become him.

Then come a regiment of "portraits of a lady," a "gentleman," "a lobster," "shrimp-catchers," and "Dorset Fellowes, Esq. in the habit of a Knight Templar!" Why not paint him in a coronation robe, with the Archbishop of Canterbury putting the Crown upon his brow? we presume he has as much right to the one as to the other. Then, portraits of "Lady and Gentleman" again in deadly reiteration, with here and there some ambitious physiognomy that scorns to pass under the attribute, and gives a name.

Then comes No. 60.---Leslie's Don Quixote, with Sierra Morena, with half a page of the catalogue to tell, what his picture ought to tell, if it was able Leslie is clever, but his mannerism is growing intolerable; he has the same faces, attitudes, and expression in all his pictures: we had almost said the same story. He has here degraged Don Quixote, who is often only a half-mad gentleman, into a whole-mad beggar. His figure is preternaturally gaunt and repulsive. As for the rest, they are the old acquaintances of every one who has seen this artist's previous performances.

Nos. 67---76.---The two new Bishops, Chichester and Chester, by Hayter and Lane, with abundance of lawn-sleeves and wigs, were the perfection of portraits These artists must triumph. The two new dignitaries seem placed opposite, to frown at each other and the subject world.

After this polemic display, we have, by way of contrast, Lady Wallscourt, by Sir T. LAWRENCE, to relieve the eye. The President has copied her Ladyship's known beauty, but he has compressed it into about half the size of life. This seems to be his favourite practice in the later exhibitions. He has thus diminished the glories of Mrs. THOMAS HOPE's very pretty face; but for her massive gold-embroidered turban, she might pass for a girl of ten years old. Mr. CANNING's countenance has been circumscribed in the same remorseless manner; and as for the Duke of WELLINGTON (who is, luckily for himself, not in this Exhibition), if he at any time escapes with a third of his natural face, he may esteem himself a fortunate man.

We have not now room to go deeper into this very voluminous Catalogue; but we must remark the carelessness, or want of judgment, or partiality, or by whatever name it may be called, palpable in the selection of places for the pictures. That the President should have the lion's share, may be allowable, though his fame might well dispense with any very keen assertion of his rights on this point. That the Academicians should make prize of every spot on which they can stick any thing of their own that charity can call a picture, is of course academical law; but there is still some space left on the better walls, and allowing that the worst work of the worst Academician should always by right divine supersede the best work of every other artist, we yet think that some very able performances have been thrust into the notorious degradation of the inferior rooms. Every one knows that to be nailed up in such places as the "Library," or the "Antique Academy," is equivalent as to wilful extinction. It is the being cast into "utter darkness," where there is nothing for the artist but gnashing of teeth. In this kingdom of the fallen we witnessed Nos. 373, and 576, Portraits by Bradley, 985, by Turner, and several others of equal ability. As we were leaving one of the "condemned" rooms, we were attracted by the marked attention of a group directed to a picture hid in an obscure corner. It was a portrait of Canova, with the Genius of his art standing and contemplating him. The drawing, the conception, and the colouring were of a remarkably fine order. The likeness was admirable, and we but repeat the surprise of the group that such a work should not have had a place where it could be at least adequately seen. On turning to the catalogue, we found that the name of the artist was J. P. Davis. We should be disposed to augur very highly of his future eminence, if he be a young man. The other able works which were in the same predicament, make us wish that the period may not be far off when the Academy will have a more extensive space for its exhibition. There are some excellent things by Sharp, in his peculiar style, which we must pass for the present; but they recommend themselves to the eye at once. We have heard him called the Liston of painting---the term is not unsuitable to either his spirit or his popularity.

STATE OF THE COUNTRY.

Manchester, Wednesday, May 3.—The state of distress was naturally foreseen, and as is always the case in this country, the humanity of the people suggested active contributions in the neighbourhood, for the pecuniary relief of the distressed. Depots of provisions were also provided, and for the last three weeks very large sums have been expended in affording sustenance to those who wanted it. In Manchester in particular this was done to a great extent, and the local authorities afforded relief to the Irish poor as well as their own, and thereby prevented the former from acting as a class in the impending disturbances, or, indeed, taking a part in them in any other proportion than that which the dissolute of all classes bears to each other in seasons of difficulty. Accounts this morning from Liverpool, announcing the subscription of a meeting held in that town yesterday, and the notification from the Lord Mayor, of the intended subscription from the metropolis, have had a beneficial effect in this neighbourhood.

The demonstration of military power has also had within the last two days, its effect in preventing the congregation, even of the idle crowds previously seen almost hourly in various parts of the neighbourhood; and I have not the smallest doubt, that had the local authorities acted more promptly and firmly, and more particularly had the manufacturers made the better arrangements which were within their power for the defence of their property, it would have been unnecessary to have made the county a military garrison, and put the countfy gencrally to the great expense of transporting military detachments to the spot with such extraordinary celerity, and holding out the bad example, that the peace can be broken with comparative impunity, except where soldiers are stationed. Some idea can be formed of the rapidity with which the arrangements of the Horse Guards were executed, and of course of the attendant expense, when it is known that a brigade of guns arrived here from Woolwich within 46 hours after they had received orders to march, and including four hours spent in some necessary refitting at the Weedon depot on their road. Post horses were used in their conveyance through the greater part of the stages. General Byng arrived late on Sunday night, having travelled with extraordinary rapidity; and on Monday night he proceeded to Blackburn to point out the military positions which he intended to have occupied by the Guards and Light Cavalry, which are daily entering the county after forced marches. The Cheshire Yeomanry, which entered Manchester after last week's disturbances, were ordered home yesterday, and upwards of 300 special constables have been sworn to assist on the present occasion; but their manner of acting, if one may judge from the comparative escape of offenders, and glaring impunity of rioters, does not show, at all events, a well-organized system, for numbers appear to have been looking on when small bands of fellows have been applying fire-brands to some manufactories. It is astonishing how the outrages of last week in this town could have been perpetrated in broad day with such impunity if the magistracy had acted as would have become them upon such an emergency.

When at a distance of 200 miles you hear of the conflagration of an extensive manufactory in open day, by the deliberate attack of an unarmed body of rioters, (for one iron crow-bar is the only weapon that I can ascertain to have been seen by any person of sagacity among the mob on this occasion,) that blood was shed in the public streets, and citizens robbed unresistingly by highwaymen of this throng, and this too done by the parts of a mob whose aggregate numerical strength did not amount to that of the inhabitants of any one of the principal streets through which they had passed, you are naturally enough led to think that the aggression is only a part of an organized system of attack upon property which paralyzes the peaceable classes of society as much, if not more, by the apprehension of what remains behind than of what they actually see passing before their eyes. Another reason, too, which is common to all occurrences of this kind, and has tended to diffuse a feeling abroad that the evil is of greater magnitude than it really is; for the general apprehension which undoubtedly prevails as to the extent of the danger is attributable to the gross misrepresentation which hourly prevails respecting every occurrence. It would be hard indeed if this did not find its way to the metropolis, when it is found in full operation in the same street in which any act of outrage has been committed. The narrators professing to have seen any particular event, only agree in one thing, which is the desire of inventing—for that term better applies than exaggerating—fictitious circumstances of aggravation, all tending to produce irritation and disquiet. Of this I can positively speak from a remarkable instance which occurred last night under my own immediate observation.

You were apprised yesterday of a meeting, composed of the mixed groups which are always available to form a crowd in a populous district, at which two individuals—evidently of the humbler walks of life—harangued in the most inflammatory manner, and were, strange to say, permitted to use very violent language of general denunciation, and to separate afterwards without any interference on the part of the local authorities. This meeting was held in St. George's-fields at half-past three o'clock, and all groups loitered about in that place and the neighbourhood until seven o'clock, when a whisper went round that an attack was meditated upon the power-looms of Messrs. Johnson and Brooks, in New Islington, a part of the town near which several factories stand. At that hour a body of rioters moved from the neighbourhood of St. George's-fields, and as they passed through the little districts inhabited by the humbler classes, collected a reinforcement of the idle, the dissolute, and thoughtless, until their numbers augunted to 200 or 300, and separating into two detachments for greater convenience in the very narrow streets on the spot, they came, one of the parties into a small alley facing the broader front of Messrs. Johnson and Brookes's Mill, and the other acting sideways in the narrow street which runs parallel with it. They made a great noise as they came up, and immediately pelted the windows with stones, till, in about five minutes, they broke, perhaps, 60 small squares of glass. Within the building half a dozen of the workmen had been provided by their employers with as many muskets, as a measure of precaution; but these persons were at the moment taking refreshment, and the actual defence of the place left to two other men who were only armed with a single pistol which was at the moment unloaded. The man who had it called out to the rioters to desist, and asked what they wanted. He was answered by a confused jargon of defiance, and then struck in the face with a stone; he then charged the pistol merely with powder, and fired over the heads of the assailants, but the pelting of stones still continuing, he loaded it with small shot, but it missed fire in the attempt to discharge it. He however re-primed it, and levelling it among the crowd, the shot took effect on the head, breast, and shoulder, of a young man named Thomas Harrison, a spinner now out of employ, who fell to all appearance dead, and was immediately removed into a public-house near the spot. This spirited resistance had the effect, in five minutes more, of dispersing the assailants, who continued during that interval to fling stones through the windows of the factory, and to bulge a side-door with their shoulders, and knock down the top brickwork next the door-frame. A woman seems to have been sufficient for the defence of this door, by having the presence of mind to bolt it when she heard the attack on the premises. The clock had struck seven before this building was assailed; at a quarter past seven the mob had been entirely dispersed by one man (for the second man only loaded the pistol) and one pistol shot, the mob at the same time bearing away the dead man (as they called him) to the hospital, the publican into whose house he was carried when he fell not desiring to retain such a lodger. In the adjoining street they had him down for a moment in front of another manufactory which they threatened, some of them insisting upon an attempt to destroy the power-looms within, while others were more rationally bent upon obtaining assistance at the hospital for the wounded man, who had revived a little during this uproar. After a short pause they pursued their route to the hospital, where they left the man in a state of insensibility, but during the whole of this proceeding, which was undoubtedly short, the mob encountered no molestation, except from the man and pistol already mentioned. Two other men in the crowd participated very slightly in the effect of the pistol-shot, which chiefly struck Harrison, for they shrugged their shoulders a little, and ran away at the instant. Harrison's situation is not considered at the hospital dangerous this day; and he disclaims all connexion with the rioters, ascribing merely to accident his presence on the occasion. If this be true, his position was a very unlucky one, as to its locality, for it was at the top and in the centre of the opening of the narrow alley, from which the windows were chiefly demolished by a small group that appeared to act in concert; while a mere casual passenger might have easily seen what was occurring from a sideway view, by turning into any of the adjoining streets.

One of the proprietors (Mr. Brookes) applied immediately for assistance at the head police-office, as some report was in circulation that the attack would be renewed in the course of the night; but it was eight o'clock before the civil power could be assembled near the place, and later when the military arrived, though picquets were in motion throughout the earlier part of the evening.

The misrepresentation of fact to which I was about to call your attention, has reference to the occurrence which I have just stated. Upon hearing at eight o'clock, at some distance from the scene of action, that lives had been lost in an attack which had been just made upon the mill of Messrs. Johnson and Brookes, and that a dead and a wounded man had been conveyed to the hospital, I hastily repaired to the latter place, where I found the area-gate closed, and a crowd in front of it, describing in very aggravated terms, how the people had just been shot. Passing immediately from them towards Messrs. Johnson and Brookes, which was about a mile and a half distant, I met crowds, principally of boys, collected at the nearer entrance of Great Ancoats-street. On looking up the street, I observed the military stationed at some distance; there was a confused noise, and groups of people (all of the description last mentioned) were running backwards and forwards; they appeared to have been chiefly attracted by curiosity, and to have had it abundantly gratified; for upon endeavouring to pass them up the street, I was cautioned by some, who were themselves evidently panic-stricken, from proceeding onwards, as they said several shots had been fired at the people, for merely throwing stones at a factory, and that I might then hear if I listened, the sound of fire-arms, and the battering of stones. My ears not having the same predisposition for receiving the sound of fire-arms, I listened without much profit, and immediately passed on towards the soldiers. On my way up the street, I met two or three magistrates, or special constables (they were well dressed persons in plain clothes) who were on horseback, and engaged in riding on the flagged pathway on each side of the street, one of them brandishing a drawn sword, chasing away the loiterers who remained about, and who fled occasionally into the public-houses and lanes of the neighbourhood—reappearing in the same places after these horsemen had moved further on. Upon reaching the upper end of the street, I saw drawn up in line, a company of the 60th Rifle Corps, with their commanding officer, Colonel Mackenzie, in front, a troop of Dragoons, and at each side (in the whole) nearly 300 persons in coloured clothes, who were the local police of the town, and the special constables They were drawn up in the street, and waiting, as far as I could learn, until nine o'clock, at which hour all the public-houses are compelled to eject their customers, when it was their intention to take the labour of the street-clearing off the hands of the four equestrians, who were then working like Sisyphus in the execution of that task. While standing next the Rifle Corps I discovered that the sound of gun-shots which was heard at the other end of the street, had proceeded from the hoofs of four dragoons, who were galloping up and down the narrow streets which led from Great Anscot-street to the factories, and that the rattling of the stones, which was invented for its accompaniment, came from the clattering of the hob-nailed shoes of the boys, who were flying to and fro as these picquets directed their motions. It was most vexatious to see women with infant children in their arms in all the groups I have mentioned, adding much to the noise of the prevailing bustle by their screams when any body rode near them in the street, from which, nevertheless, no persuasion could induce them to depart.

Up to the last hour of the last coach leaving this evening (six o'clock) nothing further has occurred; every thing is quiet here this day, and the arrival by the evening's mail of the news from London of the subscriptions of yesterday, has produced, together with the intentions of Government respecting bonded grain, the most beneficial effects. All parties appear to look towards the metropolis for prompt relief.

I am quite persuaded that there is nothing like an organized plan of violence among the working men. What occurs are mere momentary ebullitions. A meeting was this morning held at a village, where there are power-looms in the neighbourhood, called Charlton-row, where great dissatisfaction was expressed at the thinness of the assembly, there being only about 200 present. They talked of burning the power-looms, but did nothing except threatening another meeting, which it is to be hoped will be prevented by timely interposition.

Manchester, May 4.—The intelligence which has last arrived from the metropolis respecting the munificent amount of the subscription, has had an excellent effect upon the temper of the poorer classes generally, and the intended modification of the corn laws has also been productive of salutary consequences. Numbers in gross are very freely given: for instance, nearly 100,000 are stated to be out of work in Manchester and the immediate neighbourhood; but when you pursue the inquiry from mill to mill, you cannot obtain data for any thing like such a result; and there is, besides, an indisposition on the part of those who must know the facts, to afford the requisite assistance. With respect to the state of distress in this town, I find that, through the humanity of the inhabitants, means are found on the spot to give soup and other subsistence to about 13,000 weekly. The most pinching distress, I rather think, will be found at Burnlew, at Blackburn, and at Macclesfield and the neighbourhood, and it is due to the unhappy sufferers to state, that the accounts of commotions among them have been very much exaggerated.

About one o'clock this day a number of fellows, amounting to near 200, paraded the town, in files of two each, lengthening their line by the paltry trick of keeping their files much apart, and moving onwards to St. George's-fields, as if to collect a larger body from idlers and gazers, to give something like a consistency and cohesion to their appearance; but none seemed to have joined them, and they gradually dispersed.

COURT OF COMMON PLEAS.—May 4.

CRIM. CON.—BLIGH v. WELLESLEY.

Mr. Sergeant Spankie moved upon affidavit for the postponement of the trial of this cause, which stands appointed for trial on the adjournment day in London. The Learned Sergeant grounded his application on the absence of very material witnesses who reside at Naples and other distant parts, and without whose attendance the defendant could not with safety proceed to trial. He wished the Court to extend the time of trial to the Sittings after next Hilary Term.

The Chief Justice stated, that the Court, by its rules, had not the power to extend the time of trial beyond the sittings after Michaelmas Term; and there would be plenty of time in the interval to bring witnesses from any part of Europe.

Mr. Sergeant Spankie.—His affidavit stated that the defendant hoped to be able to procure the attendance of the witnesses, although they were very numerous, by the time named by his Lordship.

The Court—"Take a rule to show cause."

POLICE INTELLIGENCE.

BOW-STREET.—Wednesday a well-dressed young man, named J. Russell, was charged on suspicion of committing a number of robberies in the shops of jewellers in the metropolis, in an ingenious and systematic manner. The prisoner is a Jew; and his father, mother, brothers, and sisters, are what is called by the police, "on the town." Two of his sisters are well known ladies of easy virtue, and one of his brothers is now located in Newgate. Mr. Davies, a jeweller, made the following charge against him:—About a week ago, the prisoner, attired very genteelly, called at the shop of Mr. Davies, in Southampton-street, Strand, and represented himself to be a medical student. He said that he wanted to purchase a bosom-pin, but observed that he was afraid it would be inconvenient to him when stooping to perform the operation of dissection. Mr. Davies, therefore, recommended him to have a brooch in preference, and exhibited several for him to make his selection, but none of them proved to his liking, and he agreed to call again in a few days, when Mr. Davies would have a more extensive stock. On Monday last he called again, and Mr. Davies and his daughter were in the shop at the time. The prisoner examined a variety of articles of value, and selected several, which were packed up, and the bill made out. The prisoner gave a card, "Mr. Hendy, surgeon, Waterloo-bridge-road," and stated that he resided at Mr. Hendy's, and if the articles were sent, they would be paid for on delivery. He was about to quit the shop when he asked to look at some mourning rings, and Mr. Davies said he had some in an adjoining room, and he would fetch them. During his absence the prisoner stood near to a glass case, on which were a gold watch, a diamond pin, and other articles of value. Miss Davies observed the prisoner move his arm from the case; but not entertaining any suspicion at the time that he was any other than a "perfect gentleman," she took no notice. The prisoner instantly excused himself by stating that he had a particular appointment, and could not wait for the return of her father with the mourning rings. He quitted the shop, and soon afterwards Mr. Davies entered with the rings, and was greatly surprised to find that the young gentleman was gone. He took the articles of jewellery which the prisoner had selected to the house of Mr. Hendy, in Waterloo-bridge-road, and discovered that no such person as the prisoner lived there; but a young man answering his description had been there that morning, and purchased some lavender-water, and requested to have one of Mr. Hendy's cards, which was given to him. Mr. Davies hastened back to his shop, suspecting he had been robbed and duped, and he found that a gold watch, diamond pin, and other articles, had been removed from the glass case. He gave information at this office of the robbery, and went round to a number of jewellers making inquiries, when he learned that several of them had suffered by a similar stratagem. The prisoner went to the shop of a jeweller in Clerkenwell (on whom Mr. Davies had previous called and given information of the robbery,) and made a similar representation as that which he had made to Mr. Davies, and he was taken into custody.

Mr. Davies swore positively to his identity, and Miss Davies believed him to be the same person.

The Magistrates, in order to give other persons who had suffered by the artifices of the prisoner an opportunity to come forward and prosecute, remanded him for a few days.

He denied that he was ever in Mr. Davies's shop in his life.

A professional gentleman residing at Brighton, made application to Sir Richard Birnie on Thursday morning for assistance towards recovering his son, a lad of fifteen, who left his home on Wednesday morning last, without assigning any reason or giving any cause to suspect him of such a design. His father, who appeared to labour under much distress of mind, stated, that he had traced him as far as the Bolt-in-Tun, in Fleet-street, where he arrived by the coach, and paid his last shilling in discharge of his fare, but was unable to discover whither he had proceeded on leaving the inn. Sir Richard enquired minutely as to his dress, which was described to be a blue coat and grey trowsers, &c. and gave the necessary directions. The rest of the morning was consumed in the hearing a case of assault, committed by a Mrs. Everet, a lady whose rich Tipperary brogue and extreme volubility kept the office in continued laughter, from which Justice herself with great difficulty refrained. The complainant was a child about nine years of age, between whose parents and the lady aforesaid there exists a feud of considerable standing. The ill usage consisted in calling her by a name the most unmusical to a lady's ear, and "slapping her arm," as she was coming out of an oil shop, where she had been for a pennyworth of soap. Mrs. Everet called "the holy powers" to witness that she had never done "that same," and intreated his worship to prevent her being "murthered by them Bartley's," who wanted to "swear her life away." The evidence was, however, too direct to be got over by mere strength of assertion, and Mrs. Everet, whom, as the wife of a "most antient and quiet watchman," it became to discountenance these violent proceedings, "not to break the peace herself," was bound over to her good behaviour.

Our old friend Johnson, with his usual suite of publicans, from whose delinquencies in keeping open house at "disorderly hours," he no doubt expects to reap a tolerable harvest, was in waiting when our Reporter left the office.

SPITALFIELDS BALL.—The refreshments at the Ball for the relief of the distressed Spitalfields Weavers, on Friday, the 12th instant are to be paid for by such persons as may require them. A very liberal offer was made by Messrs. Gunter, of Berkeley-square, to the Noblemen of the Committee, to furnish them gratis, which they felt bound to decline, it having been previously determined that the tickets were not to include refreshments, and that consequently the Charity would not be benefited by such an arrangement. The refreshment tickets may be had at Messrs. Gunter, 7, Berkeley-square, in aid of the Charity, or at the doors of the refreshment rooms. For the information of such Gentlemen as may entertain doubts upon the subject, that although full or fancy dresses are strongly recommended by the Ladies Patronesses, admittance will not be refused to such persons as may prefer common evening dresses. All persons having tickets from the Ladies Patronesses, may, by application to Mr. Andrews, 167, New Bond-street, secure seats or boxes, which will be kept for them during the evening, on the further payment of five shillings for each seat.

Two prizes of £21,000, drawn last Wednesday, were shared and sold by J. and J. SIVEWRIGHT, viz. :—

No. 1,783.... ...Class A. a Prize of.....£21,000!

No. 3,925.....Class B. a Prize of .....£21,000!

The fortunate holders may receive the current value of their respective shares, on demand, at No. 37, Cornhill, 11, Holborn, and 38, Haymarket. The very last lottery that will ever be drawn in this kingdom, is now before the public; and Messrs. J. and J. SIVEWRIGHT, (who are joint-contractors,) have reason to be proud of the scheme, which contains six prizes of £30,000!!! the greatest number ever given in any lottery, the drawing of which will form the grand final conclusion of all lotteries in this country.

BISH LUCKY TO THE LAST.—Two of the prizes of twenty-one thousand pounds drawn on Wednesday last, viz. :—No. 1,833, class B, 21,000l., and 3,925, class A, 21,000l., were sold by BISH, who also shared and sold four of the minor capitals drawn same day. The fortunate holders may, as usual, receive the value of their prizes on demand, at either of BISH'S offices, 4, Cornhill, or 9, Charing-cross. Only one more drawing remains, which is fixed for the 18th July, and that is to be positively and inevitably the very last that will ever take place in this kingdom.

IMPOSTURE UNMASKED.—The progress of Merit, although frequently assailed, is not impeded by Envy and Detraction. The aggression of ambuscade terminates in defeat; and conscious rectitude ultimately triumphs in the attainment of the grand object—public approbation. The test of experience is the guarantee of favour, and has established WARREN'S BLACKING in general estimation; of which there exists not a stronger proof than the tacit acknowledgment of a host of servile imitators, who surreptitiously obtrude on the unwary a spurious preparation as the genuine article, to the great disappointment of the unguarded purchaser, and manifest injury of WARREN, whose character and interest by this iniquitous system are equally subject to detriment. It becomes therefore an indispensable duty to CAUTION THE PUBLIC against the manœuvres of Unprincipled Venders, who having no character to lose, and stimulated by avarice in their nefarious pursuits, aim at the acquisition of money through any medium than that of honour! The original and matchless BLACKING bears on each bottle a short direction, with the signature

ROBERT WARREN

All others are counterfeits; and in many instances the imposition labels are artfully interlined with a different address, in very small characters, between the more conspicuous ones of "No. 30," and "STRAND." It is earnestly recommended to Shopkeepers and others who are deceived by base fabrications of WARREN'S BLACKING, to return the detected trash to the source whence it came, and expose the machinations of rascality to merited obloquy.

WARREN'S BLACKING is surpassingly brilliant;—it excludes damp, gives pliancy to the leather; retains its pristine virtue in all climates; and combining elegance with comfort, is an article equally of indispensable fashion and utility. Sold by every respectable Vender in Town and Country, in bottles at 6d. 10d. 12d. and 18d. each.

DISTRESS in SPITALFIELDS.—At a MEETING of the COMMITTEE, held in the Vestry-room, Spitalfields, May 6, 1826,

Rev. RICHARD HARVEY in the Chair.

The Committee regret to state, that in consequence of the nearly exhausted state of their funds, they are compelled to confine themselves to relieving those only who are entirely without work, and even those on a reduced scale, giving to a man and his wife but 5s. a-week, and to single persons 3s. The utter insufficiency of this relief is too evident to require proof, and even this must very soon be discontinued.

As the distress, for want of employment continues undiminished, the Committee earnestly appeal to the benevolence of those who have in their power the means of mitigating the distresses of so large and deserving a body of their fellow-creatures, as are the Silk Weavers of Spitalfields, and trust that the foregoing statement will produce such an addition to their funds as may prevent the sudden drying up of those sources to which so many thousand poor persons have to look for the means of existence.

J. D. KINCAID, Sec.

TO THE PUBLIC.—The Contractors, for the last time, respectfully address the Public: for at the conclusion of the present Lottery they must close their office doors, as from that hour all Lotteries are prohibited in this kingdom.

To say that they lament, deeply lament, the determination of his Majesty's Government to suppress the Lotteries, is only to express that which it is most natural they should feel. The abolition of the Lottery is the total destruction of their business, and it is a measure which casts upon the world hundreds of poor dependents, who have been employed by them for a long series of years, many of whom, from age and afflictions are incapable of taking other employments, and will be reduced to a state of utter destitution.

The Contractors abstain from setting forth any lists of the compulsory Taxes or Duties which might have been remitted by Government instead of discontinuing the voluntary Tax of a Lottery; but they are quite certain that if the sense of the country had been taken as to whether the Lottery, or the least objectionable of the Taxes they could point out, should be retained, the majority would have been a hundred to one in favour of continuing the Lottery, which has existed as a branch of the public revenue for more than 150 years, and during that period has received the sanction and suppport of many honourable men, distinguished as well for their morality, as for the wisdom and integrity of their public conduct.

It is a gratification to the Contractors, that, by uniting their interests in this Lottery, they are enabled to present a Scheme (the last that will be seen in this country) which will afford the public, in their farewell adventure, the chance of Six Prizes of Thirty Thousand Pounds—a greater number than was ever given in any former Scheme.

The fact of this being the very Last Lottery in England, combined with the unexampled number of Thirty Thousands in the Scheme, renders the sale of the tickets certain, and ensures a rapid advance of price as the day of drawing approaches: but the Contractors are anxious that all should have the power of embracing the present opportunity, and have, therefore, commenced the sale of the tickets at only Eight Shillings advance upon the price of the last Lottery; and they now pledge themselves that all who apply on or before Saturday, the 27th May, shall be supplied at that price, but on the Monday following (29th May), the price must be increased One Pound Four Shilings each Ticket, and they cannot undertake that the price shall be limited even to that advance for more than ten days.

BURGESS' ESSENCE of ANCHOVIES, Warehouse, 107, STRAND, corner of Savoy Steps, London.—JOHN BURGESS and SON, being apprised of the numerous endeavours made by many persons to impose a spurious article for their make, feel it incumbent upon them to request the attention of the public, in purchasing what they conceive to be the ORIGINAL, to observe the Name and Address correspond with the above. The general appearance of the spurious descriptions will deceive the unguarded, and for their detection J. B. and Son submit the following caution:—Some are in appearance at first sight "Burgess' Essence of Anchovies;" others, "Burgis's," and many more without address.—JOHN BURGESS and SON having been many years honoured with such distinguished approbation, feel every sentiment of respect towards the public, and earnestly solicit them to inspect the labels previous to purchasing what they conceive to be of their make, which they hope will prevent many disappointments.

Burgess' New Sauce for general purposes having given such great satisfaction, continues to be prepared hythem, and is recommended as a most useful and convenient sauce; will keep good in all climates.

Warehouse, 107, Strand, corner of the Savoy Steps.—The Original Fish-Sauce Warehouse.

PRACTICAL OBSERVATIONS on STRICTURES of the URETHRA and RECTUM, recommending an improved system for their Treatment and Cure; illustrating its efficacy by numerous remarkable and highly important cases, in some of which, Strictures of from ten to twenty years duration have been totally removed in a few weeks, and its superiority thereby fully established over every other method hitherto practised. By C. B. COURTENAY, M.D. To which are added, Observations and Practical Comments on Gleet, Seminal Weakness, and the miseries occasioned by Self Abuse, for the cure of which a mode of treatment, the result of long and successful practice, and at once safe, speedy, and effectual, is adopted by the Author.

Printed for the Author, Robert-street, Adelphi; and published by T. S. Allman, Great Queen-street, Lincoln's-Inn-fields; and sold by Jones and Sherwood, Paternoster-row; Onwhyn, 4, Catherine-street; Walker, 90, High Holborn; and may be had of all Booksellers,

"We earnestly recommend the cases related by Dr. Courtenay to the perusal of such of our readers as are afflicted with the complaints which the Author has made the subject of these Observations. Several instances are adduced of the recovery of perfect health from states which were considered hopeless by Practitioners of eminent talents, and very extensive experience. We entertain the highest opinion of Dr. Courtenay's professional skill, and congratulate him on his successful and judicious application to these severe and often fatal diseases."—European Magazine.

THE BRITISH SPECIFIC, for re-producing and promoting the GROWTH of HAIR.—The principle of its operation is to cool and contract the pores which are opened by a redundancy of heat, occasioning a relaxation of the roots, and render them incapable of retaining the hair; to counteract which nothing is better calculated than the British Specific, as, from its invigorating and oleaginous properties, it almost immediately arrests the falling off, and affords such effectual nourishment to the roots, that persons giving it a fair trial may assure themselves of its speedily restoring it even where it has become completely bald, however long it may have been so, and, if grey, gradually to restore it to its natural colour. The superiority of this preparation (the invention of a medical man) derives additional recommendation from its being, unlike other compositions for the hair, so extremely clean and agreeable, that its application is a real pleasure, and is only requisite to be generally known to receive the preference of every article in use for similar purposes. To be had only of D. Peden, 15, Burlington Arcade, Piccadilly, in bottles 6s. each, or cases of four bottles for 1l., forwarded to order, on receiving the amount, post paid.

THE LARGEST NEWSPAPER EVER PRINTED.

On Sunday, the 21st of May, will be published, No. 1 of

THE ATLAS, a General Newspaper and Journal of Literature, printed on a stamped sheet nearly double the size of the Times, folded into sixteen pages.—Aware of the public curiosity which will follow the announcement of this Journal, the Proprietors feel anxious to render its contents worthy of its capacity and external promise; so as to satisfy, by its intrinsic merit, the expectations which, as a remarkable product of Science applied to printing and paper-making, it is calculated to excite.

The Proprietors of the ATLAS are, by the novelty of their plan, relieved from the invidious necessity of undertaking to perform in a better manner what is already done by others. But they propose, by means of a double space, along with a careful and pains-taking system of selection and abridgment, to afford a greater variety than can be found in any single newspaper: their object being to concentrate in one sheet the various matters of fact and speculation which are at present scattered through many, and which no newspaper of the common size can contain.

The ATLAS will combine three great features peculiar to itself:—it will form a complete Weekly Newspaper, an Original Newspaper of the Seventh Day, and an ample Journal of Literature, both English and Foreign.

The ATLAS will have no politics of its own; but it will have a department more interesting to the politician than any which the Proprietors could hope to supply with original writing. A selection will be made of the best articles that appear during the week on each side of every public question. A great variety of sources will be resorted to—Reviews and Magazines as well as Newspapers, and among the latter the provincial as well as the London. By this plan, which is new to the English newspaper-press, the far greater portion of the selected articles will have for each reader the value of originality; while both instruction and amusement will be derived from the appearance, side by side, of the opposing arguments of the ablest political writers of all parties.

In the Literary Department, copious extracts will be given from such new books as admit of interesting quotation; others will be analysed. The Proprietors are determined that this important department shall be wholly independent of interested influence; and they pledge themselves that no person connected with the publishing of books shall have the slightest concern in, or control over, the Literature of their Journal.

Prospectuses may be had, and Orders and Advertisements will be received, at the Office of Messrs. Whiting and Branston, Printers and Engravers to the King for the Prevention of Forgery, Beaufort House, Beaufort Buildings, Strand.

CARL MARIA VON WEBER's CONCERT at the Argyll Rooms, on Friday Evening, May 26.—C. M. Von Weber most respectfully announces to the Nobility, Gentry, and the Public, that his Concert will take place as above, aided by the great talents of the following eminent Performers, all of whom have most kindly promised their powerful assistance. Madame Caradori Allan, Miss H. Cawse, Mr. Braham, and Mr. Phillips, will sing in a new (M.S.) Grand Cantata, entitled, the Festival of Peace (first time of performance in this country) the music by C. M. Von Weber, the words translated and adapted, expressly for this occasion, by Hampden Napier, Esq. This Cantata will form the first part of the Concert; the second will consist of a miscellaneous Act, in which Miss Stephens, Miss Paton, and Mr. Sapio, with equal kindness, have consented to sing; and also Mr. Moscheles, to play extemporaneously on the Pianoforte, Mr. Furstenau, a new air (from Oberon) with variations for the Flute, and Mr. Kiesewetter, a Fantasia on the Violin. The Orchestra will be on a grand scale. Leaders of the Band, for the First Part, Mr. F. Cramer; for the Second Part, Mr. Mori. The Chorus will be complete, assisted by the young gentlemen of his Majesty's Chapel Royal, and St. Paul's Cathedral. Conductor, C. M. Von Weber. Tickets, Half-a-Guinea each, and Bills of the Concert (which will commence at half-past eight o'clock) to be had at the principal Music Shops, and of Mr. Weber, 91, Great Portland-street. Parties of six and upwards can be accommodated with Boxes by an early application to Mr. Weber.

Under the Patronage of His Most Gracious Majesty.
ROYAL GARDENS, VAUXHALL.

THE Proprietors respectfully beg leave to inform the Public, that these Gardens will open for the Season, on MONDAY, the 29th instant; and that, anxious to restore to Vauxhall the high reputation it originally enjoyed in the Musical as well as Fashionable World, when its Orchestra boasted the names of Billington, Wrighten, Vernon, Beard, Incledon, Mountain, Bland, &c., they have converted the Rotunda into a

GRAND CONCERT ROOM,

With a spacious Gallery, and upwards of thirty Private Boxes; and have concluded engagements with the following Ladies and Gentlemen, viz:

Miss Stephens, Miss Love, and Madame Vestris.
Mr. Braham, Mr. Sinclair, and Signor de Begnis, Mr. Horncastle, Mr. C. Taylor, Mr. Tinney, Mr. Robinson, Master Barker, &c.
Leader of the Band, which will be numerous and complete, Signor Spagnoletti.
Composer and Conductor, Mr. Henry R. Bishop.

Negociations are also opened with many other Vocal and Instrumeotal Performers of the highest celebrity, both here and on the Continent, who will give, in turn, their powerful assistance to the Concerts of this Establishment.

On the Theatre of the Gardens, which has been newly decorated, Ballets and Divertisements will be presented in the course of the Evening.

Principal Dancers:—Mademoiselle Pauline Rossignol, from the Theatre Royal, Amsterdam: and Monsieur B. Vestris, from the Theatres Royal San Carlos, at Naples, and La Scala, at Milan.

The Entertainments will conclude, as usual, with a brilliant Display of Fire-Works, by the first Artists.

The Ball Room, which has undergone an entire alteration, calculated, it is trusted, to produce a novel and most pleasing effect, will be thrown open as a Promenade at the end of the first Act of the Concert; and the Proprietors confidently hope, that from the nature of their present arrangements, the most unfavourable weather will not affect the comfort and entertainment of that Public, whose patronage it is their earnest desire to prove has not been bestowed on them invain.

Admission 4s. Information respecting the Private Boxes, for the Season or Nightly, may be had upon application to Mr. Andrews, Bookseller, Bond-street.

NEW SACRED MUSIC.—UNDER THE PATRONAGE OF HIS MAJESTY KING GEORGE THE FOURTH.

JUST Published, by H. FALKNER, at the Opera Music Warehouse, 3, Old Bond-street, an entire new work of Sacred Music, consisting of Church Services and Anthems, in full score, with a separate accompaniment for the Organ or Pianoforte, composed, and by permission, most humbly inscribed to his Majesty, by C. IMPERIAL PARLIAMENT.

HOUSE OF LORDS.

Thursday, May 18.

The Earl of LIVERPOOL moved the third reading of the Bill for improving the Administration of Criminal Justiee.

The Earl of MALMESBURY approved of the prineiple of the Bill, but objected to a praetiee which was attended with much partiality and injustice. In eases of felony, Judges were empowered to grant the expenses to prosecutors. The present Bill extended that principle to misdemeanours, but the grievance was, that the fund out of which those expenses were defrayed was the County Rate, whieh was in fact nothing else than an assessment on the Poor Rates.

The Earl of LIVERPOOL said that the prineiple of the Bill had not been adopted without much previous communieation with the best informed individuals on the subjeet. The clause, it must be observed, only gave power to the Judges to allow expences in certain cases; there was no ground to fear, therefore, that all the expences of prosecuting for misdemeanours should fall on the country. As to the question whether some alterations should not be made with respeet to the Fund from which those expences should be paid, it would remain a completely open question, even after the passing of this Bill.

After a short conversation, in which the Earl of Malmesbury, Viscount Clifden, and Lord Redesdale were engaged, the Bill was read a third time and passed.

HOUSE OF COMMONS.

Wednesday, May 17.

IMPORTATION OF CORN BILL.

The CHANCELLOR of the EXCHEQUER having moved the order of the day for bringing up the report on this hill,

Sir T. LETHBRIDGE said that any further opposition on his part to this measure, after the triumphant majority by whieh it had been supported, would only be vexatious; and as ministers had so positively deelared that it was not intended in any way to prejudge the ease when the general question respeeting the corn laws should be brought before the House, it was perhaps unnecessary for him to require them to give any further pledge on the subjeet. He must, however, protest, as this measure had been only brought forward to meet a partieular exigeney, it should not be urged as any preeedent when the general question came on to be diseussed, either as to the mode of opening the ports, or as to the amount of the duty, which was not indeed the same as in 1822, but less by 5s. With regard to the attempts which had been made to put down his opposition by intimidation, he would only say, that he most heartily despised them. He hoped that ministers would be eautious how they used the discretion which had been plaeed in their hands.

The CHANCELLOR of the EXCHEQUER had no hesitation in saying, on the subject of the pledge whieh the hon. bart. had truly stated to have been given by ministers, that he himself should have considered it most disgraeeful in any Goverument to have adopted this measure with a view indirectly to prejudge the general question of the corn laws; that ministers had no such intention. With regard to the intimidation which the hon. bart. had alluded to, he had treated it in a manner which was perfectly consistent with his high character.

After a few words from Mr. H. Sumner and Sir R. Heron, the report was brought up, read, and the bill ordered to be read a third time on Thursday.

THE WAREHOUSED CORN BILL.

The CHANCELLOR of the EXCHEQUER having moved the bringing up of the report on this bill,

Sir R. HERON said that he did not think it right that the holders of bonded corn should be permitted to put in their own pockets the immense profits which would acerue to them from the passing of this bill. He thought that Government ought either to have taken them for the general serviee of the nation, or to have seen that they were applied for the relief of the distress. It was somewhat remarkable that the great holders of bonded corn resided at Liverpool.

Mr. HUSKISSON said that if he were to act according to the spirit evinced by the hon. baronet in the remark at the eonelusion of his speech, he should say that he supposed the hon. bart. intended to be a candidate for some great corn county; but the fact was, that there was a far greater quantity of bonded eorn in London than in Liverpool, and he believed that the whole of the hon. baronet's large fortune would not make up to his (Mr. Huskisson's) constituents the loss they would sustain by their bonded corn, after paying the 12s. duty.

Mr. BENETT thought it would have been desirable that Government should have had the duty, if there had been no way of applying it towards alleviating the distress, instead of letting the corn-jobhers poeket 100,000l. by this measure.

The report was then brought up, read, and the bill ordered to be read a third time on Thursday.

WESTMINSTER IMPROVEMENT BILL.

The order of the day was then moved for the second reading of this hill. Upon which it was read a second time, and ordered to be eommitted on Thursday.

Thursday, May 17.

The ATTORNEY-GENERAL rose, in pursuance to a notiee which he gave on a former night, with the purpose of moving for leave to bring in a Bill founded upon the recommendation of the Commission appointed to inquire into the praetiee of the Court of Chaneery. He was not one of that Commission, but this duty devolved upon him as belonging to the official situation which he had the honour to hold. The House would be aware that upon an occasion like the present, after the various allusions that had been made to the nature of this inquiry, and after the debates which had frequently taken plaee upon the whole subject, he must necessarily trespass upon a considerable portion of their time. It would be necessary for him to enter into the manner in which the Commissioners had done their duty, to call the attention of the House to the points whieh had occupied their enquiries, and to explain the nature of the measures which they reeommended for the adoption of Parliament. The House would see, also, that in doing this he should necessarily have to go into long dry details. But when they recollected the extreme importanee of the subject, referring to one of the highest institutions of the State, and involving a large portion of the property of the country, he felt that however dry and uninteresting those details might be, the House would hear with him in the discharge of an imperative duty. Many observations had been made both in and out of the House upon the composition of the Commission which had been appointed to undertake this enquiry. The Learned Gentleman then expatiated at great length, and with infinite ability and clearness, upon the various points of that very elaborate and valuable document. The Learned Gentleman most triumphantly vindicated the character and conduet of the Noble Lord and truly great and virtuous Judge, who has so long adorned the first judicial seat in the land; and after a most comprehensive speech, which did equal credit to his head and heart, concluded by moving for leave to bring in a Bill for carrying into effect the measures recommended by the Commissioners.

Mr. JOHN WILLIAMS professed that he should not attempt to follow his Hon. and Learned Friend in his clear voluminous statements; he must observe, however, that in all the very wide range that Hon. Gent. had taken he had afforded the House no view of the object of his Bill. After some further observations, the Hon. Gent. concluded by saying, that two important points had never been touched by the Commissioners, and whatever confidence he might have in his Hon. and Learned Friend, if they were to legislate upon their present information, it would be legislating partially, legislating in the dark.

Mr. R. SMITH was of opinion that the Commission was not authorised to enquire into the eonduet of the Lord Chancellor. As one of those who had signed the Commission he was ready to aeknowledge that enough had not yet been done, and that there was room for more to be done.

Mr. DENMAN could not deny that some good had been done by the Report, but he thought that as the Lord Chancellor was one of the Commission it was not likely that he would have signed his own eondemnation. He would add that the eonduct of the Chancellor had not been suffieiently explained or enquired into by this Report.

After a few observations, leave was given to bring in the Bill.

Friday, May 19.

ADJOURNMENT OF THE HOUSE.

Mr. Secretary CANNING moved, that the House at its rising adjourn to Friday.

Mr. HUME observed, that as he could not allude to any subject on this motion, he would call the attention of the House to regulations regarding the sale of half-pay, founded on a paper delivered a day or two ago. He was sorry that the Noble Lord, Palmerston, was not in his place.

Mr. CANNING suggested the propriety of postponing the subjeet to Friday.

Mr. HUME.—But will the Right Hon. Gent. guarantee me a hearing? beeause I have before now been interrupted by a knock at the door. (A laugh.)

Mr. Seeretary CANNING.—I will guarantee the Hon. Member a hearing.

Mr. HUME.—Then I am satisfied.

Mr. CANNING.—I will not guarantee the Hon. Member a hearing, but the opportunity of being heard.

Motion for adjournment earried.

CHANCERY.

Mr. M. A. TAYLOR gave notice that if in Parliament next Session, he should move the total separation of Bankrupt cases from the Great Seal.

LORD C. SOMERSET.

Lord E. SOMERSET wished to know, whether the Colonial Seeretary had any objeetion to submit the papers to the House respeeting Mr. Bishop Burnett's petition. He added, that his Noble Relation had arrived in this country for the purpose of meeting enquiry, and refuting ealumny.

Mr. W. HORTON had not had notiee.

Mr. BEAUMONT said if, in the House next Session, he should take the earliest opportunity of proposing enquiry.

The Report of the Westminster Improvement Bill was agreed to.

The Paroehial Clergy Residenee Bill, and the Upper Canada Eleetion Bill, were read a third time, and passed.

Mr. HERRIES presented the Report of the usual Sessional Addresses for the Officers of the House.—They were severally agreed to.

Mr. W. WHITMORE postponed till next Session his motion regarding the equalization of the Duties on Sugars.

HIGH CONSTABLE OF WESTMINSTER.

Mr. H. GURNEY called the attention of the House to the statement of Mr. Lee, the High Constable of Westminster; that individual, with his assistants, were in constant attendanee on the House, and he had no remuneration for the performance of such useful duty.

Mr. M. A. TAYLOR spoke to the like effeet, and bore testimony to the unvarying attendance of Mr. Lee from the meeting to the adjournment of the House. The Treasury ought to do something in this case. (Hear, hear.)

THE GREEK CAUSE.

Mr. DEACON presented a petition in favour of the Greeks—a cause that merited the support of this country.

Mr. W. SMITH was of the like opinion. He should like some expression of the Government's sentiments on this subjeet; it would be most useful.

Sir R. WILSON spoke of the sacredness of the cause, and condemned the Foreign Enlistment Act.

Mr. HOBHOUSE did not despair of the Greek cause, though Missolonghi had fallen; if Napoli di Romania defended itself with half the courage, it could hold out a long time. The French had played an unfair part. They had eneouraged the Turks against the Greeks. He had a list of French officers, on half-pay, now serving the Paeha of Egypt, and of Austrian vessels that regularly aided the Turks.—Petition ordered to be printed.

Lord MILTON repeated his inquiry, as Mr. Moore was not likely to bring forward his motion, whether the Government intended to propose any aid for the distressed manufacturers by a public grant.

Mr. Seeretary CANNING replied that such aid could only be justified by an over-ruling neeessity—that over-ruling necessity did not exist; that, after the amplest consideration, the Ministers thought they should not be warranted in proposing any grant; and that private benevolenee would doubtlessly effect the objeets desired—henevolence, the flow of which would be stopped at onee if there were a grant proposed to Parliament. The subjeet had been fully and anxiously considered, previously to such resolution being eome to; but it was also thought it would be ineonsistent with good poliey to establish such a preeedent. He complimented the conduct of the distressed manufacturers; it had been most temperate, forbearing, and exemplary. He trusted the House and country would not consider that the Government's resolutions resulted from any insensibility.

Lord A. HAMILTON presented a petition from Glasgow for the abolition of slavery, signed by 38,000 persons.

Mr. BLAIR said, he understood by a letter, that it was a mere job, signed by school-boys, low operatives, &c.

Lord A. HAMILTON said that he had a letter which stated just the contrary.—(A laugh.)

Mr. A. CAMPBELL observed, that some of the boys signed their names six and seven times over.—(Hear.)

Mr. HUME stated, that on one occasion all the boys of a school were requested to sign the petition.

Mr. BROUGHAM said he never knew any great public occasion where similar charges had not been made, and almost as soon refuted.

Mr. J. WILSON said the Noble Lord was evidently ignorant of the circumstanees attendant on the getting up of this petition.—Petition ordered to be printed.

Mr. BROUGHAM moved that the resolutions of the House for the amelioration of slavery in the West Indies be read by the clerk.

The resoiutions being read,

Mr. BROUGHAM then addresed the House. When the resolutions were agreed to by the House they were thought to eontain the least measure of justice that could be meted out to the slaves in our West India Colonies. It would now be his task to shew how these resolutions had been treated by the slave-owners in the West Indies, which task he would perform without any expression that could be called invective. The Islands of Trinidad and Demerara, being conquered colonies, were more immediately under the power of Government, and there Government made the first attempt at carrying the resolutions of the House into effect. The first order made by Government for the benefit of the slaves there was, that each slave who received a certificate from any Minister of religion that he was competent to be a witness, should be received as such.—The next order was, that the protector of slaves should not be a holder of slaves, but it did not provide that the sub-protectors should not be slave-owners. And though there was a prohibition of masters working their slaves on the Sabbath, yet there was no compensation allowed the slave if he abstained from working his own provision grounds on Sunday. The separation of families by judicial sales was also prohibited; but if the slave made a groundless charge against his master, the master was allowed to give him any number of lashes not exeeeding 25. An Order of Counell, containing many provisions in favour of the slaves, was however sent to Trinidad and Demerara. There are five other colonies governed by the Crown, and thirteen having Legislatures of their own. He would prove that in none of those Colonies had any effeetual measures been taken to earry the Orders in Counell into effeet. In six of them not a single step had been taken, and in almost all the others the case was nearly similar. The Hon. Gent. proceeded to read extraets from the papers presented to the House in proof of this statement. In Jamaiea it appeared that every attempt to render negroes eompetent to give evidence was rejeeted; and in Barbadoes an Aet was passed last year under pretenee of complying in some degree with the Order in Council, which aetually made the condition of the slaves worse. It enaeted that if any slave heard any conversation tending to sedition, and did not reveal it to his master, he should suffer death. The Hon. Gent. enumerated several instanees of rejeetion by the other Colonies, and concluded by moving a Resolution, that the House would, in the next Session of Parliament, take measures to enforee its Resolutions of the 23d May, 1823, for the ameliorotion of the eondition of the Slaves in the West India Colonies.

Mr. W. Horton, Mr. R. Ellis, and Mr. Bernal, opposed the motion.

Dr. Lushington and Mr. Denman supported it.

Mr. CANNING said the Resolution would interfere with the proeeedings of Government, who were determined to enforce the former Resolutions of the House.

Mr. BROUGHAM replied, after which the Resolution was negatived.

The House of Commons adjourned on Friday to Friday next, and the House of Lords to Monday, for the purpose of their Lordships forwarding the Bills before them, so that the business of the Session will be nearly finished when the Commons meet on the 26th. Parliament will probably be prorogued on Saturday, and will immediately after be dissolved.

FOREIGN INTELLIGENCE.

FALL OF MISSOLONGHI.

Dispatehes were reeeived on Monday at the Colonial Office, from Major-General the Honourable Frederiek Ponsonby, the Lord High Commissioner, pro tempore, in the Ionian Islands, announeing that the fate of the long-disputed fortress of Missolonghi was finally decided on the night of the 22d and 23d ultimo.

It appears that the garrison having become desperate from the total want of provisions and the failure of the Greek fleet, under Admiral Miaulis, to throw supplies into the town, determined to retire from the place. A sortie was aeeordingly made by 800 men, under two ehieftains, with the hope to gain possession of one of the batteries upon the sea shore, which was defended by a large body of Arabs; and the town was partially set fire to, at the same time, with the view of diverting the attention of the besiegers.

It was hoped that by this attack, a way would be opened for the remainder of the garrison; but this plan had been foreseen by the Turks, and their posts so strongly reinforced, that after attempting in vain to force a passage by carrying the battery, the body, led by the two ehieftains, dispersed, and endeavoured to save themselves by gaining the mountains.

They then poured into the town and put to the sword, or made prisoners, all who opposed them.

The loss sustained by the Turks on this occasion is not reported; but the obstinacy of the conflict may be estimated by the fact, that although between 2 and 3,000 Greeks perished in the town, and at the foot of the mountain, only 150 are reported to have been taken alive. Of the women and children, a considerable number are said to have destroyed themselves, or to have been drowned; but above 3,000 have been returned as prisoners.

The alarm created by their dispersion was quickly communicated to those who were to follow on this hazardous enterprise, who now abandoned their posts, and sought shelter in small numbers in the most tenable places in the neighbourhood of the town. In the midst of the confusion the Turkish troops rushed on from the sea and land side, and took possession of the fortifications, to which, as a signal of victory, they set fire.

On the 2d of April, the two commanders, Ibrahim Paeha and the Seraskier, had, it appears, sent a summons to the town with an offer of terms, and a promise to the inhabitants that their lives should be spared on giving up their arms; and that they should be at liberty to proceed to any part of the Turkish dominions, but these proposals were peremptorily rejected.

The Allgemeine Zeitung to the 9th instant, asserts, Mr. Stratford Canning to be continuing "his negotiation in favour of the Greeks," but adds, "he seems to be far from the goal." The Greek vessels are charged with many piratieal attaeks on European ships, in eonsequence of which it is said Commodore Hamilton "has warned the English captains of merehant ships not to sail, except under the proteetion of men of war."

A singular outrage is said to have been committed at Smyrna, by a Frenehman, who, it would seem, wished to murder Sir Hudson Lowe. We subjoin an extraet:—

SMYRNA, April 3.—Sir H. Lowe, who is here on his way to India, was near falling by the hand of a fanatie Frenchman, who probably meant, according to his notions, to avenge his country. The Freneh consular agent, Perry, got into the house where Sir Hudson resided, and finding the doors of the apartments shut, he broke them open, and destroyed all the effeets of Sir Hudson, who was fortunately absent on board a ship. Perry was armed with a dagger, and in his blood-thirsty rage deelared aloud that he should find means to get at the murderer of Napoleon, his former master. He was arrested, and is now kept in strict confinement in the Consulate. Since this event, Sir Hudson has remained on board the English ship.

SIERRA LEONE.—The Gazette of Tuesday contained a despatch from Sierra Leone, from the late Gen. Turner, of the 2d of March containing an account of an attaek upon the natives on the banks of Boom River. Although the attack, or skirmish rather, was of little eonsequenee, the details of it are interesting. It appears that the principal slave-dealers, who are mostly Mulattos, who have been bred in England, and whose property and intelligence give them great influence, have exerted themselves to the utmost in preventing the Chiefs from joining in any arrangement with a view seriously to put down the detestable traffie in which they have so strong an interest. Three out of the five vessels on the station drew too mueh water to allow them to enter the river, but by lightening the other two, the Albatross and Swift, they were got over the bar, and with the boats of the squadron, and four canoes, proeeeding on the expedition. Captain Owen, of the Lieven frigate, Lieutenant Mudge, and Lieutenant Owen, commanded the vessels and boats under the direction of the General. The Albatross grounded, and could not be got off nine miles below the enemy's stockade, but the rest of the vessels and the troops, by uneeasing exertion, arrived within two miles of it by two in the morning of the day after they set out. The consequenee of this rapid advance was a complete surprise. The negroes fled to the bush without firing a musket, and left the stockade with no less than ten pieces of cannon loaded, above a hundred muskets, and a considerable quantity of ammunition, to the victors. Next morning the party proceeded against Maccaba, a town fifteen miles farther up the river. On account of the density and rankness of the vegetation on the banks of the river, and in the approach to the town, some little difficulty was experieneed in the outset, and two of the officers and eight of the men were slightly wounded, but these obstaeles were speedily overcome, and the town taken. The death of Major-General Turner will necessarily put a stop for some time to any attempt at improving his suceess, but there can be no doubt that even this little affair will not be without its advantage among savages, by whom force alone is appreciated. We confidently trust that it will confirm the chiefs in their fidelity to the convention for prohibiting slave-dealing, and that it will humble those native slave dealers who have so long been the pest of the coast, and of the colony in particular.

TRAFFIC IN CHILDREN.

Augsburgh, May 11.—Some persons have mentioned an order of the late Emperor Alexander, forbidding the sale of children by the Kirghis and Kalmucks. The following is a more particular account of this traffic.—

Petersburgh, April 11.—A few weeks before his death, the humane Emperor Alexander sanctioned a beneficent decision of the Council of the Empire. On the 20th October he signed, at Taganrok, a Doklad of the Council, abolishing for ever, and prohibiting, under severe penalties, the trade with children, which was carried on, with circumstances of great cruelty, by the Kirghis and Kalmuck tribes on the whole line of Siberia and Orenburg.—The manner of this trade was as follows:—The Kirghis and Kalmucks in their predatory excursions, carry off not only cattle but children. They bring the latter to the market, where a real wholesale trade is carried on with them. The citizens who carried on this infamous traffic, either purchased them with money, or gave goods in exchange. The ordinary price of a stolen Kirghis' child was from 10 to 25 rubles, not more. The facility with which these stolen children were disposed of, encouraged the Kirghis and Kalmucks in this species of robbery, which they generally practised in the spring. The persons engaged in the trade kept the children they had purchased in the hardest slavery, accompanied with all kinds of privation, till the following December or January, when they took them in waggons, in great numbers, to the annual fair at Irbit where citizens or merchants purchased them with money or goods, or sometimes received them as presents. The Kirghis and Kalmucks, when, in times of scarcity, their stores of provisions are exhausted, often send their own children for sale to the markets. These unhappy victims are also considered in the most humane manner in the above-mentioned Decree of the Council of the Empire of October 20, 1826. The central Authorities of Siberia and Orenburg, are enjoined to fix the expenses of maintaining them, to place them with humane villagers, who are to be indemnified for their trouble in bringing them up, by the labour of these children when they are older. After a certain number of years the latter become wholly free.

The French papers of Wednesday cease to contend against the evidence of facts, of which our readers are already in possession respecting the fall of Missolonghi, and contain some details and private accounts which reveal additional horrors. It may be collected from all of them that the heroic garrison and inhabitants of that town, besides being impelled by famine, were betrayed by some secret agents of their enemies, who after persuading them to leave at night a place which they had defended for a year against numerous armies, led them to a masked battery prepared for their destruction, by which their choicest warriors were instantly annihilated. The other divisions, who had under their care the women and children, then endeavoured to regain the town, which they found in the possession of the Egyptians. They succeeded, however, in re-occupying some houses, where they sustained the charge of multitudes, till finding themselves almost overpowered, they set fire to their powder and perished with many of the besiegers. Between three and four thousand women and children are said to have fallen alive into the hands of Ibrahim Pacha, who selected, among the former, three hundred of the fairest to be sent as a present to the Sultan, and to his own father Mehemet Ali.

These papers also contain a letter from the Infant Don Miguel to his sister the Princess Regent of Portugal, in which he acknowledges her dignity, and says, that "as it was possible that evil-minded persons might seek to execute criminal commotions in the kingdom, by making use of his name, he thought it necessary positively to declare, that far from authorising directly or indirectly any seditious machinations, nobody respected more than he did the last will of his august father and master, and that he should always disapprove every thing not conformable to that will, as expressed in his last Decree appointing a Regency, &c."

There is no intelligence from France itself, except that the law respecting the new Custom House Regulations had passed the Peers by a majority of 117 to 6.

Buenos-Ayres.—The following intelligence is extracted from the second edition of the Liverpool Courier:—

Courier-office, May 17, two o'clock, p.m.—By the Hercules, which arrived here this morning, intelligence has been received from Buenos-Ayres up to the 11th of February. We have been favoured with the extract of a letter, which states that an express had arrived in 11 days from Chili, bringing the news of the taking of Chiloe from the Spaniards, or rather the nest of pirates that swarmed there. The Gazette, containing the particulars of this important capture, had not then been issued:—

"February 10.—Yesterday afternoon we had a grand action between the two squadrons. Admiral Brown got under weigh about six a.m. from his anchorage about three miles from the outer roads, which position the Brazilians had occupied a considerable time, and, on his going out and offering them battle, they left, and proceeded further off. After Admiral Brown had got all the squadron together, he made after the Brazilians, to within about three leagues of Colonia, and, on coming up with them, he fired a broadside, which was returned immediately by Lobos, who, with another corvette, lay on each side of Brown, and continued the engagement for about an hour, during all which time he suffered considerably, his own brigs keeping out of the way a considerable distance to the leeward. Brown, finding this, set sail, and came in sight of Buenos Ayres, where he was obliged to come to action again, and sustained a running fight for three hours, after which the Brazilian squadron stood down the river to refit, and the Buenos Ayrean squadron, having saved the gun-boats, returned into the outer roads for the same purpose."

PROVINCIAL INTELLIGENCE.

EXCHEQUER CHAMBER, DUBLIN, May 9.

RICHARD RADFORD ROWE v. JOHN WYBER, ANDREW JACKSON, AND DANIEL ASHFORD.

This was a writ of error from the Court of Common Pleas; the action was tried before Lord Norbury, which was for assault and false imprisonment, and plaintiff obtained a verdict for 200l. The defendant's counsel took a bill of exception to the charge of the Learned Judge; and after much argument in the Court of Common Pleas, three Judges of that Court differed from Lord Norbury, and a venire de novo was awarded. The plaintiff was thus forced to bring in a writ of error before the Twelve Judges. The case in this Court was ably argued by counsel on both sides; and this day the Court of Error gave their judgment seriatim. Ten Judges decided for the plaintiff. Mr. Justice Moore and Mr. Justice Johnson declared against the plaintiff.

Lord Norbury, in giving judgment, spoke as follows:—"I know the full value of time. Indeed I ought to know it as well as most people, for I have already had a long day. I will not, therefore, make this day longer. Having a constructive presence in the Court below, where this case was argued, I feel I have a right and a duty to defend the judgment given, in which the majority of the Court agreed. I would at any time, however, in this Court of Error, revise my own errors, and endeavour to divest every one of his Majesty's subjects of a feeling that he did not receive justice. Having said so much, I feel it my duty to abridge any thing else I may have to say. I will come to a close instantly. Although I know the learning of all the Judges about me, I will mention the greatest authority on bills of exception—Holt and Bridgeman. I have had a great deal of experience. A great many bills of exception have been taken to me.—(Loud laughter.) I am not ashamed of it, for I have done a great deal of business. I will not say much of myself—no, no, it would be ungentlemanly: I will give one line of the poet—

"Oh! my Antonio, I do know of those
Who only are reputed wise
From saying nothing!"

Probably, if I said nothing, it would have been much wiser (loud laughter); but having said so much, I will say a little more. [Here his Lordship reviewed the circumstances of the case minutely.] I now feel myself bound to conclude, and put an extinguisher upon myself. As to laying down the law, it is time for my doing so, perhaps (laughter); but while I am in my native capacity, I will expound it. (Laughter.) In the days of Holt and Bridgeman, too, Judges were treated rudely and roughly, as well as at any time since. However, they are fair game (loud laughter); and where there is a scarcity of other game, I think it is fair to turn out one of them, and hunt a little. (Laughter.) I think the bill of exceptions ought to be overruled."

At the conclusion of his Lordship's remarks, he turned to Baron Smith, and said, "Well, was I long, eh?"

The state of things at Kilkenny is deplorable in the extreme. No one who has not taken a part in visiting the abodes of distress can form any thing like a correct idea of its magnitude and severity.—Leinster Journal.

RIOTS.

[From the Kent Herald of Friday.]

Wincheap Fair, on Tuesday, was, as usual, attended by great numbers of holiday-folks, and some hundreds of the military stationed in this town. All passed quietly until about twelve o'clock, when, owing to a slight misunderstanding, which arose between a soldier of the 6th Carbineers, and the landlord of the Castle public-house, the soldier would insist upon intruding himself into the bar of the house, and impede business. He was given in custody, a scuffle ensued, and the soldier was rescued from the civil power by a number of his comrades, who were joined by a party of the 8th Irish hussars.

It happened, very unfortunately, that several of the soldiers had their sabres with them, and with which they commenced a violent attack on the unarmed people. Alderman H. Cooper, who was passing at the time, seized one of them, but was knocked down, as were several others, and, we regret to say, that four of our townsmen were severely cut and wounded by the swords of the military. The watchmen and constables were assembled as soon as possible, but the soldiers succeeded in effecting their retreat to the barracks in Northgate, which they did in double quick time, sword in hand, and setting the civil power at defiance. Alderman Cooper followed them to the barracks, and gave the necessary information to the guards, and several men were detained for being out so late. Information was given in the morning to the Mayor, J. J. Peirce, Esq. who, with the Magistrates, assembled at the Guildhall, to investigate the affair, and in which they received every assistance from Captain Phillips, of the Carbineers, and Captain Knight, of the Hussars, who paraded the men for the purpose of having them recognised. Three men, belonging to the 6th, were sworn to as being engaged in the riot; and, after a long examination, were held to bail to appear at the Sessions. Mr. William Cock, of this city, received so dangerous a wound over his eye, that it is feared he will lose the sight of it, and was so ill as not to be able to attend the examination. Great part of the city was alarmed, as, during their retreat, the military shouted "Fire," it is supposed, to divert attention from them, the watchmen sprung their rattles, and proceeded to rouse various persons connected with the engines and fire-offices. It is exceedingly fortunate that no lives were lost, for the soldiers spared none who came in their way; one young man, who had seized a poker for his protection, had it cut in two by a single blow from a sabre, whilst raised to protect his head. The hats of several were cut through. Though a number of the Hussars were engaged, we regret to say, that, owing to the sudden attack and confusion of the moment, none of that corps could be identified. We understand that a Court Martial will be holden upon those who run out of the barracks, and who will be punished for the military offence, though they have escaped the civil power.

Liverpool and Manchester Railway.—We are happy to learn, that this grand undertaking will be commenced in about two months. It is said that it will require at least three years to complete it. A general meeting of the proprietors will be held in this town on the 29th inst. for the purpose of choosing Directors and other officers.—Liverpool Advertiser.

A few days ago, as some persons were digging sand in a garden in Compton-street, near Friar's-lane, in this borough, they discovered the skeletons of five human beings, lying in a direct line about 13 inches apart. They were all found about five feet below the surface of the ground, and in excellent preservation; but on exposure to the air, the major part of them soon shrunk to dust. The garden comprises a piece of ground on which formerly stood a monastic building inhabited by a fraternity of Dominicans, or Black Friars; and the spot where the bones were found probably formed part of the burying-ground attached to that edifice. The teeth in two or three of the skulls were in high preservation; indeed, in one skull, apparently that of a young, full grown person, not a single tooth was missing, and the enamel of the whole set was uninjured. As the right of sepulture was taken away from the cemeteries attached to the different religious foundations suppressed at the time of the Reformation, these bodies must have lain in this spot the best part of three centuries.—Warwick Paper.

SPORTING INTELLIGENCE.

YORK SPRING MEETING—Tuesday.

The weather to-day has been very fine, and the sport tolerably good. The following is a statement:—

The two year old stakes of 30 sovs. each—Colts 8st. 5lb.; fillies 8st. 2lb.; T.Y.C. Thirteen subscribers.

We give a corner, with much pleasure, to the following joke:—

"On a wag's being asked, which he thought the most liberal Life Insurance-office in London, he answered, 'The office in New Burlington-street, decidedly;' and he gave as a proof, that one insurer, REYNOLDS the Dramatist, on having terminated his LIFE, personally received on his policy 1000l.

We shall not avail ourselves of the letter of explanation from Beaudesert at present, but will in good time;—when by so doing we can aid the cause of the writer.

THE AGE.

LONDON, MAY 21.

MISSOLONGHI.

If we are to rely on the repetition of the news, from a variety of quarters, Missolonghi has fallen. It is impossible for minds susceptible of admiration for bravery of the highest rank, and sorrow for its utter waste and ruin, to look upon this great catastrophe without strong and peculiar feelings.—Yet it is remarkable, that no event of late times has drawn from our public journalists a slighter portion of their sympathy. The Courier gave the narrative with the dry simplicity of a Government despatch, and the other papers which copied the narrative, followed the example with singular and dishonourable obsequiousness. We are not much addicted to the common-places of public sorrowings, nor are we about to exhaust our readers with a display of our personal sensibilities; but it ought to become a matter of observation and regret, where the only unfettered press in the world, lending itself with unnatural eagerness to every paltry and passing purpose of the streets, and the men of the streets, yet shrinks from the natural and lofty duty of commemorating the fall of patriotism and valour.

The probable results now become matters of contemplation. If we are to rely upon the statements of the Duke of WELLINGTON'S conferences with the Emperor of RUSSIA, war with the Turks is at hand. MINZIACKY, the Russian Minister at the Porte, has been ordered to demand a definitive answer on the evacuation of Wallachia and Moldavia by the Turkish troops, and on its being in the negative, the Russian frontier army, already burning with impatience for the war, and secure of victory, is to pass the border, and fall on the enemy. A campaign of a few weeks would probably put it in possession of the open couutry. But Wallachia contains some of the strongest fortresses in the east of Europe, famous for their defences in all the wars of Turkey, and often baffling both the Austrian and Russian engineers. Those, if they are provisioned, must occupy an important portion of the season, and if the Russian General should think it necessary to beseige them in form, might protract the campaign till the Winter, which sets in early, and with such remarkable severity, as to extinguish all operations till March. But the modern tactique is of a more rapid description, and if, adopting it, the Russians should be content with masking the fortresses, their army might clear the country at once, pass the Danube, and in a month be under the walls of Constantinople.

The EMPEROR denies that his purpose extends beyond the liberation of Wallachia and Moldavia; but if his army should be successful in their first enterprizes; if courier on courier should come galloping to Moscow and St. Petersburg with high-sounding gazettes of infidel slaughter; if the streets to our "Holy Mother of Casan" Cathedral should once see the procession of Horsetails and Holy Banners, kettle-drums, and captive Agars of the Janissaries; all the prudence of the EMPEROR must be reserved for taking care of the life of that Sovereign who should be bold enough to say, "We must stop at the Danube."

Then comes the questions, would Austria see Constantinople fall without a remonstrance in the shape of an army? Would England see the Queen-city of the Mediterranean fall without a remonstrance in the shape of a fleet? Would the new energies of Greece be left unemployed, and not be rather poured out in a deluge of revenge on the coasts of the Mediterranean wherever they could strike the Turk, or the friend of the Turk? And finally, as to France, with her finest shores open to the Mediterranean, with her old ambition of supremacy on its waters, and with her still older love of bearing sway in all the quarrels of Europe, suffer this tremendous agitation to pass by without swelling it by her hot and stormy breath? These are things of futurity, and they may, like all human speculations, perish as they rise; but in the present feverish state of the general European mind, in the complete equipment of the continental armies, and in that strange and undefined, yet universal, impression that some mightier change than all the past is soon to arise, minds anxious for the peace of the world must feel the highest alarm at the commencement of disturbance in even the most remote member of the system.

The fall of Missolonghi may have an important result upon this great crisis. The Porte, habitually haughty and confident, will probably become still more stubborn and insolent in the exultation of recent victory. If the British mediation, which has so long restrained the mutual rage of Turkey and Russia, should be rejected in this hour of pride, war is rendered inevitable.

The same exultation which leads the PORTE to scorn Russia, demanding the retreat of the Turkish troops from the disputed country, may treat with contempt the proposals of England for the independence of Greece. Nothing but the last degree of terror could ever subdue the PORTE into the alienation of any part of its provinces. Greece must seem to it now reconquered. What will be the reception of the English proposal, to force the conquest from its grasp? The blood of Missolonghi will influence the Ottoman. We shall then see how far the resolution of the English Minister will bear him through the demand.

Yet the PORTE has accomplished one point of policy with the craft of an Asiatic Cabinet. The PACHA of EGYPT had been growing too powerful for a subject. Armies, fleets, and a full treasury, were the menacing symptoms of Egyptian independence. The PORTE has, after long delays, plunged him into the centre of the most consuming of all hostilities;—troops, fleets, and treasures, are cast away upon the rocks and sands of the Morea—the PACHA is left without power; and the PORTE fights the open revolter by the concealed rebel.

But the fall of Missolonghi will not decide the fate of Greece. This point of resistance in a country so long aggrieved, and so long resisting, cannot be extinguished by the loss of a single fortress, we might as well expect to see the fiery fervour of the volcanic soil extinguished by stopping up the mouth of the volcano. It will make another outlet, probably a much more terrible one.—Peace to the heroic hearts which have perished there! They are the pledge to Europe, that Greece is still the same, that she will yet repay the noblest sacrifices that we can make for her—that she is still the land of LEONIDAS, and waits only for security and triumph to be again the land of PLATO and PERICLES.

As a specimen of the enormous fabrications which sometimes appear in Morning Papers of undoubted information, we give the letter which detailed the fall of Missolonghi, exactly a month before it happened.

"We copy the following from a Morning Paper, where it is described as "an authentic letter from an English Colonel, who was one of the brave defenders of the place," and with a copy of which the paper had been favoured by the Gentleman to whom it was addressed.—Courier, April 12.

"ST. ANNE'S, NEAR LEPANTO, MARCH 14.—Missolonghi has fallen. That heroic city, which for eighteen months had defeated the power of the Infidels and repulsed 72 attacks, was taken by storm on the 10th. Poor St. Aubyn fell on the occasion, but he died nobly. On the 8th, while we were rejoicing for our late victory, Ibrahim having been reinforced by 7000 troops, arrived before the place, and again summoned us to surrender, promising favourable conditions, which being refused, a sharp affair took place, the result of which was that he fell back, having lost 700 killed, 200 wounded, 400 prisoners, 4 pieces of cannon, and 2 standards. On the 9th he returned with 20,000 men, and a formidable train of artillery, surrounding the town on all sides. We had only 7,000 men to oppose to him, and those worn out with fatigue, but all resolved to conquer or die. In the evening we received the Sacrament in the Church of St. Sophia, and marched to our posts, from which few returned. At twelve o'clock the enemy opened a tremendous fire from 185 cannons and 43 mortars, which continued, without intermission, till ten o'clock next morning, when the walls became a heap of ruins. The enemy then vigorously attacked us in four directions, and after two hours' fighting, forced their way into the town. The conflict was now raging in the most deadly form. The streets were choked with the dead and wounded, whilst the blood was running in streams. The slaughter of the Turks was excessive, as every house was a complete fortress, and the ground disputed at the point of the bayonet, inch by inch. Our gallant French volunteers did wonders. Three times, headed by our brave and lamented St. Aubyn, they charged and drove back the enemy with great loss, taking a number of prisoners; but in making a fourth and desperate attack, our gallant St. Aubyn was shot in the breast, and died in my arms, begging me with his last breath, to die rather than yield. In the meantime the Governor defended himself with heroic obstinacy in the great Church, but the doors being forced, and most of his men killed or wounded, he sprung the mine, which destroyed both that and the citadel, overwhelming himself and two thousand Turks in one tremendous ruin. The enemy having now entire possession of the hard-fought town, we collected about 3,600 of the brave fellows who had fought so well, and after a hard contest, we succeeded in cutting our way out, leaving them in possession of a heap of ruins, which I have learned has cost Ibrahim nine thousand of his best troops in the last attack alone. I joined General Gouras on the 12th, with 2,500 men, 150 prisoners, six cannons, and nine standards taken from the enemy during the last fatal attack. We brought the body of St. Aubyn off with us, which will be interred to-day with military honours. I received three slight wounds, but am now fast recovering."

We were taking a cockney walk last Sunday after noon in St. James's-square, ruminating on the benefit mankind would derive from our publication of the day, and on the benefit we should derive from the sale of it, when we were nearly run over by a carriage driving up at full speed to the house of a Noble DUKE resident there. Anxious to get a peep at so distinguished a genius as His GRACE, and also to ascertain the issue of such "a haste-post-haste" despatch, we waited for some little time, when alas! to our discomfiture, as well as to that of Mrs. COUTTS, the carriage drove home again as EMPTY as it came!

The trial of the KING versus PETO, for the mal-construction of the Custom-house, which came on in the Court of Exchequer on Wednesday and Thursday, has given ample scope to those conjectural personages who argue upon men and things as they might be, as well as to those intelligent calculators, who examine them as they really are. The plain fact of the transaction, however, divested of all theoretical argument, is, that the builder contracted for a certain sum to erect the new building (lately fallen down)—that nearly throughout the estimate, and in one item alone, viz. the driving of the piles, he exceeded that original contract by about 100 per cent; and that after having received the enormous sum of THREE HUNDRED THOUSAND POUNDS, there still remained a balance in his favour of something turned SIXTY THOUSAND! The COMMISSIONERS, conceiving this excess of estimate to be perfectly unjustifiable, very prudently resolved to pay no more—a resolution that became strengthened by a general intimation from their officers of the insecurity of the building, and an intimation that became confirmed by the sudden fall of a very considerable part of the structure.

On wading through the account of the trial, and the testimony of the witnesses adduced on either side, there is a circumstance arising from the evidence that, we must confess, appears to us of a somewhat extraordinary nature. The pertinacious statement, set up by the Defendant, of his having worked under the directions of the surveyor LAING, which he must know was, according to his mode of proceeding, in express violation of his contract with the COMMISSIONERS, is in itself sufficiently corroborative of the average value of the defence; but the more striking position maintained by a witness, is, that Mr. PETO repeatedly intimated to the COMMISSIONERS that he was building on A BAD FOUNDATION, yet he STILL continued to BUILD! and for constructing a fabric, which, by his own shewing, he was certain would fall down (and the result has proved how well Mr. PETO knew what he was about); he coolly received THREE HUNDRED THOUSAND POUNDS, and issued legal proceedings against the Crown for the recovery of the balance.

We have, in two or three instances before, taken occasion to allude to the desperate march the Saints are daily making into the very bowels of commerce, policy, and universal association; and so convinced are we of the pernicious tendency of all their motives and actions, that we shall never, knowingly and intentionally, allow an opportunity to pass, without giving them every possible advantage of exposition.

A much more seemingly holier personage, (and no doubt, as holy as he seems) than the said HENRY PETO, never sung psalms. He is the very acme of righteousness, the essence of sanctitude, and the zenith of all uprightness. It is true that Mr. PETO did rebuild the present Drury-lane Theatre, as some "enemies to the faith" may allege against him: but it should be said in his favor, that the whole amount of his bill would not induce him to enter such an ungodly building, unless for the purpose of RECEIVING IT. Upon this principle, it must have been, no doubt, that the undertaking previously referred to was entered upon; it must have been a powerful touch of conscience, and a still more powerful touch of goodly interest, that prompted the policy of suggesting the insecurity of the foundation to the works going on; but we shrewdly suspect it must have been an instinct of a much more powerful nature than either of these (and which could of course be maintained on the most religious scruples) that prompted the advantage of proceeding in a building, the builder of which was well assured at the time, of its falling down a few months after its completion.—But there is nothing like a little godliness in every thing.

FASHION.

MRS. WILLIAMS'S PARTY.—In Lower Brook-street, Sunday evening, this lady gave a grand dinner to fourteen fashionables: The Duke of Wellington, Lord Burghersh, Mr. and Mrs. Wilmot Horton, the Countess St. Antonio, Madame Pasta, &c.

We are as fond of a joke as any person can conveniently be, and we dare say Mrs. WILLIAMS, though we have not the honor of her acquaintance, may make as good an one as a man need wish to laugh at: but with all due deference to her humour, we think the above paragraph what is commonly called "too much of a joke." Let Mrs. WILLIAMS have five hundred parties, if she please, and let her moreover, send five hundred puffs to the Morning Post, to apprize the world of such important goings on; but when she next announces "a dinner given to FOURTEEN fashionables," let not either the pride or the ignorance of the WILLIAMS's mix up with the illustrious name of the Duke of WELLINGTON operatic vagabonds, or their patronising Saints!

COBBETT.

We have but a moment to announce the curious rumour, that COBBETT has begun his canvass. A town in Lancashire is said to be the fortunate spot, which has been thought worthy of so distinguished a representative, yet we are ignorant of his claims till this hour. We have yet had no census of the number of felons who may have made that chosen spot their chosen residence; a few bankruptcies we should have expected, but nothing has transpired to make us presume that it contained nothing but bankrupts. Lancashire had a bold spirit of its own in the days when piracy was profitable, and the smuggler alternately ran Hollands, and robbed on the highways; still, we think, the conjecture cannot be right, which would set down the whole of its population as addicted to those practices. On the whole, we must believe the report is, for the mere purpose of dishonouring that ancient province. We must have an authentic return, proving the infinite ascendancy of scoundrellism in all its classes, before we can believe the rumour; we have suppressed the name of the place, as we would not be instrumental to fixing so deep, and yet so ridiculous an imputation on any town on this side of Botany Bay.

In submitting the following ballad to the attention of our readers, we are not without some apprehensions as to the nature of its literary reception. The kind of poetry which it professes has incurred occasional censure, and in one instance met with severe reprobation from one of our highest literary tribunals, Doctor JOHNSON, who, in speaking of the Percy Ballads, of which this is intended to be an imitation, observed, that any person might speak such poetry: for instance, said he,

"I put my hat upon my head,
And walked into the Strand,
And there I met another man,
With his hat in his hand!"
&c. &c. &c.

All this is very well with Doctor JOHNSON, who had a license for dogmatism, and took out a diploma for more judgment than he did possess, or more pertinacity than he ought to have possessed. However, be that as it may, so much do we differ from such hyper-criticism, and so much gratification does this measure at all times afford us, both from its simplicity, and its adaptation to all kinds of narrative, that we have deemed it fitter, than most others we remember, for recording some recent

FASHIONABLE DISASTERS.

Burthen—Chevy Chace.

God prosper long our noble King,
Our lives and safeties all,
A sad mishap there lately did
Poor Mrs. COUTTS befall.

To aid the poor, with heart and hand,
The WIDOW took her way,
To reach in time a box she took
Her person to display.

Her coach was filled, and when I shall Relate their names to you
Who sat within it, you will say,
"And pretty WELL filled, too!"

My Lady GUILDFORD entered first,
Arrayed in richest cloth—
Then followed in her mother's train
One of the Ladies NORTH!

The third, as big as both combined,
Came in with such a swing,
I ween it could no other be
Than Lady DASHWOOD KING.

Then "last," but very far from "least,"
The widow passed the door,
Which balanced on her side the coach,
One hundred weight, or more!

So off they speed, a goodly few,
With fat and feathers swelled—
Ah me! I'd not have been the coach,
For all the wealth it held.

But 'ere the stately party got
Half way upon the road,
Their carriage, quite sick of the job,
Broke down beneath its load.

They who of "gravity" profess
To see the "centre" clear,
Will say, enough of gravity
Was surely centered here.

Oh, what fate else could they expect,
Those self-deceiving elves,
When two among their party would
A coach fill by THEMSELVES!

Then hats and caps were thrown about,
All scattered to the sight,
And thus the WIDOW did bemoan
Her ill-beseeming plight:—

"It is enough to make each hair
"(Thus turned about and tost)
"To stand an end upon my—beard,
"—My wig, I find, I've lost!

"And you, my Lady KING, I pray
"That you will bear in mind,
"(For I have told you oft before
"How large you are behind:)

"Never again, by any chance,
"The same side sit with me,
"But by the other two, that I
"May balance all the three."

The parley ended, and repaired
Well as might be their fall,
They onward sped, all hastily,
To COVENT GARDEN BALL!

And seated in their box, to see
What sights might there be seen,
They all forgot the misery
In which they late had been!

They say, misfortunes never come
Alone—and furthermore,
That accidents will happen to
The great, as well as poor.

And that is why to Mrs. COUTTS
Another did occur,
Because it could not chance unto
A greater one, than her.

And so it was—for just as they
Had sat down for repose,
And Lady KING had blown her breath,
And Mrs. COUTTS her nose,

The BOX KEEPER, right lustily,
And with official roar,
Came bawling in, "The Princess—Ma'am—
"AUGUSTA's at the door!"

It should be known, the WIDOW would Give half of her bequest,
And chance of marriage with the DUKE,
To have a ROYAL GUEST.

Then there was setting curls to rights,
Adjusting frills and lace,
Smoothing the ruffles round the neck,
And those upon the face;

And tucking in across the breast
The net which hides the same,
As it had swelled, from tucking in Too MUCH before they came!

The DUKE, too, changed the yellow gloves
He'd put on for the night—
(For Mrs. C. had ordered him
To fetch a pair of WHITE!)

So at the instant, in there stalked
Two ladies of estate—
The PICCADILLY PARTY rose,
And bent their body's weight.

And saying this, the reader will Right heartily agree,
'Tis very evident, a case
More weighty could not be.

While thus engaged in bow and scrape,
A Royal smile to win,
The stout plebeians little thought
The scrape they had got in.

Whether employed in acts of grace
Too much, the DAME to know—
Or too much wine had dimmed the sight—
The record does not show:

But, certes, when their bosoms seemed
With pleasure most to heave,
A MARQUIS and a dame, close by,
Were "laughing in their sleeve."

They laughed, to think that people should Commit such sad mistake,
As, for a PRINCESS OF THE BLOOD,
Some weaver's wife to take.

No PRINCESS—no AUGUSTA there
Displayed her ROYAL HEAD,—
But, Mrs. and Miss BEAUMONT walked
Their bodies in, instead.

To tell the grief, the shame, the rage,
My pen were all too weak,
Their blushes were the only means
Their agony to speak.

Who Mrs. BEAUMONT was, they none
At all could understand,
Some thought, perhaps 'twas her who lives
In Norfolk-street, i'the Strand.

Oh, heavy news! they all did say,
And some they blushed for SHAME,
And then went home, if possible,
More heavy than they came!

God save the King, and bless the land
With money, peace, and grain,
And grant that no such sad mistakes
May ever come again!

THEATRICALS.

We are happy at having it in our power to congratulate Mr. BRAHAM on the result of his benefit. Every crevice of Covent Garden Theatre was occupied on Thursday night, manifesting at once a due tribute of respect, and a trifling one of remuneration, to the most accomplished singer that England ever possessed. By the unition of unrivalled natural powers with great science, and the best directed taste of any singer or composer we can own, MR. BRAHAM has elevated the musical character of this country to a pitch it must have despaired of reaching, until his genius became apparent; and it would be a deep stain, both on our pride, our opulence, our consequence and discernment, if we did not reward to the utmost such a gifted countryman as he is, while we are lavishing thousands annually on some new-imported puppet, brought to this country either to pick our pockets, or insult our understandings.

The principal occurrence at the rival theatre has been the repetition of the part of Sir John Falstaff, or rather a part thereof, by Mr. ELLISTON, which it seems has turned out even more comical than our most sanguine expectations from his humour had led us to hope for. We hear, on pretty good authority, that the NOBLE LESSEE having made up his mind to bring the performance of the character as near "to the life" as possible, had issued his royal directions to his property-boy (who, be it known, is the person that delivers to the mimes their stage utensils) to give him something more like sack than the usual mixture of table-beer and water made up for the character, and that the fellow, having his master's orders, and the fear of him before his eyes, and having, from a knowledge of his lord's propensities, a great desire to please him, did concoct a compound of extra strength, with which he filled, and from time to time replenished, Sir John's cup. We do not pretend to determine on whose side lay the fault, if fault there was; but certain it is, that either the strength of the liquid was too unlimited, or the quantity taken not limited enough, and the consequence was, the great man fell—to rise no more—some half-hour before his time. It is impossible for us to take upon ourselves to decide whether on this occasion His EXCELLENCY saw DOUBLE; we wish we could say, as far as the audience were concerned, he did; though, even then, he would not have seen much; but as it was, we can only say, he was in better SPIRITS than we ever remember to have seen him. We have heard it remarked by some that they are surprised how the public could stand it: be that as it may, it appears His EXCELLENCY could not stand it, which at once explains the mystery of his fall and exit.

In the Morning Post of May the 10th appeared the following alarming announcement:—

"The Haymarket Company is about to receive a very considerable acquisition in the person of a lady of the name of PINDAR, who has been for some time of great and DESERVED provincial CELEBRITY!!! She is a LADY by birth and education, who, from her state of widowhood, has been impelled to have recourse to the stage as a means of livelihood for a young and interesting family. She is highly spoken of as well for her beauty as for her talents, and fascinating manners; and is besides valued by those who know her, as a most amiable and virtuous character!!"

and in consequence of such a flaming account, we made a point of attending the Haymarket on Tuesday last to witness the performance of the Wedding Day, and the first appearance in LONDON of the said MRS. PINDAR. On an examination of the actress's personation of Lady Contest, we should be somewhat disposed to doubt this "great," or at all events, "deserved provincial celebrity," but allowances are of course to be made for any kind of debut. We cannot help smiling at the humbug now and then attempted to be practised on that most open-mouthed and swallowing gentleman, JOHN BULL, and in no instance more so than in persons talking of being "impelled to have recourse to the stage as a means of livelihood"—it is the heighth of all impudence and cant, and is offering an insult to the stage, to which, bad as it is, it is superior---no persons, and above all, females, should embark in a profession, of which they are ashamed, and for which they feel it necessary to plead the cause of a "livelihood" in excuse---they had better go on the pave at once. This observation, however, is merely ventured en passant, as a hint to the injudicious friends of this, or any other debutante. If we had not perused, and of course believed, the above paragraph in the Post, we should really have thought this lady of "great and deserved provincial celebrity," who was stated to have made on this evening "her first appearance in London," to be the Mrs. PINDAR we remember some time since performing under Mr. BURROUGHS, the then Manager of the Surrey, and whose mamma-in-law was of such reputed virtue in the City of Bath—but we dare say that we are in error, and that the Post is right. It is almost a task of supererogation to announce the continued success of this theatre,—it has been opened five weeks, and has netted, we hear, more than as many thousand pounds—diu spiret, say we of such a wind, and so we presume does Mr. MORRIS.

We are at present unable to answer the query of a Correspondent, as to "whether Miss FOOTE's present suitor accompanies her to America?" We can only say, he must be a thick-head, as well as a *Broad*HEAD, if he does.

A NEW FRENCH GRAMMAR,

By Mr. J. V. Douville, Professor of the French Language.

We call the attention of our readers to a New French Grammar, which has recently appeared. It is the production of Mr. J. V. Douville, Professor of the French language. The author's grand object, as distinguished from the plans of other grammarians, has been to promote facility in speaking French. The exercises of his Grammar are highly calculated to accelerate this great desideratum; they are chiefly composed of sentences most used in familiar discourse, which plan will be found an excellent performance, as the phrases unite the greatest perspicuity in their adaptation to the several rules, and thus afford the student, in presenting to his view the rules of syntax, a valuable collection of useful expressions. The nature of the French verbs is also exhibited in quite a novel and perspicuous manner; but the remarks on pronunciation, the explanations of idioms, the models of composition for the common business of the world, and the treatise on French poetry, are peculiarly serviceable. The execution of the whole, in short, displays such a degree of critical acuteness and sagacity, that those who may wish to acquire a knowledge of French with a view to conversation, will find this work extremely useful. It is published by the Author, 6, Coventry-street, Haymarket, and 2, Lawrence-lane, Cheapside.

The Eton Montem, which took place on Tuesday, attracted an immense concourse of people; among whom were the Duke and Duchess of Northumberland, Lord Prudhoe, Earl and Countess of Jersey, Mr. Secretary Canning, Mr. and Lady Agar Ellis, General Sir William Grant, Earl and Countess of Verulam, with many other distinguished fashionables. The fineness of the day added much to the beauty of the scene; and from an early hour of the morning, every road leading to Windsor and Salt-hill was thronged with vehicles of all descriptions. It is supposed that the carriages of the nobility and distinguished fashionables alone exceeded in number 1000. The Provost gave, as is usual, a public breakfast to several of the nobility and gentry; and at one o'clock the procession set out from the rear of the College, through the playfields, from which they entered the Slough-road, and proceeded to Salt-hill, attended by two bands of music. Many of the dresses of the boys were very splendid. The salt-bearers were, Sir John Mordaunt, and the son of Sir John Chapman. His Majesty was not present, but it is said that he sent his donation of 100 guineas by Mr. Canning.

Walking-sticks first began to be a requisite appendage to the gentlemen of fashion about the year 1655, at which time they were formed with an indented head, in order to afford a more easy pressure of the hand which they supported. Ingenuity, which in matters of fashion is for ever on the alert, now crowned them with the addition of a round and hollow top, which sometimes contained nutmeg or ginger, to warm the stomach of the valetudinarian, and sometimes sugar-candy for the asthmatic; but snuff soon after coming into universal use among the bon ton of society, the cavity was exclusively appropriated to its reception; and the meeting of two friends was invariably marked, after the first salutation, by the unscrewing of the tops of their walking sticks.—Bath Herald.

We have been favoured with some particulars of another recent attempt to work contraband goods a few miles eastward of Eastbourne, when it appears the Coast Blockade succeeded in taking a large boat, and upwards of two hundred tubs. We are sorry to add, much mischief has occurred, as on the following morning blood was observed near the spot. Two men belonging to the boat are taken prisoners, and two of the Blockade are reported to be much bruised and beaten, and it is also suspected some of the smugglers are seriously if not mortally wounded. The Blockade, in this instance, behaved in the most humane manner, having received a regular volley from the opponents before their officers gave directions for them to fire. We have just heard that five of the smugglers were killed in the affray.—Brighton Gazette.

We are glad to see that several of the parishes of the metropolis are adopting the necessary means of procuring subscriptions in aid of the general fund for the relief of the distressed manufacturers. Among the foremost is the parish of St. Mary-le-Strand. At a vestry held on Tuesday, a committee of gentlemen was appointed to collect subscriptions for this purpose; and we hope and trust that their laudable efforts will be promptly seconded and effectually assisted by every respectable inhabitant of the parish.

Tuesday morning, Mr. Edward G. Wakefield arrived at Macclesfield, from London. He breakfasted at the house of Dr. Davies, and then rode to Taxal Lodge, the seat of George W. Newton, Esq. the Magistrate, to whom he surrendered himself. He remained at Taxal Lodge until this morning, when Mr. Turner and his solicitor attended the Magistrate. Several examinations took place, and Mr. Wakefield, when asked if he had any thing to say, always replied, "nothing." The Magistrate concluded the sitting, by placing Mr. Wakefield in the custody of a Stockport constable, and he was to remain at Stockport until yesterday, when he was again to appear before the Magistrate.

The Committee of Management of Drury-lane Theatre have presented a handsome silver vase to Mr. Stanfield, as a testimonial of the high sense they entertain of his great exertions in the scenic department of the theatre. Generosity and wisdom here go hand in hand.

MISCELLANEOUS.

Signor Puzzi's Concert will take place on Wednesday, the 7th of June, at the Marchioness of Cholmondley's, under the most distinguished patronage.

Lord Blesinton's tale "De Vavasour," appears to be a story of the fourteenth century, full of gaiety and gallantry; not to mention an abundant supply of the tender scandal and "delicate investigations" of those venerable times, in which interesting liasons, it would appear that their Reverences the Ecclesiastics were more deeply implicated than would have been altogether approved by their master, the Pope.

Mr. Lambton, who has been so long and severely indisposed, was in the House of Commons on Friday, for the first time this Session.

The stalks of the early potatoes in the south of Devon are so generally cut off by the late frosts, that it is feared a great deficiency in the crops will be the cnonsequence. The apple blossoms still look well in that district. Sherborne Mercury.

We are informed that the ladies' sale of fancy and ornamental works, for the benefit of the distressed Weavers of Spitalfields, is fixed by the Lady Patronesses for the 29th and 30th inst. at the Hanover-square rooms.

Astley's Amphitheatre has been crowded with fashion during the past week—the great attraction is the novelty of "Paul Pry on Horseback," which is eminently successful. Mr. Ducrow's amazing performance on three horses, is also the theme of general admiration.

Associations in favour of the Greeks are forming in all the cities of Old as well as in those of New Russia. Among others, Stettin, Magdeburgh, Breslau, Conigsburg, &c. are mentioned. A German Journal remarks, that this movement has been simultoneous throughout the kingdom, and that it seems to have been produced at all points in the same moment. Doctor Hufeland has written to a Berlin Journal to state, that after his first appeal the subscriptions were multiplied in a most satisfactory manner. Prince Augustus, the King's son, has given 200 thalers, and the Minister of State Humbold, 20 fredericks in gold, and four ducats. The call made by the Countess of Bruhl and Pappenheim has produced 375 thalers. In the second list of snbscriptions, published on the next day by Dr. Hufeland, those of Prince Albert (the King's son), of the Burgomaster, and the highest functionaries, are found.

The forthcoming Romance of Gaston de Blondeville will complete the series of Mrs. Radcliffe's works, of which it is supposed there m st exist in one shape and another at least thirty thousand copies. [illegible] A very large sum of money, we understand, has been given for her last production; but there can be no doubt, from the curiosity excited by the expectation of a new romance from the pen of Mrs. Radcliffe, that the sale will be immense.

Balloon.—Fall of a Scaffold.—Mr. Green, his son, and another person, ascended in a balloon yesterday afternoon, from the bowling-green of the Eagle, City-road. We regret the occurrence of a serious accident which took place about half an hour before the ascent. In a place called Tenter-row, behind the Eagle Tavern, the roofs of a row of cottages of the meanest description, were fitted up by the inhabitants for the reception of company, at a lower rate than that demanded for admision to the gardens of the Eagle. On one of these, occupied by a person named Bartlet, a dealer in cats'-meat, a very heavy scaffolding had been erected, and was crowded with people. About half an hour before Mr. Green's ascent, this scaffolding gave way, aud precipitated the spectators to the earth. Many persons were borne away severely injured, and very exaggerated reports of the extent of the mischief were circulated; but upon inquiring particularly on the spot, we were informed that one person had a leg and another an arm broken, and it was said that the collar-bone of a third was dislocated. Upon the occurrence of the accident the sufferers experienced the most prompt assistance from the inmates of the Tavern. At a little before twelve o'clock last night, Mr. Green and companions returned safe to the Eagle Tavern, where they were received with loud and hearty welcomes. It appears they had effected a safe descent at St. Mary's Cray, Kent, on the estate of Percy Well Dyke, Esq. of East Hall, at whose mansion they received a most hospitable reception.

It might have been hoped, that owing to the many lamentable and fatal accidents that have occurred from the unfeeling and indecent practice of compelling female servants to clean the outside of windows in the street, no matter at what height, would have altogether ceased. Such, however, is not the case; for a few days ago, about three o'clock in the afternoon, a young girl was seen by a correspondent in a situation that excited the greatest apprehension for her life: the house was that of a bonnet-seller in Oxford-street, and on the outside of the windows of the second story was this poor creature kneeling, with her back to the street, on a narrow ledge of a sign-board, which is close under the windows, and which was scarcely wide enough for the joints of her knees to rest upon, while her legs and feet projected over the foot-pavement, there not being even any description of balcony to the house to break her fall if she had slipped, so that she must at once have been dashed upon the pavement. A gentleman who happened to be passing at the time, and who, amongst others, was shocked and disgusted to see the girl in this situation above their heads, could not refrain from going into the shop and warmly remonstrating against such an unfeeling and unseemly exhibition, and the remonstrance had ite effect, for the girl was ordered to get inside; but her effort in doing so, the window being very narrow, only doubled the fears and anxieties of the spectators for her safety. She did, however, happily get in without falling.

On Friday last an inquest was held by James Borton, Esq., Coroner for Bury, upon the body of Samuel Faires, who had been found hanging in a hay-loft in St. Andrew-street, about six o'clock that morning. It appeared that he was employed by Mr. Burton, shoemaker, to take care of his horse, and his master thiuking that the animal had not hay enough, went up into the loft, when he observed the man in a stooping posture, as if watching for a rat; but on going closer, he found he was suspended from a halter in such a manner that it was necessary for him to bend his joints in order to produce strangulation: Mr. B. immediately cut him down, and procured medical assistance, but life was extinct. It was proved that the deceased had been in a low way for some time, and that some fear was entertained of his destroying himself last summer. The Jury found a verdict of—"Temporary Derangement."

Bursting of the Paddington Canal.—The new sewer now executing at Paddington, under the superintendance of Mr. Gutch, surveyor to the Grand Junction Canal Compony, having been left in an insecure state on Sunday night, the water from the canal forced a passage into it, and with the noise of an earthquake blew it up in every direction, forcing the earth along with it for several yards into a brickfield, sweeping down thousands of new bricks; thence taking its tremendous course along the fields towards Bayswater, it fell with a roaring noise into the Westbourne, which it swelled into a rapid river. The loss to the Canal Compano will, it is thought, amount to several thousand pounds, for it is not merely the re-constructing the sewer, and paying tne damage done, but the charge for detaining the merchandise in the packet-boats, which amounts, it is said, to some hundreds per diem, and which must now continue fer some considerable time longer, perhaps some weeks. The fields over which the current passed presented a most curious spectacle in the morning, being literally covered with people catching the eels and other fish which had escaped, and which they were hunting for among the high grass. It was said that one mon, in the early part of the morning, took two or three hundred weight of fine eels, and sold them at the market.

LAW INTELLIGENCE.

COURT OF KING'S BENCH, May 18.

MOLLOY V. MEREDITH.

The plaintiff in this case, a wine and spirit-merchant, brought his action to recover the amount of his bill for wine and spirits, with which he had supplied the defendant.

It appeared from the evidence, that the spirits had been supplied at different times in small quantities.

The Lord Chief Justice stated, that the plaintiff was not entitled to recover for any spirits supplied in less quantities than one gallon. The jury, therefore, under his Lordship's direction, found a verdict for the plaintiff, after deducting the amount charged for the spirits.

COURT OF COMMON PLEAS, May 13.

RICHARDSON V. FRY.

This was an action to recover compensation in damages for the injury received by the plaintiff, in consequence of the seduction of his wife by the defendant.

Mr. Serjeant Wilde stated the case to the Jury. The present was one of those instances which had, of late, become unfortunately frequent. The plaintiff, his client, had now come to demand at their hands the reparation his case required for the outrageous injury he had received from the defendant. He should not waste their time by making remarks which their own feelings, as men of morality and virtue, would prompt, but briefly state the circumstances of the case, which would be substantiated by the witnesses, and leave it for them to decide what ought to be the amount of the damages he was entitled to receive. The plaintiff had just commenced life, and married a woman of great beauty and accomplishments. To shew the affection he entertained for her, he had settled all his property, in possession and reversion, on her. They had continued on the most affectionate terms till the defendant, who was in the medical profession, had been introduced to the family. Then it was he took an opportunity of ruining the virtue of Mrs. Richardson, and the happiness of her husband. The witnesses would enter into a detail of the facts of the case, and by them they would determine, whether his client was not entitled to large damages.

Witnesses proved the criminal intimacy of the defendant and the plaintiff's wife. To the latter and her husband loss of health was one of the consequences.

Mr. Sergeant Vaughan addressed the Jury for the defendant, contending, that he was but a silly boy, who had been ensnared by the lady.

The Lord Chief Justice having summed up,

The Jury retired at twenty-five minutes before three o'clock, and returned at twenty-five minutes before five, finding a verdict for the plaintiff—Damages, Two Thousand Pounds; costs, 40s. The Court was crowded to excess during the trial.

THURSDAY, May 18.

BAILEY AND ANOTHER V. BEAUMONT.

This was an action brought to recover the amount of 6,500l., for a charge for erecting a conservatory, of very peculiar construction, and such a one as was not to be found at any other place in this country, or even in Europe.

The plaintiffs are ironmongers in Holborn; the defendant is Col. Beaumont, of Northumberland.

The work for which the action was brought, was for the erection of a domical conservatory, the cubic space of which was represented by Mr. Sergeant Vaughan to contain four times the cubic space of the Court of Common Pleas, for which there was an estimate given; but the works, from alterations, additions, and improvements, were increased to a sum amounting to about 6.500l. There was also attached thereto two boilers capable of working two 7-horse power steam-engines, and a vinery; these were included in the sum stated. The work was first proposed in 1820, but was not completed until the autumn of the last year, when the agent of the defendant objected to the conservatory, as unfit for the purposes intended, and that in fact the upper dome would not carry the glass; it never had been glazed, and a great number of witnesses deposed that it twisted with the wind in its unglazed state, and that if the glass was placed therein, the effect of the wind would be such, that it would be dangerous. Many witnesses were also called with respect to the value of the work, who thought the charges enormous. Some of them were persons of experience. as iron-founders; and some from the country, who had been accustomed to erecting hot-houses and conservatories, but none of them had ever seen a work equal to the one in question.

For the plaintiff a great number of witnesses testified that they thought the work was an extraordinary work of art, and in every way complete; that the materials were of the best kind, and that altogether the charges were fair.

The Lord Chief Justice charged the jury, that it was for them to say, as had been alleged by the defendant, whether or not the work was perfectly useless. If any part could be used, they were to say the value of that part; and if a sum was necessary to complete any part of the conservatory, or that, as it appeared by many of the witnesses for the defendant, it was insufficient for the intended purpose, they would deduct such sum as would complete it. Certainly one fact should be taken into account—that the dome had never been glazed; and they had heard from men of eminence that it would be much stronger when so done, and that the twisting and vibrating complained of would cease. There was strong evidence on both sides: it was for them to determine.

The Jury, after retiring for nearly an hour, returned a verdict for the plaintiffs—Damages, 4,500l.; costs, 40s.; being a deduction of 2,000l. from the demand.

The trial of the cause lasted nearly nine hours, and it was ten o'clock before they returned their verdict.

FRIDAY, MAY 19.

WALTER V. BRAMAH.

This was an action brought by the plaintiff, an attorney residing in Belgrave-place, Pimlico, to recover compensation for a nuisance occasioned by the defendant's works, which immediately adjoin his dwelling. Mr. Sergeant Vaughan stated the case with great humour; he described the choice viands in his client's larder as rendered very unpalatable by the sooty exhalations from the defendant's furnaces, while his superior old port was shaken in the cellar by the reverberation of the hammers, that when Mr. W. came home, after the fatigues of the day, to enjoy his steak and bottle, the one was scarcely eatable, and the other a thick muddy pool, a very libel on the name of the generous fluid, which maketh cheerful the heart of man. If he retired to rest, no sleep for him, the abominable noise completely banished "tired nature's sweet restorer;" and when he arose in the morning, a dense cloud of dirty-coloured smoke darkened the fair light of heaven, and obscured his prospects. In short, filth, soot, smell, vapour, hammering, shaking, all combined to render the plaintiff's life uncomfortable. To prove this, the learned Sergeant called Mr. George Harris, who deposed to an admission on the part of Mr. Bramah that the nuisance was a great one.

The Chief Justice then interposed, and at his suggestion a reference was proposed and agreed to, two gentlemen of the jury who had viewed the premises being appointed referees.

COURT OF EXCHEQUER, Tuesday, May 16.

THE NEW CUSTOM-HOUSE.—THE KING V. HENRY PETO.

Mr. Walter opened the pleadings.

The Attorney-General then addressed the Jury. His learned friend had informed them that this was a proceeding against Mr. Peto, to recover the penalty of a bond which he executed to secure the amount to the Crown, on behalf of the public, and which would become forfeited, provided Mr. Peto failed in building the new Custom-house, in the city of London. By the contract, Mr. Peto was bound to complete the work for the sum of 165,000l.—

GENERAL ELECTION.

TO THE WORTHY AND INDEPENDENT LIVERY OF LONDON.

GENTLEMEN,

THE distinguished situation in which you have this day been pleased to place me upon the Poll, inspires me with a confident hope that through your kindness I shall attain the object of my ambition.

Permit me to express to you my warmest acknowledgments for the support I have already received, and to solicit the favour of your early attendance at the Poll on Monday next.

I have the honor to remain,
GENTLEMEN,
Your faithful Servant,
WM. THOMPSON.

STATE OF THE POLL, 2d Day.

Thompson	992	Waithman	857
Lord Mayor	700	Ward	729
Wood	922	Garratt	286

TO THE WORTHY AND INDEPENDENT LIVERY OF LONDON.

GENTLEMEN,

THE gratifying result of this Day's Poll confirms me in those sanguine hopes which were excited by the return at the Common Hall, and demands my cordial acknowledgments.

A continuance of those kind exertions, to which I am indebted for my present success, cannot fail to place me in that distinguished situation to which your assurances of support have induced me to aspire.

I have the honour and gratification to subscribe myself,
GENTLEMEN,
Your most obliged and devoted Servant,
WM. WARD.

Committee Room, City of London Tavern,
10th June, 1826.

STATE OF THE POLL.

Ward	729	Wood	822
Thompson	992	Lord Mayor	700
Waithman	857	Garratt	286

 Mr. Ward's Committee earnestly solicit the early attendance of his Friends at the Poll on Monday morning.

TO THE WORTHY AND INDEPENDENT LIVERY OF THE CITY OF LONDON.

GENTLEMEN,

PERMIT me again to thank you for the continued support with which you have this day honored me—a support which has enabled me without unnecessarily trespassing upon the convenience of my Friends to poll a greater number of Voters than has on most former occasions been polled by those candidates who have stood highest in your esteem.

I am unwilling to advert to any circumstances of a personal nature, but with reference to the state of the Poll, it is due to myself to declare my conviction that the course adopted by Mr. Alderman Garratt this day has deprived me of support to an extent which very sufficiently accounts for the trifling advantage gained over me.

That Gentleman, however, has retired from the contest, and relying on the good feeling expressed towards me during my canvass, and particularly upon the kindness with which the circumstances so unwillingly alluded to by me were viewed in the Common Hall, I cannot but flatter myself that you will be induced to use increased exertions in my behalf.

I have the honor to be,
GENTLEMEN,
Your devoted and faithful Servant,
WILLIAM VENABLES.

Mansion House, Saturday, June 10, 1826.

TO THE MEMBERS OF THE SENATE OF THE UNIVERSITY OF CAMBRIDGE.

Gentlemen.

IT has of late been promulgated so generally, that it is my intention and my duty to retire from the contest for the Representation of the University, that I feel it incumbent on me to take this public mode of meeting both these statements—of assuring you, in the first place, that I am determined to come to the Poll on Tuesday next—and of satisfying you, that if it be the duty of any Candidate to retire, that duty does not devolve upon me.

You will recollect, that I came forward as a Candidate for the Representation of the University on the death of Mr. Smyth. Of those who cannot consent to make further concessions to the Roman Catholics, I was one of the first that intimated an intention to stand. I received considerable encouragement, but at once withdrew my pretentions, in deference to the superior rank and claims of the Speaker; nor could I, from my necessary absence on public duty in Ireland, resume my canvass on his subsequent retirement. I gave, however, the most distinct intimation, that I should, on the next occasion, solicit your suffrages; and, in conformity with the pledge so given, I now come forward.

I have stated to you individually, the ground upon which I rest my claim to your support—that of undeviating attachment to the Constitution of my Country, and you cannot fail to be aware, that, I have steadily and consistently resisted for nearly twenty years, the admission of Roman Catholics to political power, in this Protestant State. I have had sufficient opportunity of ascertaining that my principles are not disapproved by you. I have received distinct promises of support from nearly five hundred Members of the Senate, a number greater than that ever polled by any successful Candidate, excepting Mr. Pitt. I have the most encouraging assurances from many others, who have declined pledging their Votes until the period of Election, and I leave it to you to decide, whether, with this body of support, it would be becoming in me to retire.

Every sacrifice of personal interest or distinction I would willingly make to ensure the success of the principles which I have uniformly maintained; but I feel that I should be betraying the confidence reposed in me, if I were now to abandon a contest which gives me so fair a prospect of zealously representing your opinions in Parliament.

I have the honour to be, Gentlemen,
Your most faithful and obliged humble servant,
London, June, 8, 1826. HENRY GOULBURN.

CAMBRIDGE UNIVERSITY ELECTION.

THE COMMITTEE of Mr. GOULBURN sit daily at the Union Hotel, Cockspur-street, to receive information and to afford facilities to the Voters in his interest.

Union Hotel, Cockspur-street, May 27, 1826.

To the CHAIRMAN of the Right Hon. H. GOULBURN'S COMMITTEE.

SIR,

A LETTER signed, 'Henry Goulburn,' which appeared in a Newspaper of last night, affords a fit opportunity for the following communication, which is made to you by the express authority of Mr. W. J. Bankes, with the concurrence of his Committee.

It is right to premise that the proposition which follows is made with a conviction on the minds of those who propose it, that the number of promises already distinctly given to Mr. Bankes exceeds that which has as yet been given to Mr. Goulburn; and that this conviction is confirmed by a statement in the letter of Mr. Goulburn, estimating the number of votes on which he relies as not yet amounting to five hundred.

It is proposed by Mr. W. J. Bankes's Committee, that a comparison shall immediately take place between the list of promises given to Mr. Goulburn, and of those given to Mr. Bankes; the result of which comparison shall induce that Candidate who may have received the smallest number of promises to withdraw his pretensions on the present occasion.

The reason of this communication not receiving the signature of Mr. Bankes is the circumstance of his being now at Cambridge; but he has confided express authority to his Committee to make this proposition at any sueb time as they should think proper.

(Signed) G. BANKES, Chairman.

Union Hotel, June 9, 1826.

SIR—Mr. Goulburn's Committee have had the honour of receiving your communication of this day, in which you propose a comparison of the Lists of promises given to Mr. Goulburn and Mr. Bankes, in order that the one of these Candidates who may have received the smaller number should withdraw his pretensions to the Representation of the University.

Mr. Goulburn's Committee entertain no apprehension of the result of such comparison; and had the proposal been made at an earlier period, they would have been ready to give it the most serious consideration; but as Mr. Goulburn has now pledged himself, in the strongest and most public manner, to go to the Poll on Tuesday, Mr. Bankes's Committee must feel that, from a pledge so given, it is impossible for Mr. Goulburn, under any circumstance, to recede.

I have the honour to be, Sir,
Your obedient faithful servant,
JOHN PERCEVAL, Chairman of Committee.

To the Chairman of Mr. Bankes's Committee.

GENERAL ELECTION.

BOROUGH OF MALDON.

THE FREEMEN IN THE INTEREST OF MR. DICK, are requested to lose no time in applying to his Committee, now sitting at the CROWN AND MAGPIE, WHITECHAPEL, where coaches are ready to convey them to Maldon, it being his determination to keep the Poll open as long as the law will permit, that every unpolled Freeman may have an opportunity of voting.

Maldon, June 9th, 1826.

TO THE WORTHY AND INDEPENDENT FREEMEN OF THE CITY OF WORCESTER.

GENTLEMEN,

WHEN I reflect on the intimate connection that has long subsisted betwixt my family and your ancient city, of which you have manifested your feeling by electing me as your Representative in the three last Parliaments, it is not without deep regret that I announce my intention of retiring from the Representation of the City of Worcester, at a time when your continued kindess (so strongly displayed in my recent canvass) had insured success.

But my appointment to the Vice-Lieutenantcy of the County, of which his Majesty has been graciously pleased to approve, and the situation in which I am in other respects placed, must devolve on me a mass of public and private business, the due execution of which, would be incompatible with the duties incumbent on me as your Representative, and with that attention to the interests of so numerous a body of constituents, as my sense of gratitude for their kindness would render imperative!

In retiring from that immediate connection which now exists with your ancient city, allow me to assure you, that in every situation in which I can be placed, I must always feel that anxiety for your welfare, which has long and uniformly marked the conduct of the family to which I belong!

I have the honour to be Gentlemen, with all possible respect,
Your obedient humble Servant,
DEEHURST.

GENERAL ELECTION.

SUGGESTIONS AS TO THE CONDUCT AND MANAGEMENT of a COUNTY CONTESTED ELECTION. Addressed to Candidates for the House of Commons, their Friends, Committee-Men, and Agents; and to the several persons who may be engaged or interested in County Contests: with an Appendix of the Statutes on County Election, including those of the Present Session, systematically abridged; with practical forms, adapted to immediate use, for the purpose of facilitating the business of the Canvass and the Polling.

By G. BUTT.

This Volume is compiled from Notes and Memoranda made by the Author, in the course of two contested Elections in a large and populous county; in one of which he was engaged as the principal agent of the successful candidate; and in the other as a Legal Adviser of the Sheriff. The Work is adapted for the general reader, and its scheme is perfectly novel; its chief object being in familiar language, free from technical obscurity, to discuss the mechanical operations of the canvass, and the polling; and to offer to electioneering partisans such friendly hints as are the result of actual observation.

The following is a Synopsis of the Work:—

Of the Candidate; and of his Qualifications and Disqualifications, in alphabetical order, and in juxtaposition: with suggestions to him on many important points.

Of the Agency Department: as well Principal, as Local, with hints, &c.,

Of Canvassing: and of the modes of proceeding therein, as well generally, as with reference to the Canvassing List, and the Land Tax Assessment.

Of the Candidate's Committees for securing his Return; whether General, Branch, or Agency.

Of the Sheriff; the Assessor, the Poll Clerks, Commissioners, Inspectors, Check Clerks, &c. and of their respective duties.

Of the Electors; and of their Qualifications, and Disqualifications, in alphabetical order, and in juxtaposition, so far as they can be so placed.

Many of the forms in the Appendix never have been published; and the Abridgment of the Statutes comprehends, under distinct heads, with reference to the persons to whom they apply, all that is requisite for the purposes of Election.

It is remarkable that a work of this kind has always been a desideratum; and the present Essay would not now be published, but for that reason; or if any author were likely to produce a similar tract, previously to the looked-for interesting period of the ensuing General Election.

FOREIGN INTELLIGENCE.

DEATH OF THE EMPRESS ELIZABETH OF RUSSIA.

By the arrival of the Sir Edward Banks, steam-packet, from Hamburgh, in 50 hours, papers have been received to the 3d of June:—

"Hamburgh, June 1.—Authentic and afflicting accounts have been received that her Majesty, the widow of the late Emperor of Russia, Elizabeth, died on the 4th (16th of May) in Belew, on her journey from Taganrok to Kaluga." Her Majesty the Empress Elizabeth Alexiowna (before her marriage the Princess Louisa Maria Augusta) was the second daughter of the Hereditary Prince Charles of Baden, who died in 1801: she was born the 24th of January, 1779, and married in 1793. Her life was short, but it was the life of an angel filled with acts of beneficence, adorned with all the virtues that can dignify woman: she would have been worthy of the most splendid throne had not fate placed her upon it. Her Majesty's eldest sister is the Queen Dowager of Bavaria; her youngest sisters are Frederica, late Queen of Sweden, and the Hereditary Grand Duchess of Hesse Darmstadt. —Hamburgh Correspondent, June 2.

PARIS.—THE JESUITS AND RELIGIOUS PARTIES.

The Ministers have at last publicly recognized the existence of the Jesuits in France, and the existence of what has been called the Congregation. The Bishop of Hermopolis, the Minister of Ecclesiastical Affairs, has allowed, by his speech in the Chamber of Deputies, that there are seven colleges under the exclusive direction of the Jesuits. He likewise made known the origin and progress of the Congregation; but he declared at the same time, that he never wished to become a member of it, although he had been often solicited on the subject.

This congregation is a secret society, formed and directed by the Jesuits. Its avowed or apparent objects are the exercises of piety. The motives which its enemies ascribe to it are ambition, and the desire of directing the proceedings of the Government. We hear in the society the names of the members of whom it is composed, under this name of the Jesuites de robe courte; because it is said they only differ from the real Jesuits by their external appearance.

The Minister of Ecclesiastical Worship has admitted that several members of this secret society had attained high employments, and that they had rendered their brethren signal services. He quoted as an instance the late Duke of Montmoreney, the Governor of the Duke of Bordeaux. Some Deputies hinted, that among the number of the lay members, there were some more elevated in dignity than the ministers themselves. You thus see, that in admitting that the Jesuits have in France no more than seven seminaries, it is impossible to form an idea of their influence, since the number of their secret associates is unknown, and since they are found in the highest ranks of society.

The men who are most exasperated against the introduction of those religionists, and the influence which they exercise, are the old Royalists. Those of them who have been most violent in their clamours against the Revolutionists, now speak of the fate of James II. as if we were threatened with another revolution. I do not know whether their intention is to frighten the King, or whether they themselves are really frightened. Within these few days there have been serious troubles at Rouen, one of our first manufacturing cities. Government, as you would see, has been obliged to employ a military force to protect the missionaries from the fury of the populace. Some believe that the violence of the mob has been excited by the agents of the police, with the view of affording ministers a pretext for suspending the freedom of the opposition journals. I know nothing to justify this suspicion.

Distress begins to be severely felt in Paris and in the principal cities of France. We know that a great number of building adventurers have become bankrupt. Others have been arrested for debt. Others have suspended their works, and the police has already directed more than 20,000 workmen to leave Paris, and go to their departments. This has happened while no public calamity can have been known to derange private fortunes; but speculations of all kinds had exceeded the wants of the public, and the means of the undertakers.

The Commission of the Chamber of Peers appointed to inquire into the affairs of Ouvrard, has already made its report. It does not appear that any member of that chamber is inculpated. At the same time it is not certain that the decision of the cause will be referred to the Cour Royale.

There has been in the Chamber of Deputies an animated discussion respecting the re-establishment of the censorship. The ministers neither avowed nor denied the intentions imputed to them. I can scarcely believe that they really entertain these intentions.

CARLISLE.

FATAL AFFRAY—FIRING ON THE PEOPLE.

"Tuesday, June 6, half past four p.m.—I have just returned from witnessing a most melancholy occurrence. Sir Philip Musgrave, of Edenhall, the ministerial candidate for this city, was on his canvass this morning in Caldewgate, one of the suburbs. Sir Philip is an extremely unpopular candidate, not on account of his personal qualities or demeanour, which I believe are unexceptionable, but on account of his politics, and more especially his support of the corn-laws. Caldewgate is principally inhabited by persons concerned in the cotton manufacture, who are now in a state bordering on starvation, earning from 2s. 9d. to 4s. per week, and whose feelings respecting the corn-laws are most acute. The sight of Sir Philip under such circumstances caused great irritation, and he and his friends were pelted with stones by the rabble. He took refuge in a private house. The mob increased to some hundreds, principally, however, women and boys; but their appearance was sufficiently formidable to prevent Sir Philip attempting to make his way through them. He continued a prisoner until afternoon, the mayor all the time busying himself with swearing in special constables. About half-past one I was coming into the city from that quarter, where I had some business, when I met W. Hodgson, Esq. the clerk of the peace for the county, and mayor of the city, proceeding to the place of Sir Philip's imprisonment, with two or three constables, and a dozen or so of gentlemen. I turned and followed at a distance, and saw them advance to the front of the mob; and here I may observe that I and every body near me remarked the temerity and foolishness of this attempt at a rescue, as this small party would infallibly be driven back, and a greater disturbance be raised than ever. Mr. Hodgson and his party advanced, preceded by a resolute constable. The rabble slowly retreated, but a party of them, ensconced behind a wall which enfilated Mr. Hodgson's little party, suddenly poured such a volley of stones among them, as compelled an instantaneous retreat. Part of Mr. Hodgson's little party betook themselves into the neighbouring houses, which were hospitably opened to them (for only a very small part of the population participated in this outrage,) and part betook themselves to the city; but I do not think that any of them were taken prisoners or otherwise ill-used than as I have mentioned. Sir Philip continued a prisoner all this time, and I and two or three acquaintances posted ourselves at a sufficient distance to be out of danger, and near enough to see the further proceedings of the mob. The rabble now began to pour from all parts of the town, and I think about half an hour after the repulse of Mr. Hodgson, an officer, sergeant, and three artillery-men, marched to the scene of action: they were followed by a company of the 55th; then came another company of foot; then a few magistrates and private gentlemen, and after them a body of special constables. The whole party halted on the bridge of the Caldew, which separates the suburb from the town. They paused a few minutes, formed into marching order, and then pushed forward, the soldiers with bayonets fixed, and swords drawn. When within about 100 yards of the rabble, they paused for a few minutes, when I was told the riot act was read, but I was not near enough to ascertain the fact, as I kept aloof near the bridge, where I was out of danger, and could see all that was going on. They then charged, and the mob retreated, pouring on them vollies of stones, of which, indeed, they threw a good quantity during the pause above-mentioned. They cleared the area opposite the house of Sir Philip's imprisonment with the bayonet, and then fired three vollies up two small streets, called Shaddongate and Queen-street, in quick succession after the retreating mob, the hindmost ranks of which continued after the bayonet charge (as I have heard some say, but I was not near enough to ascertain the fact) to pour vollies of stones upon the soldiers. Sir Philip, his friends, and the special constables, then marched up the street together, and in a short time the troops re-formed themselves, and returned to the Castle, meeting in the way a troop of horse, who had also been called out to quell this insignificant tumult. So far the matter seemed trifling, for every one near me believed that the vollies were nothing but blank cartridges fired over the heads of the mob, which consisted principally of women and children, who anticipated nothing worse than the broken heads common in an election squabble. But to my great surprise I was overtaken on my way home by a woman in the greatest agony of grief, who requested me to visit her son-in-law, who was shot. I went with all speed, and found him shot through the chest, and bleeding profusely. After doing what was necessary, I left him to see a young woman. She was shot through the temple, her brains escaping through the wound. Assistance was evidently of no use, and I left her to see a boy, about fifteen, who was shot in the heel. I am afraid it will be a bad case; probably the limb will be lost. I then hurried to a young woman, whom I found under the care of a surgeon, who happened, like myself, to be on the spot. She was in the house at the junction of the two streets. A ball had gone completely through the house, entering at one window and going out at another; in its passage it made a terrible fracture of the upper part of her skull. She was trepanned, and the depressed pieces extracted or elevated; but it is very improbable that she will survive. I returned to the woman I mentioned before, and found her dead; the man shot through the body seemed something recovered; there are hopes, but feeble ones, that the ball has not touched the vital organs. I also heard of another individual being wounded, but did not see him—five in all. I have hastened to give you this account of the matter; if the coroner's inquest develop any other interesting facts, you shall have them by the next post. I do not wish to make any comment on this transaction, but to transmit you a plain and impartial account of what I myself have seen. Of the foolish attack on Sir Philip Musgrave there cannot be two opinions; but its criminality is much diminished by its being but a stretch of the usual licence of a contested election, by a starving rabble. When it was learned that the soldiers had fired with ball, every one who witnessed the transaction expressed the greatest horror at the fact; and if the destruction occasioned was intentional, I must say that it would require strong language to express my opinion of the slaughter of the poor wretches whose dying agonies I have just witnessed. But I would fain hope that it will appear the orders given were, to fire over their heads, which appeared to be the direction of the pieces I saw levelled, and that from the broken and irregular nature of the ground, and the circumstance of the soldiery being principally ignorant recruits, the melancholy consequences ensued which I have described."

CORK.—THE LATE DUEL.

A short time since a servant of Captain Daunt summoned him before the petty sessions of Ballyneen, for non-payment of wages. The case was tried and decided against the servant. Mr. Connor, who attended at the board, remarked, it would seem, in a careless and (some would have it) friendly manner, that "Daunt ought to have paid the man rather than have brought it before the board." This was communicated; and Captain Daunt immediately sent a friend (Mr. Atkins) to demand an explanation, which was declined by Mr. Connor, on the ground of the words being used while discharging his duty as a magistrate. The friend departed, seemingly not satisfied, at least so it appeared to Mr. Connor, who soon after conferred with his brother magistrates, and they were of opinion that the words were used in his magisterial capacity, and, consequently, that he was not called on to defend them personally. Captain Daunt felt the force of the observations, and coming from a friend annoyed him much more; he again sent Mr. Atkins, who, on waiting on Mr. Connor, was informed, that if his visit was of a hostile nature, he would bring the parties into the King's Bench. This had its effect, and the affair dropped without any further explanation.

The friendship of two such men being severed, was the cause of regret throughout the neighbourhood; and accordingly a most excellent and esteemed man (the Rev. Dr. Hinekey, rector of Morrah) resolved to bring the parties together, in order to effect a reconciliation. For this purpose he gave an entertainment, to which both were invited; and, in the course of the evening, a gentleman present approached Captain Daunt, and said that as Connor was in the room, and as they had a trivial difference, he considered it would be well to make it up between them. The reply (I am informed) given by Captain Daunt was, "Oh! d—n the coward," which being overheard by Mr. Connor, who was then at a short distance, he immediately inquired if such an epithet was used to him; and being answered in the affirmative, he waited the opportunity of Captain Daunt retiring out of the drawing room, and delivered the message himself, for the next morning. The friends of both parties again interfered, but all to no purpose, and Lieutenant Beamish Bernard, cousin to Mr. Connor, and brother to Arthur Bernard Beamish, Esq. of Palace Ann, was deputed by Mr. Connor to arrange the preliminaries for a meeting. The negociations that were entered into continued for nearly a week; when all endeavours proving fruitless, and the parties being determined, the magistrates interfered and bound them over. It was then agreed that they should procced to the county of Waterford; and accordingly they arrived in Cork on Monday, in a private manner, and that evening posted off for Youghal, where they remained that night; the next morning, at a very early hour, they went to the opposite side of the river, where, having taken their places, the word was given, and in the first shot Captain Daunt's hat was knocked off, his adversary's ball having passed through it. An attempt at reconciliation was resorted to, which having proved ineffectual, they fired again, and Mr. Connor's ball passed quite close to his adversary's second, who stood rather too close to his friend, while Captain Daunt's ball tore the ground from under the feet of Mr. Connor. The efforts at adjustment were again had recourse to, but with as little success as before, the word was given the third time, when Mr. Connor's ball entered the centre of Captain Daunt's forehead, and killed him on the spot. Thus terminated a trifling difference between two friends. The parties instantly left the ground. Captain Daunt's body was put into a chaise, and brought into this city at nine o'clock in the morning, where it remained until an early hour this morning, when it was removed to his residence in the West. He has been only recently married to a highly respectable and amiable young lady (Miss Gumbleton), who is near her confinement. On the whole, it is one of the most tragical circumstances that has occurred in this country for some time.

We understand a committee is formed for conducting the funeral of the late celebrated Baron Carl Maria Von Weber, and that it is intended to perform a "Requiem" over the body in one of the Roman Catholic Chapels, for which our principal vocalists and instrumentalists have volunteered their services.—The funeral is fixed for Friday the 16th instant.

GENERAL ELECTION.

MEMBERS RETURNED TO SERVE IN PARLIAMENT.

Bletchingly—Wm. Russell, and C. Tennison, Esqrs.

Borough of Horsham—Robert Hurst, Esq.; and the Hon. Henry Fox.

SOUTHWARK.

This election commenced Wednesday morning. Before ten o'clock the area in front of the hustings was completely filled. A little after ten the respective candidates arrived in carriages and four, decorated with rihands. They were accompanied by their friends, with banners flying, and all the other insignia of a contested election. Mr. Calvert and Sir Robert Wilson were enthusiastically greeted. Mr. Polhill's reception was not so flattering. About this time a couple of bearers of placards, containing inscriptions in favour of Mr. Polhill, had the temerity to advance, and take their station in the midst of the mob, but they had scarcely done so before they were obliged to strike their colours; or, rather, their boards were wrenched out of their hands and shivered into a thousand pieces, and they may thank their stars that their heads did not share the same fate. At twenty minutes after ten the High Bailiff mounted the hustings, and in a short speech opened the business of the meeting, and expressed his determination to put down any attempt to create confusion or disturbance, and hoped that in so doing, if there should be necessity, he should meet with the co-operation of the respectable part of the assembly.

A show of hands was then required by the High Bailiff, which was declared by him to be in favour of Sir Robert Wilson and Mr. Calvert. A poll having been demanded on behalf of Mr. Polhill, the High Bailiff directed that the same should commence at two o'clock.

Close of the poll yesterday:—

Calvert, 1611; Wilson, 1521; Polhill, 1120.

CITY OF LONDON ELECTION.

Friday being appointed for the Common Hall of the Livery of London, to elect the members for the representation of the city, at an early hour every avenue leading to the Guildhall was thronged by crowds, all anxious and pressing for admission into the Hall; and at the same time the streets were paraded by persons carrying banners, upon which were displayed in large letters, various devices and inscriptions relating to the candidates.

The precept issued, appointed the hour of meeting at twelve o'clock, and upon the Hall being opened, the first rush filled it in every part; and, from the great pressure, considerable uneasiness prevailed, and several of the enclosures appointed for poll clerks, &c. were carried by storm, although the marshalmen and assistants were by no means sparing of attempts at resistance. In the same way, the hustings was thronged, almost to the exclusion of the members of the corporation. The galleries were filled by elegantly dressed ladies, who displayed bouquets, flowers, and ribands of the colours chosen by the candidates. It is impossible to describe the confusion and uproar that prevailed, for above an hour, but upon the appearance of the Lord Mayor, and civic authorities, the livery became somewhat appeased.

At a quarter past one o'clock, the Lord Mayor appeared on the hustings, and was received with tumultuous cheering. He bowed and retired to his chair.

Mr. Alderman Wood next presented himself, and his reception was very favourable indeed.

Mr. Alderman Thompson was received with much applause.

The reception of Mr. Alderman Waithman was tumultuously favourable.

The Aldermen wore their collars and civic robes.

Mr. Ward presented himself to the notice of the livery. He was attired in a full court dress; he bowed, and was received with great cheering.

The Secondary then read the order for calling the Common Hall, and the Town Clerk delivered the precept in the usual form.

The Sheriffs received the oaths, and the forms being gone through,

The Deputy Recorder announced to the livery the purpose for which they had assembled.

The preliminary arrangements occupied the Court until past two o'clock, when the nomination commenced.

The Lord Mayor was put first, and his Lordship's name was followed by those of Mr. Alderman Wood, Mr. Alderman Waithman, Mr. Alderman Thompson, Mr. Ward, and Mr. Alderman Garratt.

State of the Poll yesterday—

Lord Mayor, 700; Wood, 822; Waithman, 857; Garratt, 286; Thompson, 992; Ward, 729.

WESTMINSTER ELECTION.

Friday, at twelve o'clock, Covent-garden market presented a very animated scene, the High Bailiff, Arthur Morris, Esq. having appointed it for the election of members for Westminster.

At that hour Sir Francis Burdett and Mr. Hobhouse, with their committee, proceeded from the Rainbow Tavern, to the hustings in the front of the church.

The usual forms having been concluded,

The High Bailiff addressed the electors, and said he had called them together for the purpose of electing two members for the city of Westminster, and, he trusted that by their orderly conduct his object would be facilitated. He said the names of two gentlemen would be proposed to their notice.

Sir Francis Burdett and Mr. Hobhouse were then nominated, without opposition.

Sir Francis Burdett, as soon as the cheering had subsided, addressed the electors at very great length, and dwelt upon those principles which he had always acted upon in Parliament, and from which he never had, in any way, deviated. He alluded to the effort made by a few persons to endeavour to excite an opposition, but the attempt had recoiled upon themselves with infinite disgrace and mortification.

The Hon. Baronet's speech was received with great cheering.

Mr. Hobhouse then addressed the electors with great animation, and the election having fallen upon them by the show of hands, thanks were voted to the High Bailiff, and the meeting dispersed.

YORKSHIRE ELECTION.

From the Leeds Intelligencer.

It was announced by bills through the town on Monday evening, that Lord Milton and Mr. Marshall's friends would assemble at the Hotel early this morning, and proceed at eight o'clock to the Mixed Cloth Hall. Half-past eight o'clock was the hour appointed for Mr. Wilson and Mr. Duncombe, with their friends, also to commence canvassing the Halls. At the latter hour, a considerable number of gentlemen had assembled in the great room of the hotel, and shortly after the mayor entered, Mr. Wilson leaning on one arm and Mr. Duncombe on the other. The principal gentlemen present were then introduced to the two candidates by our chief magistrate, and some time elapsed in mutual congratulations. Just as the party were about to depart, a party of Protestant friends who had canvassed the village of Armley, near this town, entered the room, and exhibited the result of their inquiry. The numbers were—For

Mr. Wilson.....89	Mr. Marshal.....8
Mr. Duncombe.....44	Lord Milton.....3

The intelligence was received with the joy it was calculated to inspire, and in a few minutes a procession of about 150 gentlemen of the first consequence left the hotel, and proceeded to the Mixed Cloth Hall. Loud and hearty cheers were set up as they started, and on passing through the streets the gratulations of the people were frequent and enthusiastic. Each gentleman, we should here mention, bore in the front of his hat a large blue card, with the following inscription:—

"Protestant Cause.—Wilson and Duncombe."

As soon as they reached the Cloth Hall the procession turned to the right, and went along the passages between the cloth stands. The reception here was truly cordial, and the remarks exceedingly flattering and inspiring. The clothiers almost uniformly exclaimed—"We're true blue, gentlemen: all we want is trade!!"

During Mr. Wilson's and Mr. Duncombe's progress through the Hall, at every few yards the cheers were fervid and continued. "Blue for ever." "Success to Wilson and Duncombe," broke forth incessantly; and the cards distributed, were ardently seized and placed in the hats of the Clothiers. As the procession moved forward, it was constantly observed—"This is a much greater show than the other"—meaning that the procession was larger and more respectable than that of the Yellows which had preceded; and without the least prejudice or exaggeration, we can positively affirm such was the fact.

York.—This city will, it appears, be strongly contested. Mr. Wyvill, one of the present members, entered the city on Thursday se'nnight, preceded by a band of music, banners, &c. He was received by the freemen in the most enthusiastic manner. In addressing them from the window of Etridge's Hotel, he said it was gratifying to find that the trust which had been confided to him in 1820 had not been abused, and pledged himself to continues to vote, should he be re-elected, for those measures which were most conducive to the public welfare, and the civil and religious liberty of the people.

Lincoln.—W. Rudgard, Esq., of the city of Lincoln, waited on Thursday se'nnight on Mr. Corbett, at his residence in Pall-Mall, to solicit that gentleman to offer himself a candidate for the representation of Lincoln in the ensuing Parliament. The Hon. Gentleman set off from his residence, accompanied by Mr. C. Tennison, late member for Grimsby, and Col. Jervis, and was expected to arrive by nine o'clock on Tuesday morning, where preparations on an extensive scale were making for his reception by the independent electors of that city. The other candidates are Col. Sibthorpe and Mr. Fazakerly. There ir no doubt of Col. Sibthorpe'i return.

Somerset.—Sir T. Tethbridge, attended by his family and Mr. Popham, arrived at Taunton on Monday night. Some of his friends in that town, accompanied by the military band, were going out to meet him; but as they were preparing to start, he drove up to the Castle Inn, at a rapid rate; the horses, being decorated with blue ribands, and the baronet in an open carriage, with Mr. Popham.

Dover.—The approaching election creates much interest and bustle. We have four candidates in the field, and, from the weight of the representative parties, it appears clear they will all stand the poll. The return of Mr. Bootle Wilbraham appears beyond a doubt. A very severe contest for the second seat may be looked for hetween Mr. Butterworth, Mr. Poulett Thomson, and Mr. Halcomb, and the respective parties seem very sanguine and very zealous.

Ipswich.—The enthusiastic reception of Mackinnon and Dundas, the candidates in the true-blue interest, at Ipswich, on Tuesday last, must have been most gratifying to their feelings. After proceeding through the town, Messrs. Mackinnon and Dundas respectively addressed the numerous assembly, in their interest, from a balcony, on the Cornhill, and their appearance was again greeted with the utmost enthusiasm. On the following day the candidates proceeded on their canvass, and met with the most gratifying success.

Bristol.—Meeting for Mr. Protheroe.—A very numerous meeting of the friends of Edward Protheroe, Esq. was held at the Rummer Tavern. The room was crowded to excess, and the heat was most oppressive. Mr. James Lyon was called to the chair. The Chairman opened the meeting by observing that there was no necessity for enlarging on the merits of the gentleman whom they had met to support: his conduct while in Parliament had entitled him to the confidence of his fellow-citizens; and I am sure, said Mr. Lyon, that I speak in accordance with the feelings of the meeting, when I utter the sentiments of my own breast, that Edward Protheroe, Esq. is the fittest person to be our representative in Parliament.—(Loud cheers; three times three for Mr. Protheroe.) Resolutions were then passed amidst the acclamations of the meeting.

Barnstaple.—We understand that Mr. Nolan, at the request of a considerable body of the electors, is gone down to Barnstaple, to contest it with the other two candidates, Mr. Alexander and Mr. Hodgson. This horough is, perhaps, indebted to Mr. Nolan for the preservation of its right to return members, he having gratuitously officiated as counsel against the bill for its disfranchisement in the House of Lords.

Colchester (Friday.)—The election for this borough takes place this day. The only candidates are, Sir G. H. Smyth, Bart. and Mr. D. W. Harvey; and there is no prospect of any other. Proceedings will commence early. Sir Henry Smyth will be nominated by T. G. Bramston, Esq.—Chelmsford Chronicle.

Denbigh, June 5.—Vigorous preparations continue to be made in these boroughs (Denbigh, Ruthin, and Holt), for the approaching contest, which is likely to be one of the most severe, as it is in its character one of the most singular, in the annals of electioneering. Vast sums have already been expended on both sides. The writ is expected to arrive by to-morrow's post, and the election will probably open, for it will be contested to the last extremity, on the Monday or Tuesday following. The discussion respecting the alleged minority of Mr. Biddulph, one of the candidates, will not be the least curious feature in this election. It is asserted on the one part, that he will want some three or four days of completing his minority on the latest possible day on which the election can take place; while it is contended on the other, that he will have fully attained his majority on that day. Evidence will no doubt be tendered on each side, and if the lawyers (of whom there are three engaged on the Biddulph side, at 300l. each) only manage to speak cleverly against time, the the two or three days may thus be gained, if they be really wanting. It is worthy of remark that the Under-Sheriff is said to be retained on Mr. West's side, so that it is not expected that he will keep the writ one hour longer than is necessary.

Gloucester.—The election commences on Friday next, when the late members, R. B. Cooper, Esq. and Colonel Webb will again be put in nomination. From the anxious efforts that have been made by many of the Freemen to induce John Philpotts, Esq. to come forward as a candidate for the representation of the city, it is supposed that gentleman will also be nominated; in which case it is certain that Captain Berkeley will likewise be proposed. On Tuesday the Captain canvassed the freemen of Gloucester resident in Cheltenham, soliciting their votes for Colonel Webb, should he decline presenting himself to their notice on the hustings; and the offers of support voluntarily tendered to Captain Berkeley, should he personally require it, must have been most gratifying to his feelings.—Cheltenham Chronicle.

Hertford City.—The election is fixed to commence on Tuesday next, when the contest promises to be a "combat of giants." The candidates are the late representatives, Lord Eastnor, R. Blakemore, Esq., and E. B. Clive, Esq.

Lancashire.—We understand the election is fixed to take place on Friday the 16th instant, at Lancaster. Both our late Members intend again to offer themselves as candidates. No opposition seems to be seriously intended, Col. Wilson, of Dallam Tower, having disclaimed all idea of offering himself. It is, however, rumoured, that the Lowther party are so incensed at Lord Stanley having signed the Requisition to Mr. Brougham to become a candidate for Westmorland, that they are determined to nominate some one for this county, in opposition to the Noble Lord.—Blackburn Mail.

Norwich.—On Monday last Mr. Jonathan Peel made his entrance into this city a candidate in the Tory interest, attended by a party of horsemen, and a body of persons on foot, Colonel Harvey, Mr. Francis, Mr. Crisp Brown, and others; but his reception by the populace was far from encouraging. Some of the weavers have sent a requisition to J. Morrison, Esq. of the firm of Todd and Co. of London, calling upon him to come forward and protect their civil and political rights, as the friend of Mr. Hume, and as a gentleman to whom they are more indebted than to any other individual in the world, half the looms now at work being kept so by the demands of his commercial friends.

Nottingham.—A third candidate has been proposed for this town, in the person of John Smith, Esq. of the family of Messrs. Wrights, bankers, of Nottingham, who has come forward on the high party, or blue interest, on the day of nomination. So certain were the other candidates, Joseph Birch, Esq. and Lord Rancliffe, that there would be no contest, that they had actually completed the preparations for their chairing. The state of the poll at the close of the first day was as follows:—Wright, 39; Birch, 54; Rancliffe, 55. The election proceeds with spirit.

Queenborough, Thersday night.—A strong contest is expected for this borough. The candidates are, Lord Downes, Lord Frederick Bentinck, and John Chapel, Esq. The latter gentleman made his entry this evening amidst the acclamations of the electors. This gentleman has come forward at the solicitation of a large body of the freemen, in order to redeem them from what they consider acts of oppression by the local authorities of the borough. His principles are in unison with those of his Majesty's Government, and his friends are confident of his success. Lords Downes and Bentinck are supported by the influence of the Board of Ordnance. The poll commences on Saturday Morning.

Somersetshire.—The nomination day for this county is fixed by the sheriff for Wednesday next, the 14th, and the election is to take place at Ilchester, on Monday, the 19th instant. It has been suggested by a great number of the most respectable electors of the county, that, from the very peculiar character of the opposition with which Sir T. Lethbridge and Mr. Dickinson are threatened, the proper course for them to pursue would be, immediately after their nomination, to abstain from personal collision with their opponent, and to leave the fate of the representation of the county entirely to the good sense of the freeholders, as the best compliment which could be paid to them. Whether the late members will adopt this course, we have not yet been informed. Mr. H. Hunt arrived at Wells on Saturday last in his barouche, accompanied by Mr. Oliver Hayward, and some other persons. On being refused admission at the Christopher Inn (the Somerset Hotel,) Mr. Hunt threatened legal proceedings against Mr. Meade, the landlord. Mr. H. and his party, were subsequently entertained at the Swan Inn.—Taunton Courier.

Wallingford.—There will be a smart contest here. Colonel Hughes and Colonel Roberts stand on the Whig interest, which is every where declining. Dr. Dodson, a friend to the general policy of ministers, though by no means what is called a "thick and thin man," declares his opposition to the Catholic claims, and his inclination towards the abolition of slavery; on these two points he carries with him a large number of the electors.

Wells.—The election takes place on Friday. Of the return of Messrs. Tudway and Taylor, the old members, there does not appear the least doubt.

Warwick Election.—Major-General Sir Charles Greville, and John Tomes, Esq., the late members for Warwick, began to canvass that borough on Monday last. The nomination will take place on Friday, and, as there will be no opposition, the election and chairing will be on the same day.—Birmingham Chronicle.

IRELAND.

Affairs remain in statu quo in the county of Dublin. It is said, however, that Mr. Hamilton's friends continue their desire to bring him forward.

A new candidate for the city has appeared, Mr. Haig, the eminent distiller. He relies chiefly on his mercantile knowledge and connexions.

The contest for the county of Limerick excites considerable interest. Mr. Lloyd, the new candidate, was, during many years, on most intimate and friendly terms with the Chief Baron, whose son he now opposes. The O'Grady's property and influence in the county, however, are very considerable. Mr. Lloyd held the office of assistant barrister there until very lately, when he resigned it, preparatory, it was said, to this election.

We are authorized to state, that the report of Signor Velluti's having sold his benefit to Mr. Ebers is totally unfounded; and that the rumour entirely originated with some ill-disposed people, whose object was to prejudice the public against this celebrated singer. Signor Velluti's Benefit takes place at the King's Theatre on Thursday next, on which night he will appear in Rossini's beautiful Opera of "Ouveland in Palmira," never yet performed in this country.

A correspondent informs us that Madame Pasta and Mr. Sapio are at present entertaining the inhabitants of Oxford with their splendid talents. At Tuesday's Concert, the duets of Armida and Moze between these celebrated singers; Di Tanti Palpiti, by Madame Pasta, and Kelvin Grove, by Mr. Sapio, were rapturously encored. A new composition on Marco Botzaris (the Greek Patriot) sung by Mr. Sapio, was enthusiastically received; and the Blue Bonnets, by him, was encored and unanimously called for, with Madame Pasta's Di Tanti for Wednesday's Concert.

In the present times, it is a great desideratum to get any easy seat to rest, and after the fatigues of the day, no place in London is better adapted for this purpose than at John Ingram and Son's cheap chair-manufactory, No. 29, City-road, near Finsbury-square, where can be had, Japaned rush-seat chamber-chairs, warranted finished in best Varnish, all patterns, all colours, and all the same price of 3s, 6d. per chair, Windsor, Impregnated Rose-wood, and all other Chairs, Flower-stands, Garden and Rustic Seats at the same low prices.—N. B. Observe the sign of the Rustic House.

Improvements.—The removal of Carlton-house is at length fully determined upon. The following plan of the proposed alterations has received the Royal assent:—The present site of the building will be converted into an opening nearly the size of Waterloo-place, of which it will form a continuation, presenting, on the whole, an area of most imposing dimensions. On each side, foot-paths will lead into the Park, but there will be no carriage-road. In the centre of the quadrangle an obelisk will be erected, and along the end, nearest the Park, there will be a terrace. At its angles there will be buildings, those nearest to Pall-mall, for the United Service and Athenæum Clubs, and the others for the use of the nobility. Between these buildings the sides of the quadrangle will open on the palace gardens, which will remain. The view of the Abbey, Horse Guards, Parks, &c. from Waterloo-place, will be magnificent. The alterations will, it is expected, be completed by the autumn of 1827.

The Race Course, the Promenade, crowded Assemblies, Equatic Excursions in summer weather, produces unpleasant sensations, and disorganise the beauty of the female complexion. As a protector from such innovation, the Ladies are especially recommended Rowland's Kalydor, of mild and innocent properties, which immediately allays the smarting irritability of the skin, producing a delightful and pleasing coolness, truly comfortable and refreshing; it also removes Freckles, Pimples, Spots, ane all cutaneous Eruptions; imparts a luxuriant and matchless beauty to the complexion; affords soothing relief to Ladies nursing their offspring. To Gentlemen after shaving, it allays the irritation and smarting pain, and renders the skin smooth and pleasant."

SHOCKING MURDER.

Wednesday afternoon, at four o'clock, a coroner's inquest was held at the sign of the Black Horse, in Queen-street, Seven Dials, before Mr. Stirling, the coroner for the county of Middlesex, on the body of Hannah Browne, an infant only three years of age, who came by her death in the following dreadful manner:—

Thomas Price deposed—I am a cabinet-maker, and reside at No. 20, Queen-street, Seven Dials, the same house in which the deceased child and her father lived. I knew the deceased very well; she was the illegitimate child of Charles Browne, who keeps a coal-shed in the lower part of the house. She would have been, as I understood, three years of age next October. I saw the child last, as well as I recollect, on Tuesday night, but I am sure I saw her on Wednesday morning, in perfect health. She was a very fine healthy child. About 10 minutes after nine o'clock this morning, I was in my own workshop, which adjoins the shop of Charles Browne. There is only a thin partition between, and I can hear almost every word spoken in Browne's shop. I heard Mrs. Ann Browne, the wife of Charles Browne, but not the mother of the deceased, coming down stairs, from the first floor, which they occupied; she was calling out to her husband, "Charles, I have done it; I have done it." I then opened my door, which looks into the passage, and saw Mrs. Browne, with her hands covered with blood, and calling out, as before, "I have done it, I have done it." Her husband asked her what she had done, had she cut her finger? but she made no other reply than, "I have done it, I have done it." I then ran up stairs, as did her husband also, and we entered nearly at the same time, a small apartment on the first floor, where the deceased child was in the habit of sleeping in a little bed by itself. Charles Browne, the father, exclaimed to me, "Oh, Price! look at my child! look at my baby!" I then saw the deceased lying on the floor by the side of the bed, and close by a wooden box, with its head almost severed from its body, and one of its little fingers nearly cut off; and a third wound—as a stab near the collar-bone in the lower part of the neck. I then saw Charles Browne go to a sort of cistern, which was in the room for washing, and take out of it a large carving-knife stained all over with blood; by this time Mrs. Browne came up stairs and entered the apartment, still calling out, "I have done it." The husband clung round her neck, and they both sunk upon a sofa in the room, when he kissed her several times, at the same time exclaiming, "Oh, Anne, why did you do it? why did you kill my child?" but she made no reply, further than that she had done it. The fioor, and the child's bedgown and body, were saturated and covered with blood. By this time one of the beadles of the parish, who was sent for, arrived, and took the woman Mrs. Browne away with him to the parish workhouse in custody. This witness in continuation, said, that the father of the child is about 25 years of age, and his wife, Anne Browne, to whom he has been married about eight years, is about 60 years old now. She has no children by her husband. The deceased was a child that had been sworn to the husband. About eighteen months ago, Mrs. Browne persuaded him to bring the child home, rather than be paying the parish for its support. The child had remained with them ever since, and Mrs. Browne seemed doatingly fond of it. Her husband and she lived on very good terms, except occasionally a little bickering. She was always a very steady, sedate, sober woman, never drank, or appeared intoxicated.

Coroner—Did you ever perceive any symptoms of derangement about her.

Witness—Never the slightest: quite the contrary. She was a very sensible woman; after this act she seemed quite wild, but she soon became perfectly calm. The husband tore his hair, and seemed quite distracted, when he saw the child dead. To another question, the witness said, he could not tell whether or not the child was warm when he first saw it dead, for he did not feel it; he was so horror-struck that he could not go near it.

The next witness was George Pond, one of the beadles of St. Giles's parish, who deposed that he was called in to the house, No. 20, Queen-street, Seven Dials, about a quarter past nine o'clock that morning, to take charge of a woman, who was said to have committed murder. On entering the first room on the first floor, he saw Mrs. Browne sitting on a sofa, and her husband and another man holding her; the deceased child was then lying dead, with its throat cut from ear to ear.

The next witness was Mr. Andrew Tweedle, surgeon to the Infirmary of St. Giles's parish, who deposed that he called in that morning to see the deceased child; he found it quite dead, its throat cut from ear to ear, and the carotid artery completely divided; the child had another slight cut below the longer gash, and a third, apparently a stab from a knife, still lower down on the neck, near the collar-bone; the child seemed to have struggled a little, and put up its hand to guard itself, for one of its fingers was nearly cut off. The deceased must have died instantly.

Another surgeon gave similar testimony to the last witness.

Samuel Furzman, roundhouse-keeper, and constable of St. Giles's parish, deposed, that he went, in consequence of information he received of a murder having been committed that morning, to the house, 20, in Queen-street, and there saw the deceased lying dead on a table; he then proceeded to the parish workhouse, where he saw Mrs. Anne Browne; she appeared then quite deranged, from her look and manner; he understood that a strait waistcoat was about to be put on her, but she soon became calmer; and in about two hours after, when he was conveying her to Marlborough-street police-office, she was quite calm and collected; she told him, while conveying her along in the coach, that she knew not what urged her to commit the act; she saw the child asleep in bed, and, without knowing what she was doing at the time, she turned it round on the side of the bed, and taking up a knife, she believed a carving-knife, that lay on the table, she cut the poor child's head off, quite unconscious of what she did at the time. Witness asked her what could have been in her mind to urge her to commit so shocking a deed? She said she could not tell; there was one thing, she said, preyed a great deal on her mind, which was, that a woman named Martha Evaline, by whom her husband had the last illegitimate child, was constantly coming to the house, creating a riot and mob, and insulting her whenever she saw her; and a neighbour urged this woman on to do so.

The knife was now produced to the jury; it is a large carving-knife, nearly new, very sharp-edged and pointed, about 15 inches long, and having a black handle; the blade about 10 inches long, was quite stained with blood. The sight of this frightful weapon shocked every one present.

The jury now proceeded across the street to the house, where the child lay dead, nearly opposite, to take a view of the body, which presented a most appalling spectacle, and after returning to the jury-room,

The Coroner addressed a few words to them, expressing his regret that there appeared nothing to show that the woman was in a deranged state of mind at the time of committing the horrid deed, or previously; for it was scarcely to be conceived how any human being could perpetrate such an act in a sane state of mind. As the case stood, however, it appeared to be a foul murder. The woman gave a systematic detail of the manner in which she perpetrated the act, and although she was immediately after in a state of agitation—and what being on earth must not, after such a deed?—yet she soon returned to her habitual calmness. It would, however, be for the jury to consider the case, and return their verdict.

The jury consulted for a few minutes, and returned a verdict of "Wilful murder against Anne Browne," and the Coroner issued his warrant for her committal to Newgate.

NOTICES TO CORRESPONDENTS.

Christopher Catgut is referred, for one of his communications, to our Theatrical department—the point of his other may be better told at a better time. We shall always be glad to hear from him, though we may not at all times find him a corner.

Paul Pry's "intrusion" shall be investigated.

Our Worcester Correspondent is referred to a Duet, lately sung by Lord Deerhurst and the electors, in another part of our Paper. They say his Lordship has shewn the "white feather in his tail"—my Lord's friends say, "so much the better, because it could be no feather in his cap to represent them for the future."

It is painful to us to refuse the wishes of such an assiduous correspondent as W. I.—but the statement about Wakefield is not at all interesting, and moreover, its insertion would occupy a space that at this particular crisis we really cannot afford.

We have received Colonel Leicester Stanhope's circular in behalf of Mr. Buckingham, but have no opportunity of introducing its enclosures; besides, we are of opinion that it is a subject with which the public have nothing to do, and care nothing about. Mr. B.'s case cannot be in better hands than those of the gentlemen who are now figuring away in his behalf.

"Squib, from the Borough," has sent us the following, which nothing but an electioneering moment could justify our inserting, because there is a much better joke on the same subject in No. 3 of this day's "Squibs."

The Papists of Southwark now swagger and swell,
As Polhill's "look out" does not look very well?
But if to their minds they the case would recall,
They must surely admit he dont poll ill at all!

Zeno apprizes us that Adonis Forrester is expecting a seat; but as he does not mention for what place, we presume it is that which Lane Fox once so ably filled, but has lately vacated.

The joint-stock communication of Ball Hughes and Tom Railes has been received, and will be commented upon in time and place, as affording us an excellent opportunity for introducing some anecdotes with which we have not yet made the public acquainted.

It is unnecessary to say more of the owners of the horse panic than to express our astonishment that their conduct did not become the subject of investigation before the Jockey Club, in which case a denouement of a very extraordinary and implicated character would have been fully developed.

THE AGE.

LONDON, June 11.

We are much concerned to have to announce the death of the Empress Elizabeth, wife to the late Autocrat of Russia, which occurred at Belew on the 4th (16th) of last month, on her journey from Taganrok to Kaluga. It has been hinted, and in part believed, that this circumstance might delay the coronation of the Emperor Nicholas; but, from information received, on which we are disposed to place a reliance, we think that such will not be the case The following particulars connected with the death of the Empress are from a Frankfort paper of the 4th instant:—

"Frankfort, June 2.—The melancholy news of the death of her Majesty the Empress Dowager Elizabeth of Russia, was received here yesterday evening. The last accounts of the health of her Majesty did not give reason to apprehend such a result. According to letters which her Royal Highness the Margravine Amelia of Baden received from her august daughter, she had arrived on the 8th May, at Karlow, the third station from Taganrok. The taking leave of that place, the grave of her earthly happiness, must doubtless have renewed all the feelings of grief and profound affliction, and could not fail severely to affect her health, which, however, did not appear to have suffered more than might have been expected on the occasion.

"Her Majesty's journey, favoured by the finest weather, was performed without any untoward occurrence, and she every where received numerous proofs of the most affectionate attention and respect."

THE ELECTIONS.

The Roman Catholics, those pious and patient sufferers under the intolerable tyranny of a British Constitution—those innocent sheep, torn at its pleasure by the wolf of Protestantism—those martyrs of an unassuming and uncomplaining faith, under the lash and torch of the establishment, are beginning, after all, to try whether they cannot have a little hand in the elections. In this, however, they feel themselves authorized to disclaim all common motives. Profit and partizanship may tempt some men; pride, and the love of the popular shout, may seduce others; the hope of keeping out of the King's Bench, or getting on that seat of epicurean ease and supremacy, the Treasury bench, may dazzle a third set of sinners and Protestants, but the Roman Catholics come forward pure from all motives beneath their saintly callings. Place, revenue, rank, the vulgar baits of this nether world, are below the appetite of those "pilgrims on earth;" their object is the simple liberty of exercising their own gentle and scriptural faith unmolested and unstigmatized; to save their unworldly spirits from the cruel exacerbations of a scoffing public, and to transmit in peace to their posterity the mild inheritance of the religion of our general and holy religion.

Now, for the fact. At this moment every means at once of Jesuitical intrigue and open influence are in full work in England and Ireland; but the operation is adroitly divided according to the nature of the case. In Ireland the rabble are the masters of the elections, and the rabble are Popish---Popish to the true Romish standard of ignorance, violence, and bitter scorn of all other faiths. There, then, the spirit of papistry, feeling itself irresistible, is too generous to wear a disguise, and marches straight forward, scattering the old denunciations of its church and politics in the face of day. We have before us a succession of paragraphs and preambles of this open-faced faction, declaring that no man shall be returned but under a pledge to "emancipation!" calling on the priests to send their flocks to the hustings, and daringly proclaiming the overthrow of every interest that presumes to lift its head upon the side of the established religion of the empire.

We find such exhortations as these:—"Upon the issue of the approaching election the fate of the Catholic Question may hang. It is particularly incumbent on the part of the Catholic clergy, from whom so much is expected, who can render such effectual services, to bestir themselves in their respective parishes, and within the spheres of their immediate influence, in behalf of the candidate who has pledged himself to the public cause."

"They ought to act, each in his county, as if the success of the great measure for which we are all struggling, depended on his individual exertions, The object should be to return as many new friends to emancipation as possible."

"Our question in all such cases is, will the Catholic gain a vote in the House of Commons by a change of men?"

"We shall not be told, we suppose, at this time of day, that it is not becoming, forsooth, for the Catholic clergy to interfere in elections!" And why not, we would beg leave to ask? Is it not their duty to promote the temporal as well as the spiritual good of their people? Are they not citizens as well as clergymen?

"Why should not the Catholic clergymen do as much for their country, as the Protestant clergymen for their ascendancy?"

"They are, with respect to influence, infinitely above the clergy of the Established Church; and why should they not? we ask it again and again, exert that influence, that legitimate and well-earned influence, on the conduct of their flocks!

"The Catholic clergy will do their duty in the present crisis. They will, one and all, when an occasion calls for it, imitate the conduct of the priests of Waterford. It will be seen that the Catholic meeting yesterday have taken up this principle, and that it will be formally recommended to the Catholics."

Such is the openness of Popery, when there is nothing to be got by dissimulation. According to this Irish code, a Popish priest has something better to do in the world than preach from his pulpit, or attend to the private decencies of his people.—No, his duty stretches to their temporals, and he is good for nothing unless he gives them practical lessons in politics, manœuvres them in the "Rights of Papists," thrusts a candidate of his own choice upon them, and carries the hustings' crucifix in hand. Let those who know the fierce, intolerant, and ungrateful conduct of the priests of Waterford to the family of the Beresfords, understand the model on which the politics of the country priesthood are formed, and to be formed,—and this formation authenticated by a statute of their Mock Parliament in Dublin!

Are not our readers now convinced of the true spirit of these proceedings. In Ireland the Papist boldly demands to exercise an influence over the choice of representatives, through the priest—he summons his faith from its chapel into the field, and in the very breath that he protests against the cruel Protestant assumption of the Pope's spiritual and temporal dominion being practically inseparable, he gives its demonstration, by summoning the priest to mingle in party politics, and use the cross and the breviary to enlist the peasant in the cause of gross and worldly ambition. What would be said of the Protestant clergyman, drawing up his flock, rank and file, for the election-booth!

In England the "Catholic Committee" have just put forth an address, from which we should not conceive that they were the same people. Such exquisite moderation, such horror at any thing like the influence of the Pope in foreign countries; such infinite and innocent surprise, that any human being should have conceived the idea that Popery had a particle of persecution in its nature! To be sure, they will not take it upon them to say, that some excesses have not been committed by Catholic Sovereigns; they had, indeed, heard of such things occasionally; but with those the Pope, the Vicar of God, and Representative and Viceroy of Christ on Earth! never had any thing to do. So help them Heaven!

And are we, in the nineteenth century, to be gulled by such nonsense? or can we believe that the scribes who pen it, do not know that they are telling the most notorious untruths? or can we trust those with the power of breaking down the Constitution, who think that we are to be gulled by such things. Let the Papist once within the walls of Parliament, and he will move the world to fix himself and unfix all else; what will be to him political integrity, British feeling, or national independence, when that potential Spirit which assumes to hold the keys of Heaven and Hell, shall command him to obey? He is at this hour the slave of Rome, will his allegiance be suffered to sleep, when the heart of the great Champion of Freedom and Christianity is laid open to his blow?

We have not now time to advert to the scribblings of that sneering and pious gentleman, who does the banter of the Edinburgh Review. If the Reverend Sydney Smith should know any thing of him, he ought in friendliness to let him know that an eye is upon him. A benefice from the Whigs, who, to give the devil his due, take care of their menials, may console a fleering and feebly-principled mind for the loss of professional respect, or the association with the Broughams and Humes, and other dregs of a decrepit and disgraced faction. But if the Reverend Scribbler and jokee live, we promise him, that he shall learn. As a commencement of our lesson, we communicate to him the following anecdote, which must of course be new to our reverend pupil:—

Some years ago, before Lord Holland's table had sunk into the menagerie affair that it is, an illustrious Personage one day honoured him with his company. My Lord Holland is notoriously one of the best-natured men alive, and one of the dullest, till the cloth has been a certain time removed. To fill up the interval, the Merry Andrew of the Edinburgh Review, who was in the habit of dining out considerably on such terms, was brought to the table; but to his own astonishment, and Lord Holland's infinite discomfiture, a spell was on him in the presence of the illustrious stranger: his staunchest stories broke down under him, and after several diastrous trials, he was pronounced a failure!

In despair he turned to Politics, and gave a diatribe out of the forthcoming number of the Review, with much fluency; when, by the surprise and embarras of the table, he at length discovered that his recitation had been on the faults of Courts and Kings. But now there was no retracting, and he proceeded to recite, that, "to the follies and vices of princes, might, in most cases, be attributed the crimes of their people!" mentioning as one instance that of the Duc D'Orleans. The illustrious guest was the only person unembarrassed. He listened with his habitual politeness, and, at the close, coolly observed, that the irregularities of princes very frequently arose from the influence of those (still more irregular) by whom they were surrounded, and in many cases, by the influence of intriguing, political members of the church!" For instance (said he), if there had been no Cardinal Du Bois, there would have been no Duc D'Orleans!"

The consternation of the Reverend Jester was indescribable, and is the subject of one of Lord Holland's best and most favourite stories to this hour.

A gentleman observed to Sir William Curtis yesterday, that he thought Mr. Polhill, the tobacconist, would beat Mr. Wilson in the long-run—upon which the Baronet remarked, "that he would be more likely to be at him in the short-cut."

The contests for a seat in the ensuing Parliament have begun in many quarters, and in some are marked with a peculiarity that requires some notice at our hands. The representation of the most important part of the Empire is now contended for in two places, has been decided upon in one, and will be in the other in a few days—we allude of course to Westminster, Middlesex, London, and Southwark. To the eternal disgrace of those in whose hands is placed the elective franchise for the first-named of these places, Sir Francis Burdett and Mr. Hobhouse have been returned, without opposition; and looking at the set of rascallions who "operated" on the occasion, we find a difficulty in determining which honour is the most distinguished—that of representing such constituents, or being such constituents to be represented. It ceases, perhaps, to be a matter of surprise, that no man of independence, integrity, rank, or learning, should aspire to such a glory, when he reflects that if purchased, it must be at the risk of life, from the fury of a horde of ruffians, invariably hired to effect by blows, what their employers cannot effect by language, for the situation of Sir Murray Maxwell, in a former instance, can never be forgotten, and must operate against the probability of a gentleman ever thinking of a contest with bravoes -- and, what is of still more to the point, of his ever desiring to represent them. The result has proved, that no one of any refinement or pride would suffer himself to be so degraded as to accept a seat in the Senate at the hands of such people as De Vear, Purse, Lydon, and their associates—this fellowship with butchers, braziers, and itinerant tinkers, is the consummation of all human degeneracy.

We are bound to renew our remonstrances of last week on the miserable situation of Middlesex, and to invoke that spirit of respectability and high-mindedness, which must inspire so many of our readers, with a view of inducing some one among them to redeem the consequence of this county. Opportunity is now fitting, success has resolved itself into a certainty, and the times, so out of joint, call loudly for a reform in the representation of this important spot. A candidate may be doubly assured of victory, even if he entered upon a contest—for Mr. Byng is too penurious and superannuated to venture on the struggle, and the young Bung has not a shilling to spend on such warfare—for every rational cause, the interests of Middlesex should be otherwise supported.

We had imagined it difficult to select a more conspicuous assemblage of felons than the Westminster party, but the blackguardisms of the Borough of Southwark surpass them in every qualification. The stultiloquence of Mr. Wilson is however so diverting, that we must not altogether find fault with the promoters of its display, but be satisfied that while they signalise themselves to such a vast extent, they afford an opportunity to their illustrious Chief of rendering himself even more distinguished than they are. Any one not particularly well versed in military tactics, or with the deeds of modern heroes who have become celebrated by their knowledge of them, would readily believe, to hear and peruse Wilson's speeches, that he was the most consummate warrior of the day. "Guns, trumpets, blunderbusses, drums, and thunder," are apparently to him the most delightful music. He talks of Grecian phalanxes and Roman cohorts, as if he had existed in their existence, and directed all their victories; and all the military renown of departed and present days, it nothing compared to his narrations of it. As far as regards the ultimate issue of this struggle, we are not without our apprehensions that Mr. POLHILL, by the coalition of WILSON and CALVERT, may be defeated, though "on fair ground he would beat forty of them:" but whether or not, we can have no hesitation in giving it as our opinion, that as far as martial character goes, WILSON possesses not one iota more of even talent, courage, name, or fame, than the respected trader he has the audacity so to insult on the hustings daily. The assumption of knighthood is in itself what no man of any dignity would be guilty of, and no set of electors of the least respectability would sanction---but even that is a trifling and empty consideration, compared to the plain fact of this GREAT WARRIOR being kicked out of the British Army FOR CONDUCT UNBECOMING THE CHARACTER OF AN OFFICER! "Think of that MASTER BROOK," and then let us hear no more of this high-flown military loquaciousness!

The state of the City Poll is that which will present to every thinking mind, an assurance of the ultimate success of those whom it is essential, for the welfare of this exalted metropolis, to see so properly elevated. A few of the tools of that despicable party, of which WAITHMAN and WOOD are the champions, have naturally come forward at the onset to establish a priority at starting, with the hope of inducing some wavering defendants to flock to the "popular" banner; but we hope it is superfluous to say, that this commonly adopted ruse de guerre always fails eventually. Mr. WARD's return is certain—as WAITHMAN's is—impossible; and to establish the fact, it is only necessary for the Lord MAYOR to be fully explicit on one point, and that point is the declaration of his anti-Catholic principles, and he may then make himself as sure as the first and best of his competitors.

In an examination of some other circumstances arising out of the present Election, it is impossible to pass over the "wind-up" at Bow-street of the fraud committed on Colonel CAMAC, respecting the representation of Malmesbury. Of this officer we know nothing, and as far as the recent display of his genius goes, we are not desirous of extending the acquaintance—indeed we may quote of him the couplet that was written by a fashionable wag on the wife of his brother, who aimed at giving high parties, but was in reality unknown in society:—

> All they can say of this Mrs. Camac,
> Is—her name is the same, if spelt forward or back!

and this is all we know of Colonel CAMAC; but the fraud committed by COLLINS, late marker at a billiard-table, has been hushed up in so bare-faced a manner, either by refunding the money, or holding some threats to the soldier, that we decidedly insist on the necessity of investigating, on the opening of Parliament, the return of the members for this unpolluted and delicate borough, and we shall find ourselves woefully mistaken if a fine scene of bribery and extortion does not come to light.

The following prediction that we gave many months ago, has come to pass miraculously true:—

> At Taunton they all are so sick of their lot,
> That their cry is, "No bearing—the member we've got;
> And besides as to PEACE they are all so inclined,
> Its no wonder that Warre's not at all to their mind.

And so it is---neither BARING nor WARRE will be nominated. We have read, with considerable disgust, the detached proceedings in this town of the notorious CRESWELL family, and are bound to expatiate on the deportmen tof one of the brothers, a CLERGYMAN, taking a most active part in all the riots with which these scenes of vagabondry are usually attended—furnishing flags, parading streets, and other clerical duties. It behoves the BISHOP of Bath and Wells very rigidly to scrutinize such an excess of outrage on the dignity and sacred character of that awful profession of which this personage styles himself a minister, and to visit the utmost extent of his power on such flagrant and fatal examples. Among other places, we find Tipperary has adopted the advice we gratuitously gave that place in one of our songs, running thus—

> If GLENGALL, whose tongue sticks at nothing, should mean
> Tipperary to stick to, and dare there be seen,
> As they had to take CAHER once before, it is plain
> They ought to "take care" how they take him again!

and this bright sample of Lordly veracity, RICHARD CAHER, Earl of GLENGALL, does not exhibit himself for the benefit of the Tipperary Electors!

Speculation is considerably afloat as to the return to Parliament of WILLIAM COBBETT, for the borough of Preston in Lancashire, and rumour goes so far as to decide on the fact. We sicken at the very thought of even such a circumstance being rumoured, and do not therefore pretend even to guess what our feelings will be, if the event should be consummated—but before it is too late to remedy such a national affliction, we seize the opportunity of calling on the electors of this place to save the credit of their country, by placing such a villanous thought out of their already degraded carcases—it will cling to them, like the plague, for ever and ever—they will be held up to present and future generations as the stumbling blocks of their nation's respectability—they cannot propose unto themselves the hope of gleaning one solitary advantage, nor can they be blind to the certainty of receiving a stain on their moral and mental character, for which their children's children, in after days, will curse their very memory. It remains, therefore, to be seen how far these potentates are desirous of maintaining any rank among the advocates and supporters of GREAT BRITAIN's internal consequence, and the promoters of its acknowledgement by the world, or whether by an act of the most pertinacious folly, nay, positive madness, they will level their characters below the appreciation of brutes.

For the state of all polls now open—for the list of the new members returned up to last night—and all intelligence connected with the GENERAL ELECTION—we refer the reader to our other columns.

Lord ALVANLEY was hunting some time since, and by his LORDSHIP's side was GUNTER, the pastry cook, on a very restive horse, which induced him to observe to the Peer, that his horse was so hot, he did not know what to do with him—to which Lord ALVANLEY, who is one of the greatest wags on town, said, "The best thing you can do with him, Mr. GUNTER, is to take him home, and ice him."

ELECTIONEERING SOUIB, No. 2.

DUET

Between the Electors of Worcester and LORD DEERHURST.

Elec. Time was the mighty COCK of Croome
Could wave on high its brilliant plume
In either calm or gale;
But now so fallen, shorn, undone,
The many are reduced to one
WHITE FEATHER in its tail!

LORD of the dunghill! 'tis thy lot
To be so fixed upon one spot,
That "dunghill" thou hast struck;
Yet cock-like, should'st thou chance to crow,
We still defy thee, CROOME, to shew
One particle of pluck!

Deerh. Enlightened men! you know I vowed
That of your love I was so proud,
I game would ever die;
And when I find, both far and near,
The game I've made of you, its clear
I have not told a lie!

Though of my plume one only quill
Is all, you say, now left me—still
I ought not to complain;
And though no "pluck" myself, yet you're
Too apt to pluck us all, I'm sure,
To let it long remain!

No. 3. SOUTHWARK.

At the trade of tobacconist WILSON may "go,"
But he'll get in the long-run a quid for his quo;
For, able his nonsense and slang to rebuff,
He'll find Mr. POLHILL is quite "up to snuff."

No. 4.

(The following admirable skit, from last night's Courier, is inserted under this head, with a vast deal of pleasure.)

On Sir Robert Wilson's telling the Southwark Electors, yesterday, that the Ale he had taken had got into his Head.

"The ale into my noddle flies,"
At Southwark bold Sir Robert said;
"Why then, at last," a friend replies,
"Thank God, there's something in your head."

The following appeared in the Times of Friday:—

"We understand that a number of noblemen and gentlemen, residing at the west-end of the town, presented a requisition yesterday to Mr. Canning, desiring him to allow himself to be put in nomination as a representative for Westminster. Mr. Canning thanked them for the honour which they wished to confer upon him, but declined accepting it, stating that his duties as Secretary of State were so numerous as to prevent him from adequately discharging those of the representative for a large city. He added, that if he could discharge the duties of both situations, gratitude would prevent him from entering into the service of any other than his former constituents at Liverpool."

That our readers may form an adequate idea of the standard of information contained in the Times, we beg to apprize them that the "NOBLEMEN and gentlemen" alluded to in the above paragraph, are no other than two men by the name of PITT and PARISH, (never by any accident heard of before), headed by a most notorious common informer, calling himself CHARLES MOLLOY WESTMACOTT, and professing to be son of the great sculptor of that name, but universally understood to be a brat of old MOLLOY, a chimney-sweeper, in Drury-lane, well known in all pot-houses, from which he has not yet been turned out, as a "Cad" to the low part of the press, and still more known as being pronounced by the COMMON SERGEANT, in public court, as little short of a downright liar. An occurrence, of such singular and national consequence as a GENERAL ELECTION, must naturally give rise to the practice of every species of humbug and impudence imaginable—otherwise it is to be supposed that such ragamuffins would hardly have had the audacity, under any other circumstances, to present themselves at the door of one of our principal Secretaries of State; but as it is, the only wonder to us is, that the porter did not kick them all into the street, the instant they ventured to shew their faces at his master's door; for even if he did not know the brazen countenance of that fellow WESTMACOTT, he ought to have known, from their appearance, that such "raff" could have nothing to do with the electors of any place, unless acting in the capacity of their bill-stickers and banner-bearers.

MR. JOHN MILLS is shortly to lead to the hymeneal altar the amiable and accomplished MISS ORBY HUNTER.

THEATRICALS.

The patent theatres should follow the example set by MATHEWS and YATES, and close their doors. People have neither time, inclination, nor money for playhouses at this busy moment, and it becomes a waste of every thing to continue their performances. Drury-lane, we understand, closes on the 20th; Covent-garden, we presume, will do the same in a day or two after that.

The former of these concerns is, we perceive by public advertisement, to be let, and to all prudent people, we recommend it to be let—alone, till the players come a little more to their senses. We, were amused with a very flourishing account in Monday's Chronicle of the amicability existing between the Committee of Management at the latter theatre, and an announcement at the same time of their continuation in office, both of which statements may be very true; but they must all have more philosophy and genius than any one gives them credit for, if either one position or the other be correct, when the Lord CHANCELLOR has just struck out 15,000l. from the accounts of the Receiver, as not allowable (which said sum the Receiver, or his securities, must pay into court); and when, in addition to this, there are many more items in the accounts of the present season, to a very considerable amount, that will share the same fate. While on the subject of this theatre, be it known as one important fact, that Sir GEORGE SMART conducts the music here next season, and if they would insert a clause in his engagement that he should make all apologies, the thing would be complete. In addition to this, we find that Madame VESTRIS has played a trick upon the Dublin manager, for which she deserves the severest reprobation. She was engaged to perform there, and Mr. ABBOTT, the lessee, came over expressly to escort her, being an exceedingly polite man—when the soubrette apprized him that she could not go, unless she was paid 500l. in advance (having a pressing occasion for that sum), which the gentlemanly lessee was soft enough to give his acceptance for—whether she got it discounted, or not, we do not pretend to say, but she has possession of it, and now peremptorily declines fulfilling her engagement, which has naturally so deranged Mr. ABBOTT's plans, that he is uncertain whether he may not be compelled to close his theatre prematurely.—Fine times these for mountebanks!

We take this opportunity of recommending the benefit of Mr. SPRING, the BOX KEEPER, to whom in the course of every season we are all considerably indebted—he is an assiduous and an obliging servant, and it is worth the purchase of a ticket, only to see one of its ever-green smiles. The entertainments selected by the gentle SAM give every variety that can be required, and right well disappointed shall we be if he has not a house up to the very roof, in testimony of long tried and good servitude.

In announcing the death of the great musician, WEBER, which took place on the 6th of this month, we may venture to offer a few remarks on the present state of our musical drama.---By those who are admirers of dramatic music, and take an interest in the prosperity of British Opera, the compositions to which he has left us heirs, viz. Oberon and Der Freischutz, will be ever hailed as a lofty step towards the improvement of our national taste. Mr. BISHOP, it is true, by his arrangement of MOZART's Opera of "Figaro" and ROSSINI's "Il Barbiere," was the first to whom we are indebted for giving to our stage compositions whose sterling merit is so universally admitted, and to that gentleman our thanks are due, for proving to us that we are capable of admiring a union of florid accompaniment with the voice, which the composers, since Dr. ARNE, have lamentably neglected. Much as we admire ARNE, and inclined as we are to give him every credit for introducing into England the style of Italian music which existed in his day, we yet cannot but remark, that in comparing the present compositions of the Italian, German, and even French stages, with the music of "Love in a Village," "Artaxerxes," &c. predominant as the latter are in melody, they nevertheless fail in the accompaniment, and the voice does not enjoy that advantageous support which is necessary for perfect effect. This fault bids fair to be remedied by the introduction of the full orchestral accompaniment, and beautiful disposition of wind instruments, in which WEBER has been so successful, and he has convinced us that good vocal concerted pieces, and a full chorus, can please even an English audience—a fact which, until lately, the managers have never given us an opportunity of ascertaining. We will not be too curious in investigating the causes which has led to our becoming the proprietors of this new taste: for if we have been cheated into listening to sound music by dint of devils and fairies, gorgeous dress, and exquisite painting (as children take wholesome medicine concealed in grouts), it matters little. Oberon and Der Freischutz are now popular English pieces, and one of the disciples of BEETHOVEN, the most abstruse master of the German school, now usurps the place of DIBDIN, KELLY, and the other meagre dabblers in the art, who, up to this moment, have had the office of regaling our ears. We must not attempt to explain this hiatus in the history of our native opera; indeed it would require the ingenuity of a BURNEY to ascertain why we had overleapt the more airy school of HASSE GRAUN, WINTER, and others, not to mention the masters of the Italian school, and fixed upon WEBER to discipline our taste—we will have nothing to do with the cause, but we claim a right to rejoice in the effect;—the only fear we have in congratulating ourselves upon this acquirement, is, that CARL MARIA will, in all probability, be subjected to many imitators, who, from the nature of his compositions, must fail; indeed, we are sorry to notice MR. BISHOP as having already made the attempt in Aladdin; if, then, a man of his ability fail, we can expect nothing from others but to be blown out of the theatre by trumpet, trombone, and horn, and to be stunned by drums and cimbals, which is the consequent event of a bad imitation of WEBER.

Before we close this article, we beg clearly to avoid the possibility of being charged with libelling the taste of the British nation in music. We are fully sensible that the country which produced FALLIS, BIRD, TRAVERS, BREWER, et longo ordine gentes, down to HORSLEY and CROTCH, may proudly boast of native talent, but eminent as we have been in madrigalists and composers for the church, the drama has made but little progress. It is true, that some few compositions of PURCELL still are executed, and LOCK can never die: but, from the period of their existence until ARNE, there is a blank, and since ARNE, until the present momoment, little dramatic music has been composed good enough to survive, or to keep pace with the improvement in the theatres of the Continent. We might attempt to find the cause for this, but we scarcely dare to encroach on the patience of our reader.

ASCOT HEATH RACES.

Ascot races commenced on Tuesday, and the expectation that the King was to be present attracted a very splendid and fashionable attendance. The company at these races, owing to the increased distance from London, is commonly more select, though less numerous than at Epsom; but, on this occasion, the concourse of persons was very great indeed. As early as by 11 o'clock the stands began to fill; and a great rush was made to those in the immediate neighbourhood of that occupied by his Majesty. Several alterations, since last year, have been made in the disposition of the course. The Duke of York's stand has been removed; and is now placed next the King's,—opposite the winning-post. A new stand for the betting gentlemen has also been erected: and temporary stables for the reception of his Majesty's horses, when he attends, and those of his suite. About noon, Lord Maryborough, the steward of the course, arrived, when the line of carriages round the course was very dense indeed. A great number of carriages and four came—gentlemen driving their own horses. Other equipages, with equal pretensions, post; and a great swarm of gigs, and equestrians. But the approach to Ascot is so good, and the visitors coming from different quarters—as Windsor, Staines, and Bedfont—no confusion at all took place in the business of the assemblage. A little before the commencement of the first race, the King arrived upon the ground; driving directly up the course, in front of all the stands, so as to show himself fully to every body present. The Duke of York had come in rather earlier, and had been riding about the field upon his favourite gray horse, which must be one of the most powerful in England. The whole of the stud of the Royal Family attracted great attention; one particular bay horse (among other highly valuable ones), ridden by an outrider, was of a beauty and action perhaps unequalled. His Majesty came in a plain brown travelling carriage, attended by the Duke of Dorset (Master of the Horse), his suite following in two other close carriages, and a phaeton; and was received with respectful but universal greeting. He looked extremely well, and was plainly dressed in a blue sourtout coat, gray stockings, and round hat, showing himself constantly at the window of his stand, in conversation with the Duke of York, the Duke of Wellington, the Duke of Grafton, and other persons of distinction. The first of which was for

His Majesty's Plate of 100 guineas, for horses of all ages; 4 yrs. 10st. 7lb., 5 yrs. 11st. 7lb., 6 yrs. 11st. 12lb, and aged, 12st.; 4 miles.

For which five horses started; only two placed.

Mr. Wyndham's Chateau Margeaux, (Addy), 4 yrs..... 1
Mr. Heathcote's Nigel, 4 yrs..... 2
Mr. Mockford's Velasquez, 4 yrs.
Lord Tavistock's Shadow, 5 yrs.
Lord Clarendon's Brother to Skiff, 4 yrs.

Betting—5 to 2 on the winner.

The second race—for the Oatlands Stakes, of 30 sovs. each, for 3-yr. olds and upwards, 2½ miles—went off as follows:—

Duke of Portland's Mortgage, 4 yrs., 8st. 11lb..... 1
Mr. Wyndham's Stump, 4 yrs., 8st. 13lb..... 2

The following started but were not placed:—Lord Warwick's Double Entendre, 5 yrs., 9st. 4lb.; Duke of Rutland's El Dorado, 5 yrs., 8st. 11lb.; Mr. Mockford's Scamper, 3 yrs., 6st. 10lb.; Lord Tavistock's Leeway, 3 yrs., 6st. 7lb; Lord Verulam's Upas, 3 yrs., 6st. 2lb.

Betting—5 to 2 agst. Stumps; 5 to 2 agst. Mortgage; 3 to 1 agst. Leeway.

The three following races were short heats, upon the course, called "The new mile:"—

Sweepstakes of 200 sovs. each, for 3-yr. old colts, 8st. 5lb.; the winner of the Derby 7lb.; and the 2d horse 3lb. extra.—New mile.

Lord Exeter's, by Comus, Phantom..... 1
Lord Verulam's, The Moslem..... 2
Mr. Payne's, The General..... 3
Duke of Grafton's, Bolivar..... 4

Monarch, Sophist, sister to Nectar colt, and another, paid.

Betting—2 to 1 agst The Moslem; 2 to 1 agst Comus; 3 to 1 agst The General; and 6 to 1 agst Bolivar.

Sweepstakes of 200 sovs. each, h. ft. for 3-yr. old fillies, 8st. 5lb. New mile.

Mr. Wyndham's, sister to Pinwire..... 1
Mr. Thornhill's, by Merlin,—Moral..... 2
Duke of Grafton's Cremona..... 3
His Royal Highness Duke of York's Rachael..... 4
Lord G. Cavendish's by Partisan, Ridicule..... 5

Betting—Even on Rachael, 3 to 1 agst. the winner, and 5 to 1 agst Moral.

Sweepstakes of 100 sovs. each, for colts 8st. 7lb.—New mile.

Mr. J. Rogers's Waterman..... 1
Duke of Grafton's Norman..... 2
Lord G. Cavendish's, by Allegro, Barossa..... 3

Betting—11 to 8 agst Barossa; 5 to 2 agst Norman; and 5 to 2 agst Waterman.

SECOND DAY.

The running was on the whole very fair, and will be found accurately stated as follows:—

The Albany Stakes, of 50 sovs. each, h. ft. for 3 yr. old colts, 8st. 7lb.; fillies, 8st. 3lb. The winner of the 2000 guineas stakes, Derby, or Oaks, to carry 5lb. extra. The New Mile.

Duke of Grafon's ch. c. Norman..... 1
Mr. J. Pickford's ch. c. The Captain..... 2
Mr. J. Rogers's Waterman..... 3

His Royal Highness the Duke of York's Elizabeth, Duke of Grafton's Paul Jones, and Mr. Lambton's colt, by Waterloo, paid forfeit.

Betting 2 to 1 agst Waterman; 3 to 1 agst The Captain; and 5 to 1 against the winner.

The Swinley Stakes of 25 sovereigns each, for 3 years old, 7st. 4lb. and 4 years old, 8st. 10lb. fillies allowed 3lb. The last mile and half.

General Grosvenor's ch. f. Tears 3 years..... 1
Lord Tavistock's Leeway, 3 years..... 2

Duke of Grafton's Paul Jones, and Mr. Hervey's Larissa pd.

Betting—2 to 1 on Tears.

Leeway at starting jumped up off with the lead, and kept it in good style all round, closely followed by Tears, who came up at the distance, got the front, and won the race very cleverly by 3 lengths; rode by young Buckle, Leeway by Edwards. This race excited little interest.

His Royal Highness the Duke of York's Plate of 50l. for all ages; 3 yrs. 6st. 7lb.; 4 yrs. 8st. 2lb.; 5 yrs. 8st. 10lb.; 6 yrs. and aged, 9st. To start at the distance-post, and go once round and a distance. The winner to be sold for 350 gs. &c.

Duke of Rutland's El Dorado, 5 yrs..... 1
Mr. Brown's Twaddler 4 yrs..... 2

The following started, but were not placed:—

Lord G. Cavendish's Ganymede, 6 yrs.
Mr. Pickford's The Captain, 3 yrs.
Mr Sadler's Jocko, 3 yrs.
Lord Clarendon's brother to Skiff.
Captain Lock's Crockery, 4 yrs.

Betting—2 to 1 against Crockery, and 6 to 1 against the winner.

A gold cup, value 100 gs., for horses bona fide belonging to officers of the Household Brigade; 3 yrs. 6st. 10lb., 4 yrs. 8st. 2lb., 5 yrs. 8st. 12lb., 6 yrs. and aged, 9st. 3lb.; mares allowed 3lb. About two miles and a half.

Captain Standen's Ilderim, 4 yrs. 1
Mr. Bulkeley's Fearnought, 6 yrs. 2

Match.—50 sovs.; h. ft.; gentlemen riders.

Lord W. Lenox's ch. h. St. Laurence..... 1
Mr. Cosby's bl. g. The Black Prince..... 2

Captain Bouverie rode the winner, and beat the Black Prince (rode by the owner) in a canter. No betting.

A gold cup, value 100 gs., the surplus in specie, by subscription of 5 sovs. each, for horses not thorough bred, bona fide the property of, and rode by officers of the Household Brigade; 12st. each; two miles and a distance.

Mr. Kenyon's Habberley—(Captain Bouveric) 1
Mr. Leeson's Squirrel—(Mr. Payton) 2
Mr. Edwards's Knickerbocker..... 3
Mr. G. Bulkeley's Huntress—(Owner) 4
Mr. Davidson's Farmer George (Owner) 5

After a tremendous time had been occupied in harnessing, the gentlemen jockeys started, and came in in the style usual in these fancy races, keeping a most respectful distance from each other. Habberley beating Squirrel by four or five lengths; the third 50 lengths behind; the fourth half a distance, and the last only about a head short of the distance post. We believe that the riders were more amused by the race than the spectators.

THIRD DAY.

The Gold Cup, value 100 guineas, the surplus in specie, by subscriptions of 20 sovereigns each; the second horse to receive back his stake; 3 yrs. 6st. 10lb., 4 yrs. 8st. 2lb., 5 yrs. 8st. 12lb., 6 yrs. and aged, 9st. 3lb.; mares allowed 3lb. About two miles and a half.

Mr. Wyndham's Chateau Margaux, 4 yrs..... 1
Mr. Theobald's Cydnus, 5 yrs 2
Lord G. Cavendish's Bizarre, 6 yrs 3

The following were drawn:—Lionel Lincoln, Middleton, Muleteer, Cedric, and Serab.

Betting—11 to 8 on the winner, 3 to 1 agst Cydnus, and 3 to 1 against Bizarre.

Bizarre made strong running at starting, and kept it on all the way to the last turn, followed closely by the others. Cydnus then came up and took up the running, coming clear off full five lengths, with Chateau Margaux at hand, who did not come up till near home, when he let loose, and won easy; rode by Dockeray, Cydnus by Macdonald, and Bizarre by Arnull.

The Windsor Forest Stakes of 50 sovereigns each, for 3 yr. old fillies, 8st. 4lb. The old Mile.

General Grosvenor's Tears 1
Duke of Grafton's Cremona..... 2
Lord Warwick's b. f. by Partisan 3
Mr. Greville's Fawn paid forfeit.

Betting—3 to 1 on Tears.

Tears at starting took the lead at tolerable strong running, well looked after by Cremona and the other, to the brick-kiln; here a struggle commenced, when Cremona got nearly a-head of Tears, with the other on their quarters. They all made the best of their ground to the distance, when Partisan filly was completely beat off. Cremona made very pretty running, but had no chance of winning; she began to lose ground, and when at home was beat by Tears in a canter by three lengths. Rode by Wheatley, Cremona by John Day, and the other by Dockeray.

Sweepstakes of 30 sovereigns each; 20 ft.; for 2-year-olds, colts, 8st. 5lb., fillies, 8st. 2lb. The winner of a sweepstakes to carry 3lb. extra. T.Y.C.

Mr. J. Edwards's f. Starch by Woful 1
Mr. Wyndham's sister to Recruit 2
Mr. Forth's b. f. by Interpreter—Dandizette's dam.... 3
Mr. Mockford's b. f. by Smolensko.
Mr. J. Smith's b. f. by Carbon.
Lord Exeter's brother to Attica.

2 to 1 agst Wyndham, 5 to 2 agst Forth's, 7 to 2 agst Mockford's, and 5 to 1 agst the winner. Only three placed.

Sweepstakes of 100 sovs. each, for fillies, 8st. 5lb. Old Mile.

Lord Jersey's Butterfly 1
Mr. Wyndham's f. by Whalebone..... 2

Betting, 3 to 1 on Butterfly, who made her own running, and won by five lengths, in a common canter.

Sweepstakes of 10 sovs. each, for 3-yr-old colts, 8st. 7lb., and fillies 8st. 2lb. The new mile.

Lord Jersey's Butterfly..... 1
Mr. Goddard's b. c. Composer, by Smolensko—Viscountess....2

A Plate of 50l. for all ages; 3 yrs. 7st.; 4 yrs. 8st. 5lb.; 5 yrs. 9st.; 6 yrs. and aged, 9st. 5lb.; winner of a plate or sweepstakes this year 3lb. Heats one mile and half.

Mr. Scaith's Frogmore, 4 yrs.....	1	1
Mr. Greme's Cadiz, 5 yrs.....	2	3
Mr. Rogers's Muleteer, 4 yrs.....	3	dr.
Mr. Whiteside's Picton, aged	4	2

Betting, 6 to 4 agst Cadiz; 6 to 4 agst Picton; 7 to 4 agst Mulcteer; second heat, 5 to 4 on the field.

LAST DAY.—FRIDAY.

His Majesty's Plate of 100 guineas for hunters; 5 yrs. 11st. 7lb.; 6 yrs. 11st. 12lb; and aged, 12st. Heats two miles and a distance.

Mr. Shackell's b. m. Bashful, 6 yrs	1	1
Mr. Edwards's ch. g. Antelope, 5 yrs	2	2

Mr. Bretton's ch. g. Dick Boss, aged	6	dr.
Mr. Child's h. g. Little-thought-of, 4 yrs	7	6
Mr. Mitton's b. m., 6 yrs	8	5

Betting—6 to 4 agst Antelope; 5 to 2 agst Magic; and 6 to 4 these two agst the field.

Match 300 guineas, gentlemen riders.—Two miles and a distance, 12st. each.

Mr. Kenpon's Habberley, aged 1
Mr. Mr. Mills's Squirrel, aged 2

The Wokingham Stakes of 5 sovs. each, for 3 yr-olds and upwards The last three-quarters of the new mile.

Mr. Greville's Orator, aged, 8st. 5lb. 1
Mr. Whiteside's Frogmore, 4 yrs., 8st. 9lb. 2

The following started, but were not placed:—Jocko, 4 yrs., 8st. 11lb.; Scamper, 3 yrs., 7st. 9lb.; Clothier, 3 yrs., 7st. 4lb.; Upas, 3 yrs., 7st.; and Wildboy, 4 yrs., 7st. 10lb.

Betting—7 to 2 agst Jocko, 5 to 2 agst Frogmore, and 4 to 1 agst the winner.

A Plate of 50l. for all ages; 3 yrs. 7st. 4lb.; 4 yrs. 8st. 9lb.; 5 yrs. 9st. 3lb.; 6 yrs. and aged, 9st. 7lb. The odd mile.

Captain Lock's Orator, aged	1	1
Mr. Goddard's Composer, 3 yrs.	2	dr.
Lord G. Cavendish's Ganymede, 6 yrs.	3	2
Mr. Theobald's Strymon, 4 yrs.	4	dr.
Mr. Messer's Conviction, 5 yrs.	5	dr.
Mr. Alderson's Jocko, 4 yrs.	6	3

Betting—6 and 7 to 4 against Orator. 2 to 1 against Frogmore, and 3 to 1 against Ganymede.

A Sweepstakes of 10 sovereigns each for horses belonging to Officers of the Household Brigade. New mile.

Mr. Kenyon's Habberley	1
Mr. Bulkeley's Fearnought	2
Mr. Edwards's Knickerbocker	3
Mr. Mostyn's Young Rachael	4
Mr. Cosby's Black Prince	5

There was nothing worthy of comment in this race. Captain Bouverie rode Habberley.

The following is a comparative statement of the amount in money and value, actually received by the owners of winning horses for the last 4 years, at these sports, in stakes, cups, matches, and plates:—

	1823.	1824.	1825.	1826.
First day's races	1,810	1,170	2,450	4,100
Second day's do.	625	675	425	625
Third day's do.	755	520	515	995
Fourth day's do.	110	215	265	625
	3,300	2,580	3,655	6,355

The above shows that the first day's stakes &c. of the present week's running, exceeds in value the whole four days' of 1825, by the sum of 445l. while on the aggregate the surplus is 2,700l.

The largest tree in England seems to be on one the estate of Lady Stourton, in Yorkshire, which in 1716 was nearly 85 feet in height, 48 in circumference at a yard from the surface, and 78 in circumference measured close to the ground.

HOT! HOT!—ALL HOT!!

Monsieur Chaberl (the celebrated Continental salamander) exhibited his power in withstanding the operation of the fiery element, at White Conduit gardens, yesterday evening. In the first instance, he refreshed himself with a hearty meal of phosphorus, which was, at his own request, supplied to him, very liberally, by several of his visiters, who were previously unacquainted with him. He washed down this infernal fare with solutions of arsenic and oxalic acid, thus throwing into the back ground the long established fame of Mithridates. He next swallowed, with great gout, several spoonsful of boiling oil, and, as a dessert to this delicate repast, helped himself with his naked hand to a considerabla quantity of molten lead. There are, we know, preparations which so indurate the cuticle, as to render it insensible to the heat either of boiling oil or of melting lead, and the fatal qualities of certain poisons may be destroyed, if the medium through which they are imbibed, as we suppose to be the case here, is a strong alkali. We cannot, however, guess in what manner Monsieur Chabert effected this neutralization; and it is but fair to state, that the exhibitor offered to swallow Prussic acid, perhaps the most powerful of known poisons, the effect of which is instantaneous, if any good-natured person could furnish him with a quantity of it. During the period when this part of the entertainment (if entertainment it can be called) was going on, an oven, about six feet by seven, was heated, For an hour and a quarter large quantities of faggots were burned in it, until at length it was hot enough for the bed-chamber of his Satanic Majesty, "O! for a muse of fire!" to describe what followed. Mons. Chabert, who seems to be a piece of living asbestos, entered this stove, accompanied hy a rump-steak and a leg of lamb, when the heat was at about 220. He remained there, in the first instance, for ten minutes, till the steak was properly done, conversing all the time with the company, through a tin-tube, placed in an orifice formed in the sheet iron-door of the oven. Having swallowed a cup of tea, and having seen that the company had done justice to the meat he had already cooked, he returned to his fiery den, and continued there until the lamb was properly done. This joint was devoured with such avidity by the spectators, as leads us to believe, that, had Mons. Chabert himself been sufficiently baked, they would haae proceeded to a Caribbean banquet. Many experiments, as to the extent to which the human frame could bear heat, without the destruction of the vital powers, have been tried from time to time; but so far as we recollect, Monsieur Chabert's fire-resisting qualities are greater than those professed by the individuals who, before him, have undergone this species of ordeal. It was announced some time ago, in one of the French journals, that experiments had been tried with a female, whose fire-standing qualities had excited such astonishment. She, it appears, was paced in a heated oven, into which live dogs, cats, and rabbits, were conveyed. The poor animals died, in a state of convulsion, almost immediately, while the fire-queen bore the heat without complaining. In that instance, however, the heat of the oven was not so great as that which Monsieur Chabert encountered. If Monsieur Chabert will attach himself to any of the insurance companies, he will, we have no doubt, "save more goods out of the fire" than ever Nimming Ned did; hut if he should not like that employment, old Cobbett, of bone-grubbing notoriety, will, no doubt, engage him for the purpose of receiving lessons in the art of fire-bearing prior to his "gridiron exhibition."

POLICE INTELLIGENCE.

SALE OF SEATS IN PARLIAMENT.

BOW-STREET.—Wednesday the final examination of Mr. W. Collins, for obtaining 1,700l. from Colonel Camac of the Guards, under the pretence of obtaining for him a seat in Parliament for the Borough of Matmeshury, took place. The time appointed was half-past seven o'clock, hut before that hour the office was crowded. Mr. Well, the Solicitor of Colonel Camac, came to the door of the office before the Magistrate had arrived, and not being recognized, was refused admission by the doorkeeper. Mr. Well somewhat warmly insisted upon being admitted, and as soon as his business was known, his progress to the office was no longer retarded. Soon afterwards Mr. Charles Phillips, the counsel for the defendant, and Colonel Camac, the prosecutor, were observed walking arm in arm through the venue of Covent-garden Theatre, leading into Bow-street. It was immediateiy suspected (and we believe there can be no doubt of the fact) that some compromise had taken place between the would-he seducer of Parliament and the defendant. About half-past seven o'clock Mr. Adolphus arrived, and a few words passed between him and Mr. Phillips, in Bow-street. Mr. Minshull took his seat and the two counsel stationed themselves near the bench. One of the most extraordinary farces ever witnessed was then played off in this office. The Dramatis Personæ were, Mr. Minshull, the magistrate, Mr. Adolphus, Mr. Phillips, Mr. Collins; and, behind the scenes, were Mr. Well, Colonel Camac, Mr. Butler, (the clerk of Mr. Harmer,) &c. The actors played their parts with considerable skill, a previous rehearsal having taken place; and the mock gravity displayed gave a finish to the burlesque,—We report the dialogue as follows:—

Mr. Adolphus.—I will now call the witnesses, who have arrived from Malmesbury—Mr. Seal and Mr. Neat.

Mr. Minshull.—If you please.

Jones, the officer, here called the parties, but they did not answer.

Mr. Minshull.—Where is Mr. Well and Colonel Camac?

A Gentleman.—I saw them in the office some time ago.

Mr. Minshull.—I desired Mr. Woods, the clerk, to write to the Colonel, to request his attendance to-night, and he answered, that he should certainly be here at the examinatirn of the prisoner.

The Colonel was again called at the office door, three times, and also Mr. Seal and Mr. Neat. No one answered.

Mr. Phillips.—It is a busy time at Malmesbury, perhaps these gentlemen have returned to the election.—(A laugh.)

Mr. Minshull—I shall wait till eight o'clock (it wanted two minutes) before I decide upon the case, and if the Colonel and the witnesses from Malmesbury do not then appear, it will be my duty to discharge Mr. Collins, unless some cause is shown why I should not.

In case of no public interest having been disposed of,

Mr. Phillips said.—It is now half-past eight o'clock, and the witnesses are not yet arrived; perhaps they have not left Malmesbury, and Mr. Adolphus ought to state the cause of this delay.

Mr. Adolphus.—I know no reason for the delay. I cannot identify myself with a transaction of this description; I attend here as counsel for the prosecutor, and if the parties who instruct me do not bring forward the necessary witnesses, I must leave the case as it is—with the Court.

Mr. Minshull.—So long as you do not despair of the witnesses coming, I will sit here if it be till ten o'clock.

Mr. Adolphus.—Really I cannot, on my own responsibility, request the Magistrate to delay the examination, as I have no further instructions.

Mr. Phillips.—I cannot talk about nothing so fluently as Mr. Adolphus.

Mr. Adolphus.—You undervalue your talents.

Mr. Phillips.—I do not see why we should be kept here all night. I am, however, in your hands.

Mr. Adolphus.—No, you are not, for I have no hand in it, and may move something if you like.

Mr. Phillips.—I shall move for the discharge of Mr. Collins; for if there were any reasonable expectation of the arrival of the witnesses, I should not make the motion.

Mr. Camac, Mr. Well, and the Malmesbury witnesses, were then called at the door, by order of Mr. Minshull. The Office was in a roar of laughter, and the Magistrates exchanged very significant glances. It was so obviously known to all parties, however they assumed an appearance of ignorance of the fact, that the thing had been settled, it appeared the height of absurdity to carry on the farce any farther; but

Mr. Minshull said, if any accident has occurred to prevent the witnesses arriving in town, I will put off the examination.

A Gentleman.—The witnesses were here, but are gone.

Mr. Adolphus—I am going out of town for a week, and I cannot ask for the prisoner to be remanded for that time, as the evidence which I expected is not here.

Mr. Phillips.—I should think you would not, when you recollect that this is not the first, second, or third examination.

Mr. Minshull addressed the prisoner.—"Mr. Colling, as Col. Camac does not appear to prosecute, nor the witnesses from Malmeshury, to give evidence; and as there is no sufficient evidence against you, to warrant your committal, you are discharged."

The prisoner howed, and withdrew with his friends.

MISERIES OF MATRIMONY.

MARLBOROUGH-STREET.—A meagre, miscrable, half-animated looking "snob," named Thomas Evans, whose appearance was calculated to excite any other feeling rather than the passion of love, was brought before Sir George Farrant, the magistrate, from the watchhouse of St. Ann's parish, Soho, in company with a smart, comely-looking, married woman, named Mulhern, the former charged with having occupied the place of Mrs. Mulhern's husband, on Sunday night last, in the affections and bed of that lady, and the latter charged with an over-hospitable disposition, in giving to Mr. Evans, the shoemaker, that portion of her bed which was generally allotted to her lawful husband.

The husband of Mrs. Mulhern, who is a gentleman's servant, and a very fine-looking young man, a perfect contrast to his rival, being sworn, stated, that for some time past his wife and himself, with their only child, have lodged in a house in Compton-street, Soho, where Mr. Thomas Evans, who is a "translator" or a mender of old shoes, also happens unfortunately to he a sojourner. There was no particular intimacy or acquaintance that he was aware of between any part of his family and Mr. Evans, nor did he ever suspect that Mr. Evans had used any means, or indeed was at all likely, to undermine the affections of Mrs. Mulhern, or any other woman, towards her husband. On Sunday night, however, or rather about two o'clock on Monday morning, he (the husband) returned home, after having been engaged as usual all the previous day with his master's family, and on going up stairs, to his astonishment and horror, when he entered the apartment where his wife was in bed, he found her and the "snob," Mr. Thomas Evans, fast locked in each other's arms. After a moment's thought, he reflected upon the happy unconsciousness of their situation, and being unwilling to disturb their repose abruptly, or at all events until he had some other witness to the fact of his wife's incontinence besides himself, doubting perhaps the reality of the scene presented to his vision; and accordingly he left the happy pair together, while he went and quietly introduced a neighbouring watchman, to whom he exhibited unequivocal proofs of Mrs. Mulhern's frailty, and of Mr. Evans's nocturnal gallantry. He then gave both the violators of his bed into the watchman's custody, and after affording them barely sufficient time to scatter a few loose garments over their sinful carcasses, had them conveyed to the watchhouse, and there left them in separate cells to pass the remainder of the night, ruminating on the instability of all human happiness.

The watchman who took charge of the parties said, that he could fully confirm Mr. Mulhern's complaint, as to his wife's infidelity, at least as far as appearances had any weight; and moreover, he said, that a more impudent woman, after detection in such a situation, than Mrs. Mulhern, never could have existed at any period of the world, for that while Mr. Evans and herself were dressing before being taken to the watchhouse, she rushed into his arms in the presence of her husband, and kissed him several times, in the most barefaced manner; after which, she turned to her husband, and placing her thumb upon the tip of her nose, said to him, "There, Mr. Mulhern, take your change out of that."

The Magistrate now asked Mr. Thomas Evans—who, either from the effects of love, or of mending shoes, or fright, or what else, seemed scarcely able to keep his legs in a perpendicular position under him—what he had to say in explanation of his very immoral and improper intrusion on the premises and bed of the complainant.

Mr. Evans said that the fact was, Mrs. Mulhern had for some time past made love to him, in such a bewitching and seductive manner, that on Sunday night, when she gave him an invitation, in the most intelligible terms, to her bed in the absence of her husband, he could not, he confessed, muster up sufficient resolution to reject her offer; in short, he said, no man could resist Mrs. Mulhern's winning ways, if he had any love at all in him, and that was all he had to say.

Mrs. Mulhern, in her own behalf, did not at all mince the matter, but said that she had a right, at least she thought so, to dispose of herself and her bed as she deemed proper, without any busybody troubling her on the subject; and as for Mr. Mulhern, she had very little of his society at home, so she supposed he amused himself elsewhere. He allowed her but very little out of his wages, and she was obliged to work hard for her own support, and she should do as she liked with herself, "no thanks to nobody:" and as for Mr. Evans, whatever people might think by his looks, she would say, that for a shoemaker, he was as nice a man as she would wish to meet with.

Sir George Farrant said that it was a grievous thing certainly for the young man to be tied to such an ungrateful and abandoned woman, and it was very creditable to the husband that he restrained himself from any violence on the parties, when he found them in the situation described. He (Sir George) would advise the husband to advertise the wife's conduct, so as to prevent, as far as he could, her obtaining credit in his name. The immediate cause of complaint was one with which a magistrate had no power to interfere, and the parties must therefore be dismissed, which they were accordingly.

Despatches have been received from Captain Franklin, of the Arctic land expedition, dated at Winter-quarters, Fort Franklin, on the great Bear Lake, September 6. During the summer, three expeditions, under Captain Franklin, Lieutenant Bach, and Doctor Richardson, were made, preparatory to the great objects to be undertaken next year. The expedition under Captain Franklin went to the mouth of Mackenzie river, which he found to discharge itself into an open sea; there is one island near its mouth, called by Captain Franklin Garry's Island. From the summit of this island the Captain saw the sea to the northward all clear of ice or islands; to the westward he saw the coast to a great distance, his view terminating at very lofty mountains, which he calculates were in longitude of 130 deg. west. The expedition would proceed early in the spring on its ulterior objects. The officers and men were all well and in high spirits at the favourable circumstances which had hitherto attended their proceedings.

It has been ascertained that, independent of the county of Lanark, there were upwards of 30,000 operatives out of employment in the counties of Renfrew, Ayr, Dumbarton, Stirling, and Forfar. This is an appalling fact, and must carry along with it an irresistible appeal to the public of Edinburgh and other places, who, it is to be feared, are not sufficiently aware of the extent of misery that at present exists in this country.—Edinburgh Observer.

SUPERIOR WINES.—About 300 dozen of excellent old Port, vintage 1820, which, being had direct from the Docks, is warranted genuine as imported; to be disposed of under peculiar circumstances, which enable the present Proprietors to offer it at the unusually low price of 24s. per dozen. Bottles charged only 3s. per dozen; and if hampers are required for country correspondents, 6d. per dozen will be added.—N.B. A few dozen of white wines, and a case of sparkling champaign, proportionably cheap.—Direct, post paid, to Mr. Blair, No. 19, Vere-street, Cavendish-square, where sample bottles may be had; or a dozen, as a sample, will be forwarded to any address required.

YORK HOUSE.—This building, as far as the exterior is concerned, being now almost entirely completed, the wooden erections in the Green-park, under which the workmen had carried on their works of preparation, are being removed, and are already nearly cleared away. There is, however, another very laborious and likely to be a very tedious undertaking, just commenced in the Green-park, with a view of supplying York-house with water. A number of workmen are engaged at present in opening the ground to a very considerable depth, for the purpose of laying down a line of iron pipes, extending from York-house almost diagonally across the Green-park to the angle at the top of Constitution-hill, and thence to be continued through Hyde-park to the reservoir of water near Grosvenor-gate, whence the supply of water both for Buckingham new palace and York-house is to be derived.

R. C. Storey, who committed forgery about two years since, in Demerara, on Messrs. Daniel and Co. of Bristol, in the name of Mr. John Austin, of Plantation Land of Plenty, underwent the punishment of flogging on the 19th of March, and was soon afterwards to be banished from the colony. He received 86 lashes with his hands tied and a rope suspended round his neck from the gallows.

It appears that it was with great difficulty the preparations for the execution of Balfour, at Dundee, were completed. Some repairs of the gibbet were necessary, but all the contractor's workmen, from superstitious feelings, refused to work at it; even his apprentices ran away, willing to pay the penalty in their indentures, rather than assist at a work so hateful to them.

Indressing and arranging the hair, great assistance is obtained, and beautiful effects produced on natural or artificial hair, rendering it admirably soft that it will lie in any direction, producing beautiful curls, which it preserves in damp atmosphere or violent exercise, at the same time adding a most incomparable, transcendant, and beautiful lustre, rendering the head-dress truly enchanting, as ROWLAND'S MACASSAR OIL, which has, by its unexampled excellence in promoting in every respect the elegance and durability of that grand ornament, gained the admiration and astonishment of the whole world. As impostors offer for sale a pernicious composition instead of the genuine, it is necessary to ask for Rowland's, and observe the prices are 3s. 6d.—7s.—10s. 6d.—and 21s. per bottle, and each bottle is signed "A. Rowland and Son."

CHARLES WRIGHT'S CHAMPAGNE.

"And the small ripple spilt upon the beach
Scarcely o'erpass'd the cream of your champagne:
When o'er the brim the sparkling humpers reach,
That spring-dew of the spirit! THE HEART'S RAIN!"
LORD BYRON.

63s. per dozen. Opera Colonade, Hay Market.

SIMPSON'S ROYAL ELIXIR of LIFE, unrivalled in good effects for Spasms or Gout in the Stomach, Indigestion, Loss of Appetite, and as a Restorative in cases of extreme Nervous Debility or the weakness of advanced Life. It is sold in bottles at 11s. each, by J. V. Simpson, 28, Henrietta-street, Covent-garden; Stradling, Royal Exchange; Anderson, 156, Bishopsgate Without; Hose, 309, High Holborn; Sanger, 150; Oxford-street; Grignon, 174, Regent-street; Hawkius, 11, Old Bond-street, and by all the principal Medicine Venders throughout the Kingdom.

SILK HATS, Double Edged, at 17s.—This economical and useful hat is a widely different and superior manufactured article compared with those generally made, the body being composed of finer materials, and stiffened with a chemical composition, rendering them soft and pliable to the bead; they also resemble in every respect the finest beaver, having a rich nap, with which the edges, are doubly covered. Travellers and commercial men can give best proof of their utility. To be had only of the Inventor, price 17s. Also, good Beaver Hats, in a variety of modern shapes, possessing the qualities held out by other contemporaries, without their imperfections, at 20s. 21s. 23s. and 26s.—Youths' Beaver and Silk Hats, Cloth, Seal, and Fur Caps in great variety, at PERRING'S, 413, Strand, two doors from the Adelphi Theatre, and at Hammersmith.

THE BRITISH SPECIFIC, for re-producing and promoting the GROWTH of HAIR.—The principle of its operation is to cool and contract the pores which are opened by a redundancy of heat, occasioning a relaxation of the roots, and render them incapable of retaining the hair; to counteract which nothing is better calculated than the British Specific, as, from its invigorating and oleaginous properties, it almost immediately arrests the falling off, and affords such effectual nourishment to the roots, that persons giving it a fair trial may assure themselves of its speedily restoring it even where it has become completely bald, however long it may have been so, and, if grey, gradually to restore it to its natural colour. The superiority of this preparation (the invention of a medical man) derives additional recommendation from its being, unlike other compositions for the hair, so extremely clean and agreeable, that its application is a real pleasure, and is only requisite to be generally known to receive the preference of every article in use for similar purposes. To be had only of D. Peden, 15, Burlington Arcade, Piccadilly, in bottles 6s. each, or cases of four bottles for 11., forwarded to order on receiving the amount, post paid.

DISTRESS in SPITALFIELDS.—At a MEETING of the COMMITTEE, held in the Vestry-room, Spitalfields, June 10, 1826, WM. HALE, Esq. in the Chair,

The Committee beg to inform the Public, that the funds placed at their disposal are again very much diminished, in consequence of the great number of cases which still remain on their books; they are therefore again compelled to appeal to the benevolence of those, who have in their power the means of alleviating the distresses of so many of their fellow creatures.

THE PROPERTY of THE SUN, (Established in 1792) Has lately passed into NEW HANDS, and it is now conducted with great spirit and liberality. THE SUN selects the best leading articles from the Morning Papers, and thus presents at one view the strength and spirit of the London Press on both sides of the question—an advantage entirely peculiar to this Journal, and one of manifest utility and convenience to persons residing in the Country, who have not an opportunity of seeing all the Daily Papers. The principles of THE SUN are highly Loyal and Constitutional, supporting the liberal policy of His Majesty's Government, and advocating the true interests of the Public at large. THE SUN contains the latest Foreign and Domestic News—Promotions in the Navy, Army, and Church—Commercial, Fashionable, Sporting, Literary, Dramatic, Scientific, and Miscellaneous Intelligence, of the most interesting description. Law and Police Reports—the Corn, Meat, Vegetable and Hay Markets—Public Meetings—Electioneering Intelligence, and other Events of the Day are given at full in THE SUN, up to the hour of Publication. The Funds are reported up to the Closing Price, at Four o'clock, and the List of Bankrupts when published, is given in a Second Edition, which will render THE SUN a very desirable Paper in the Country. THE SUN possesses the earliest and most authentic sources of information upon all subjects, and is peculiarly calculated for the display of Advertisements. It is one-third larger than the other Evening Papers, being printed in twenty columns, with beautiful new type, and worked by a machine which throws off upwards of two thousand impressions an hour. THE SUN yields to no paper in London for priority of intelligence,—variety and selection of matter—or manliness of principle. Orders are received for THE SUN by all Newsmen, Clerks of the Road, and Postmasters in the United Kingdom.

SUN OFFICE, 112, STRAND, LONDON.

The "Patriot" Dublin Paper of Saturday, June 3, makes the following remark under the head of General Election:—

"We continue our articles upon Elections, and are happy to perceive, that what may be now deemed the best London Journal, THE SUN, has copied those we have hitherto written."

BURGESS' ESSENCE of ANCHOVIES, Warehouse, 107, STRAND, corner of Savoy Steps, London.—JOHN BURGESS and SON, being apprised of the numerous endeavours made by many persons to impose a spurious article for their make, feel it incumbent upon them to request the attention of the public, in purchasing what they conceive to be the ORIGINAL, to observe the Name and Address correspond with the above. The general appearance of the spurious descriptions will deceive the unguarded, and for their detection J. B. and Son submit the following caution:—Some are in appearance at first sight "Burgess' Essence of Anchovies;" others, "Burgis's," and many more without address.—JOHN BURGESS and SON having been many years honoured with such distinguished approbation, feel every sentiment of respect towards the public, and earnestly solicit them to inspect the labels previous to purchasing what they conceive to be of their make, which they hope will prevent many disappointments.

Burgess' New Sauce for general purposes having given such great satisfaction, continues to be prepared by them, and is recommended as a most useful and convenient sauce; will keep good in all climates.

Warehouse, 107, Strand, corner of the Savoy Steps.—The Original Fish-Sauce Warehouse.

New Edition, the Fifth, revised and enlarged, price 3s.

PRACTICAL OBSERVATIONS on STRICTURES of the URETHRA and RECTUM, recommending an improved system for their Treatment and Cure; illustrating its efficacy by numerous remarkable and highly important cases, in some of which, Strictures of from ten to twenty years duration have been totally removed in a few weeks, and its superiority thereby fully established over every other method hitherto practised. By C. B. COURTENAY, M.D. To which are added, Observations and Practical Comments on Gleet, Seminal Weakness, and the miseries occasioned by Self Abuse, for the cure of which a mode of treatment, the result of long and successful practice, and at once safe, speedy, and effectual, is adopted by the Author.

Printed for the Author, Robert-street, Adelphi; and sold by William Marsh, 145, Oxford-street, next to Fladong's Hotel; Jones and Sherwood, Paternoster-row; Onwhyn, 4, Catherine-street; Walker, 90, High Holborn; and may be had of all Booksellers.

"We earnestly recommend the cases related by Dr. Courtenay to the perusal of such of our readers as are afflicted with the complaints which the Author has made the subject of these Observations. Several instances are adduced of the recovery of perfect health from states which were considered hopeless by Practitioners of eminent talents, and very extensive experience. We entertain the highest opinion of Dr. Courtenay's professional skill, and congratulate him on his successful and judicious application to these severe and often fatal diseases."—European Magazine.

IMPOSTURE UNMASKED.—The progress of Merit although frequently assailed, is not impeded by Envy and Detraction The aggression of ambuseade terminates in defeat; and conscious rectitude ultimately triumphs in the attainment of the grand object—public approbation. The test of experience is the guarantee of favour, and has established WARREN'S BLACKING in general estimation; of which there exists not a stronger proof than the tacit acknowledgment of a host of servile imitators, who surreptitiously obtrude on the unwary a spurious preparation as the genuine article, to the great disappointment of the unguarded purchaser, and manifest injury of WARREN, whose character and interest by this iniquitous system are equally subject to detriment. It becomes therefore an indispensable duty to CAUTION THE PUBLIC against the manœuvres of Unprincipled Venders, who having no character to lose, and stimulated by avarice in their nefarious pursuits, aim at the acquisition of money through any medium than that of honour! The original and matchless BLACKING bears on each bottle a short direction, with the signature

ROBERT WARREN

All others are counterfeits; and in many instances the imposition labels are artfully interlined with a different address, in very small characters, between the more conspicuous ones of "No. 30," and "STRAND." It is earnestly recommended to Shopkeepers and others who are deceived by base fabrications of WARREN'S BLACKING, to return the detected trash to the source whence it came, and expose the machinations of rascality to merited obloquy.

WARREN'S BLACKING is surpassingly brilliant;—it excludes damp; gives pliancy to the leather; retains its pristine virtue in all climates; and, combining elegance with comfort, is an article equally of indispensable fashion and utility. Sold by every respectable Vender in Town and Country, in bottles, at 6d. 10d. 12d. and 18d. each.

The most prominent trait of BEAUTY is a fine HEAD of HAIR, which is effectually produced by

ROWLAND'S Macassar Oil, the original and genuine, a vegetable production, which has for many years been universally admired; also acknowledged pre-eminent for nourishing the Hair, preventing it from being injured by illness, change of climate, study, travelling, accouchement, &c. removes scurf, harshness, and dryness—renders it soft and glossy; prevents its falling off or turning grey; creates a thick growth on the baldest places; producing beautiful curls, adding a most incomparable, transcendent, and beautiful lustre, rendering the head-dress truly enchanting. Ask for "ROWLAND'S" Macassar Oil, at 3s. 6d.; 7s.; 10s. 6d.; and 21s. per bottle.

ROWLANN'S KALYDOR, for the complexion, which immediately diffuses on the skin a delectable and pleasing coolness, truly refreshing; renders the skin peculiarly soft and pleasant; removes freckles, pimples, and all cutaneous eruptions; imparts luxuriant and matchless beauty to the complexion.

ROWLAND'S ESSENCE OF TYRE for changing red and grey whiskers to black or brown.

ROWLAND'S ALSANA EXTRACT for the tooth-ach, and preserving and beautifying the teeth and gums.

CAUTION.—In consequence of the high popularity of the above articles, base impostors have imitated the labels, bills, and bottles. To guard against such imposition, it is necessary on purchasing to ask for "ROWLAND'S," strictly observing their signatures in red on each bottle of the genuine articles,

"A. ROWLAND and SON, 20, Hatton-garden."

ALGIERS.—MARSHALL'S NEW PERISTREPHIC PANORAMA, just Opened in the Great Room, Spring-gardens, Representing the City of Algiers, with its immense Fortifications and Batteries, as it appeared before the Battle—the British Fleet entering the Bay, to take their station—the Battle at the hottest period—the Algerine Fleet, Dock-yards, Store-houses, &c. in flames, which decided the fate of the Action, and compelled the Dey to submit to all the demands of the British—the City and Batteries of Algiers in Ruins, as they appeared the day after the Battle, with the British Boats bringing off the Christian Slaves to liberty, happiness, and home.—The Ships of War being on the largest scale, and accompanied with appropriate Description and Music, gives a sensation of reality, not easily described.—Day Exhibitions from Twelve to Five; Evening ditto, by Gas, at Seven and Half past Eight o'Clock.

SUPERIOR FOOD for CHILDREN, INVALIDS, and others.—ROBINSON'S PATENT BARLEY, for making superior Barley Water in ten Minutes, and PATENT GROATS, for making superior Gruel in ten minutes.—The Patentee solicits attention to the following document:—

(Copy.) Apothecaries' Hall, London, Feb. 8, 1826.

Sir,—I have analysed your Groats and Barley Powder, which you having his Majesty's Letters Patent for the sole manufacturing of the same, properly denominate "Patent Barley and Patent Groats." I have no hesitation in declaring them to be genuine powders of the finest Barley and Oats I ever saw. I consider it a public advantage, and of great importance in the medical world, that, by your mode of preparation, a valuable fine mucilaginous beverage and food may be obtained in a few minutes.

I have also analysed some samples—imitations of your articles—which are warranted "free from adulteration;" these I pronounce to be compositions of different meals, consequently, neither pure Barley Water nor Oat Gruel can be made from them.—I am, Sir, your obedient servant,

To Mr. M. Robinson, Red Lion-street, Holborn. RICHARD CLARKE.

The above testimonials, from a Gentleman who has already rendered the Public much service, by exposing various deleterious mixtures and adulterations in articles of general consumption, added to the recommendation of the medical profession, make it unnecessary for the Proprietors to do more than state, that none are genuine which do not bear the words, "Robinson's Patent," the Royal Arms, and the signature of "Matts. Robinson."

Sold retail, in Papers of 1lb, and Canisters of 2lb., by most respectable Druggists and Grocers in every town throughout the Kingdom; and, wholesale, by the Patentee and Manufacturers, Matthias Robinson and Co. No. 64, Red Lion-street, Holborn, London.

NEW MUSIC—Just Published by METZLER & SON, 105, Wardour-street.

"Receive our Last Farewell," a dirge for three voices, inscribed to the Memory of the lamented Carl Maria Von Weber, the words by W. Balls, the music by L. V. Beethoven, price 2s.

NEW MUSIC.—BONNY BRAVE SCOTLAND, the favorite Air, now singing with the most enthusiastic applause by Miss Paton, arranged as a Rondo for the Pianoforte, by T. A. Rawlings, price 3s. Also, Bonny brave Scotland Quadrilles, arranged and played by J. Weippert at all the most fashionable parties, price 4s. Published by Lavenu and Co., 21, Edward-street, Manchester-square; J. Gow and Son, 162, Regent-street; and W. Card, 98, Quadrant, Regent-street.

EASY-LEARNT MUSICAL INSTRUMENTS.—J. SIMPSON, Manufacturer, 260, Regent-street, near Oxford-street, continues to give a Lesson Gratis upon his New Patent Improved Double and Single Flageolets. His late improvement of Keys, &c. for the lower notes, makes this beautiful instrument so easy to learn, that J. Simpson will undertake to teach any lady or gentleman to play Solos and Duetts in the above lessen. His Tenor Flageolets has the rich mellow tone of the musical glasses, and daily meets with the admiration of the first professors and amateurs of music.—Flageolets on the same principle as the German Flute, on which the flute-player has nothing to learn. Instruments repaired. Be particular in the number, 260, Regent-street, three doors from Oxford-street. Agents in Paris, Messrs. Collinetti, Fils, and Marcillac, Rue de la Paix, No. 8.

TO SPORTSMEN. — To be SOLD, a valuable CHESNUT MARE, the Property of a Gentleman going abroad. She is got by Bessingby, out of a mare nearly thorough-bred, well calculated to win Hunter-Strkes, being a very fast galloper, with immense power; has won several times the last year, and hunted regularly during the season; rising five years old; warranted sound, free from vice or blemish; a fair trial allowed, and the owner treated with. May be seen on Monday and Tuesday next, at Tickner's Livery Stables, bottom of Wimpole-street.

SILK HATS, Double Edged, at 17s.—This economical and useful hat is a widely different and superior manufactured article compared with those generally made, the body being composed of finer materials, and stiffened with a chemical composition, rendering them soft and pliable to the head; they also resemble in every respect the finest beaver, having a rich nap, with which the edges, are doubly covered. Travellers and commercial men can give best proof of their utility. To be had only of the Inventor, price 17s. Also, good Beaver Hats, in a variety of modern shapes, possessing the qualities held out by other contemporaries, without their imperfections, at 20s. 21s. 23s. and 26s.—Youths' Beaver and Silk Hats, Cloth, Seal, and Fur Caps in great variety, at PERRING'S, 413, Strand, two doors from the Adelphi Theatre, and at Hammersmith.

BRADBERRY'S PATENT SPECTACLES, upon unerring principles, to preserve the sight to extreme old age. It is necessary to caution the public against the use of improper Spectacles, as their effects prove injurious, instead of beneficial to the eye. The unremitted and anxious study Mr. BRADBERRY has paid to his glasses for upwards of 30 years, has called forth the most distinguished approbation of their merit from the medical profession, and from many thousands of persons of the highest rank and respectability.—To be had only at 28, Holles-street, the first door out of Oxford-street, next to the large Fruiterer's at the corner, facing Hanover-square, and at no other place in the United Kingdom.—Orders from the country immediately attended to. Removed from 332, Oxford-street.

TO THE WORTHY AND INDEPENDENT LIVERY OF LONDON.

GENTLEMEN,

THE unexampled station you have been pleased to assign to me upon the Poll at the termination of the successful contest in which we have been engaged has secured to me, through your kindness, the proud object of my ambition.

The distinguished trust you have reposed in me I pledge myself to discharge with zeal for your interests, with an anxious desire to promote the Trade and Commerce of the Metropolis, and a determination to continue a faithful guardian of the corporate and municipal rights of my fellow-citizens.

I remain, Gentlemen, your obliged and faithful Servant,

Committee Room, London Tavern, June 16, 1826.

To the WORTHY and INDEPENDENT LIVERY of LONDON.

Gentlemen,

PLACED by your kind and unbiassed suffrages in the distinguished and responsible situation of one of your Representatives in Parliament, I find myself quite unable to express the deep sense I entertain of this honour, or my own gratitude, for the good opinion you have thus manifested of me.

Be assured, that as I never can forget this mark of your favour, so it will constantly act as a stimulus to the most faithful, zealous, and indefatigable discharge of my duties, whether in reference to the public affairs of the nation, or the particular interests and privileges of the City of London.

With unfeigned respect,
I have the honour to be, Gentlemen,
Your much obliged and devoted Servant,

BURGESS' ESSENCE of ANCHOVIES, Warehouse, 107, STRAND, corner of Savoy Steps, London.—JOHN BURGESS and SON, being apprised of the numerous endeavours made by many persons to impose a spurious article for their make, feel it incumbent upon them to request the attention of the public, in purchasing what they conceive to be the ORIGINAL, to observe the Name and Address correspond with the above. The general appearance of the spurious descriptions will deceive the unguarded, and for their detection J. B. and Son submit the following caution:—Some are in appearance at first sight "Burgess' Essence of Anchovies;" others, "Burgis's," and many more without address.—JOHN BURGESS and SON having been many years honoured with such distinguished approbation, feel every sentiment of respect towards the public, and earnestly solicit them to inspect the labels previous to purchasing what they conceive to be of their make, which they hope will prevent many disappointments.

Burgess' New Sauce for general purposes having given such great satisfaction, continues to be prepared by them, and is recommended as a most useful and convenient sauce; will keep good in all climates.

CITY OF LONDON ELECTION.

SEVENTH AND LAST DAY.

Upon the appearance of the candidates on Friday, at nine o'clock, every avenue leading to the hustings was so completely blocked, that a passage was with difficulty made for them; the mob received Mr. Ward most uncourteously, and upon coming in front of the hustings, a yell of sounds so discordant—that we cannot any thing like it would be almost impossible—was raised at that gentleman, but he bowed several times and took up his position. The Lord Mayor was received with that respect which his presence appears always to command. Groups of persons had assembled, evidently for the purpose of obstructing the business of the election, and annoying the voters for Mr. Ward; however the polling in his favour was so rapid, that he very soon, in the forenoon, headed Alderman Waithman, and the contest rested entirely between Alderman Wood and the Lord Mayor, but it was feared much, that as no coalition had taken place, his Lordship would not be able to bring up sufficiently to head the Alderman.

Between the hours of twelve and one o'clock a scene of very great uproar took place in the Hall and its vicinity, owing to the rapid advance of Mr. Ward on the poll; however, no riot took place beyond the usual hootings and yells. The contest rested entirely between the Lord Mayor and Mr. Alderman Wood. The contest increased with so much activity, that the front of the hustings was completely thronged with voters unpolled.

CLOSE OF THE POLL.

COLCHESTER ELECTION DINNER.

From the Essex Herald.

The following singular scene occurred at the dinner given to Sir Henry Smith. It speaks but little for the liberality and the dignity of the meeting. The electors of Colchester are made up of curious materials—they elect D. Whittle Harvey for their representative, and refuse even to drink the health of the first scholar, orator, and statesman in Europe.

Mr. Boutflower rose to propose the health of a gentleman, one of the greatest statesmen of the age. It was not a premeditated thought, as he had not made up his mind more than ten minutes—he alluded to Mr. Canning, who he thought was a true blue minister.—(Disapprobation.)

Mr. Smythies interfered, and declared that he had great respect for Mr. Boutflower; indeed it was very rare that two friends, so intimate as they were, should disagree. He would urge him, on this occasion, to withdraw the toast. His friend, Mr. Boutflower, should yield to no man, as regarded his veneration for church and state; but when he referred to the circumstance, that some of his (Mr. Smythies') ancestors, for their firm adherence to the Protestant cause, had been impaled alive upon the walls of that town, he could not refrain from telling the Honourable Gentleman that "his liberality had exceeded his prudence." Mr. Smythies then drew a picture of the consequences which would follow the success of the cause which Mr. Canning advocated, namely, the introduction of the like cruelties at the very threshold of his (Mr. Boutflower's) own door. The speaker was reminding Mr. Boutflower of the doctrines of the worthy pastor, whom he sat under, when he was interrupted.) Mr. Smythies resumed.—No longer should we be able to travel with our prayer-books and bible; we should not be allowed to go to the baptismal font. His impression was, that we should bring up our children in the fear and love of God. (Again interrupted.) Mr. Smythies concluded by saying, that he thought they had met under the banners of church and state. (Applause.)

Mr. Boutflower rose, and, after some time, was permitted to say that he regretted the offence he had given, which was quite unintentional. He proposed the name of Mr. Canning, without reference to the Catholic question. (Cries of 'We won't have him.') Mr. B. concluded, by an appeal to the feelings of those present, whether they did not know him to be true to the church and to the state, ('Agreed, but we do not like Canning.')

LIVERPOOL, JUNE 13.

The Members were chaired this day, and all has gone off much more quietly than had been anticipated.

The feelings of the mechanics against Mr. Huskisson are highly vindictive, but the great body of respectable men who have accompanied him this day, has prevented those consequences which might otherwise have ensued.

CHICHESTER, JUNE 14—CLOSED AT HALF-PAST FIVE.

Lord George Lennox	555
Mr. Poyntz	441
Sir G. Webster	364

Lord George and Mr. Poyntz are duly elected, and they have been chaired round the Cross, The right of non-resident Freemen voting is allowed. Every Elector has polled; it was a very severe contest. Sir Godfrey has declared himself a Candidate for the County of Sussex, and also Mr. Donovan, the unsuccessful Candidate for Lewes.

BRISTOL, JUNE 14.

To the astonishment of the whole city, and the zealous friends of Mr. Protheroe, his brother Philip, this morning, without a moment's previous intimation to the electors, or, it seems, to many of his committee, took upon himself to decline on behalf of his brother. This resolve, it seems, was induced by the statement of Mr. Bright's father, that he was determined, at any cost, to carry his son, and the knowledge of the length of his purse. At the moment of Mr. P. Protheroe's declension, his brother had a majority on the gross poll, and much angry feeling has been expressed by the public in general at so sudden an abandonment of a cause which was so highly popular, and which only required a little advance of cash to make it successful. The poll is still kept open, and many persons have stated their determination to persevere, notwithstanding the defection of the leaders. The state of the poll as follows:—

Bright	1884
Protheroe	1849

Mr. Protheroe's brother addressed the electors from the hustings in the following speech; after which, the chairman of the committee addressed the Sheriffs, and consenting to discontinue the contest, retired:—

"Though it would have been the more regular course, that one of the committee formed for conducting Mr. Protheroe's election should have addressed you, I have claimed the privilege of so doing.

"The circumstances of this election, which have entirely arisen from popular feeling, render it impossible that any of the funds of my brother's family should be applicable to its expenses. The zeal and liberality of his supporters have induced them to enter upon, and they are pursuing a most arduous contest. I understand that they are taking up freedoms as fast as possible, of which 1,500 new ones can be created, and are sending for absent voters. The finances have to contend against great affluence. The fortunes of Mr. Protheroe's zealous supporters ought not to be injured by their preference, and I therefore call upon his friends, and entreat them to desist from the contest.

"As my appearance on these hustings may be considered as indentifying me with those who have supported my brother, I think it due to them to give them all the credit. My influence has not been exerted with any tradesmen, or any body of men—not one shilling has been taken, or is to be taken, from the family purse; and I appeal to all the gentlemen concerned, to say, whether I have not invariably said, that my brother's honour would be tarnished by any direct or indirect pecuniary assistance from his family. Duty and gratitude compelled me (not only in my own opinion, but in that of private friends) to come here after the election has assumed so decided a character, to thank the respective voters for my brother, and I do, gentlemen, from the bottom of my heart, thank you collectively and individually.

"The exertions of my brother's friends placed him last night, when 3300 voters had polled, 161 a-head of Mr. Bright, a circumstance which fully justified what had been done.

"Gentlemen, I again thank you for your unprecedented exertions."

RIOTS AT LEICESTER.

Extract of a private letter, dated Leicester, half-past five, Wednesday evening.

"Immediately after the close of the poll this day, the crowd of people who were assembled during the afternoon, proceeded to acts of violence and riots, and attacked the hustings, a remarkably strong-built wooden building erected in the market-place. It is imagined that the cause of the outrage, is the state of the poll, which has damped the spirits of Mr. Evans's friends.

Mr. Evans, in his address of last night, alluded to some unfairness in the arrangement of the hustings, respecting the facilities for polling, which he imagined gave an "illegal and unjust advantage to his opponents, Mr. Cave and Sir C. Hastings. He stated that if the obnoxious arrangements were removed (which change took place about one o'clock this afternoon), he should be at the head of the poll to-morrow." Instead of this, his party found him at the bottom but one.

On the candidates and their friends proceeding to their several committee-rooms, the immense crowd assembled commenced an attack on the outward barricadoes of the hustings, and on the pens set apart for Mr. Evans and Mr. Denman, in order, it is supposed, to give free access to those gentlemen's friends. The posse of constables engaged with the mob, to prevent their intentions being carried into effect, when, after a desperate engagement, the civil authorities were driven from the defence of the hustings, which were partially destroyed, as far as the pens in the purple interest. The Mayor, Recorder, and the Corporation marched out from the Exchange to quell the riot, but were soon driven back, amidst vollies of stones torn up from the pavement. Constables' staves, and emblems of office, changed hands in numbers; and we are sorry to say, that some severe contusions and wounds were inflicted. The Riot Act was said to have been read.

CARDIFF, JUNE 13.

Lord James Stuart was yesterday elected member for this town. His Lordship was, in an appropriate and able speech, proposed by C. R. M. Talbot, Esq., and his nomination was seconded by W. Nicholl, Esq., Recorder of Cardiff. The business of the day having terminated, his Lordship was carried through the principal streets of the town; and, from the fineness of the day, a most beautiful and animated scene presented itself, from the concourse of beauty and fashion assembled in the windows and on the roofs of the houses. Dinners for his Lordship's friends were provided at the principal inns, and every thing went off in the most peaceable and quiet manner. His Lordship has invited his friends to a ball, at the Castle, on Wednesday evening, which, it is expected, will be numerously attended.

STAFFORD—COUNTY NOMINATION.

A meeting was held at Stafford on Monday, according to appointment by the High Sheriff, for the purpose of nominating fit persons to represent this County in the next Parliament.

Teddesley, the seat of Mr. Littleton, was thronged with freeholders, who were anxious to pay him their personal respects; and at half-past ten o'clock he was escorted to the County Town by a cavalcade, comprising more than a hundred carriages, and a vast concourse of horsemen, extending for more than a mile along the road.

Sir J. Wrottesley, Bart. was met by his friends, in carriages and on horseback, at the Lion Inn, in this town, and was joined by a great number as he proceeded to Stafford.

The candidates above named were put in nomination the same day, in front of the County Hall. They severally addressed the electors, and Friday was fixed upon for the electors.

TAUNTON.

On Monday, the friends of freedom in this town invited R. E. Creswell, Esq. their candidate, and several members of his family, to honour them with their company at a public dinner. Joseph Welch, Esq. presided, and there were present nearly all the principals of what is called the Independent or buff party. After the usual toasts of "The King," "Duke of York and the Army," &c. &c. had been drunk, the health of the candidate was proposed, and drank with three times three.

Tuesday's proceedings closed at a late hour. Creswell and Seymour were declared to have the show of hands in their favour, and General Peachy demanded a poll.

COVENTRY, JUNE 13.

Last night Mr. Ellice addressed the freemen in various parts of the town, and was received every where with kindness, and, in some cases, with enthusiasm. This morning his friends mustered in considerable strength, and were enabled to get up to the booth. For a short time they polled about five to one, but the Corporation as soon accumulated, and being aided by the regular constables and the police, the Tory candidates again obtained a majority on the day's poll. Mr. Ellice and his friends speak with confidence of his ultimate success. The Corporation mob attempted to drive the friends of Mr Ellice from the Craven Arms, where they were assembled to hear him speak after the close of the poll, and they were completely foiled and repulsed. This is the first day the true blues have been able to resist the brute force of their opponents. At present nothing is known generally of the politics of the new candidates, but it is whispered about that they are both Whigs. Fyler does not address the freemen, from want of ability, and is regarded with contempt by all his voters. Heathcote exhibits some energy, and is the favourite. Mr. Ellice expresses his firm determination to keep the poll open so long as he can find a vote. The numbers of resident freemen are about 3,000, and the non-residents 1000.

MONMOUTH.

It was expected that the burgesses of this borough would have put a gentleman in nomination in opposition to the Marquis of Worcester, but the attempts that have been made for a period of more than seven years to oppose the Beaufort family have not been crowned with sufficient success to hazard the experiment. On Wednesday morning, the Marquis and his brother, Lord G. Somerset, commenced their canvass. Monday being the day appointed for the election, a special Court of Record was held, when Dr. Bevan presided, and the two Noble Candidates were unanimously elected.

ELECTION RIOT AT NEWARK.

Mr. Bristow has lost his election for Newark, and the old Members, Messrs. Clinton and Willoughby, have been declared duly elected. The latter were chaired on Saturday. The mob, as soon as the car was brought for this purpose, commenced an attack upon the procession, tore it in an instant to atoms, and proceeded to discharge volleys of stones and other missiles in every direction. They continued the work of destruction for a considerable time, and a great deal of mischief was done; but the yeomanry cavalry, and the militia, being called in, the rioters were at length got under, by the arrest of a great number of those who appeared to be most active in carrying on the disturbance. The gaol, it is added, was so completely filled with prisoners in consequence, that it was found necessary to send fifteen of them, under escort, to the House of Correction, at Southwell.

WALLINGTON, June 14.

Immediately after the ceremony of chairing had been gone through, yesterday, Col. Hughes having had the "alms" of the free electors of this Borough, which he received in the true style of Coriolanus, took his leave of his constituents, or rather took French leave, accompanied hy Mr. Maddox, the proxy of Colonel Roberts; while Dr. Dodson, the defeated candidate, was entertained with a splendid dinner, given to him at the Lamb Inn, by upwards of 100 of the most respectable inhabitants of the town. Dr. Dodson, at 9 o'clock, departed (for his brother's seat we believe), and was, on entering his carriage, greeted with the hearty and unbought cheers of all the respectable inhabitants.

A ball was given at the Town Hall in the evening, by the friends of Dr. Dodson, who consider that, by the late struggle, they have laid the foundation of the independence of the Borough.

LEOMINSTER, June 15.

At the close of the poll as anticipated, the two popular candidates Lord Hotham, and Mr. Bish were returned. The numbers stood thus:—

Lord Hotham	556
T. Bish, Esq.	455
R. Stephenson, Esq.	253
F. Cuthbert, Esq.	57

BOROUGH OF HERTFORD, June 15.

The contest for this Borough terminated on Thursday, in the election of Mr. Byron and Mr. Duncombe. Not one freeman of the place, resident or non-resident, remained unpolled at one o'clock, and Mr. Bulwer consequently resigned. At the close of the poll the numbers were—

Mr. Byron	393
Mr. Duncombe	393
Mr. Bulwer	301

SOMERSETSHIRE.

On Wednesday afternoon, the nomination for this county took place at Bridgewater. The meeting was amazingly crowded, and lasted five hours, during which time there was an immense deal of speaking, and much of it not of the genteelest character.

Colonel Horn proposed, and Mr. Phillips seconded, the nomination of Mr. Dickenson, who expressed himself favourable to a revision of the corn laws, and, though an owner of West India property, friendly to the extinction of slavery, if done safely and with even-handed justice.

Sir John Hawkins proposed, and Mr. Hanning seconded, Sir T. Lethbridge's nomination.

Sir Thomas Lethbridge, in acknowledging the honour proposed to be again conferred on him, noticed that he had been accused of not canvassing the county. He would tell the individual who had said so, why he had not canvassed the county: not because he was wanting in respect for the county, but because he had none for that person. He should have thought it an insult to the county to canvass it with such an opponent in the field.

The Rev. E. Creswell, brother of the candidate for Taunton, nominated Mr. Hunt, and in the course of his address said that he was an excellent clergyman, and "no disgrace to his cloth," as Sir T. Lethbridge's son called him; that he would preach or write sermons against any bishop or parson; and that, be his cloth what it might be, he could defend himself without his brother's assistance.

Mr. Hunt spoke at great length, saying, he should certainly go to Ilchester again—he meant, to poll. The well-dressed rabble on the hustings talked of his blacking; he would say a word or two about it, only the jockies would tell him that he was puffing it. He declared if he got into the House, as he was sure he should, he should spoil the parsons, the magistrates, and the fellows called lawyers. There would be an end of them.

After a good deal more speaking, and replies, in which the magistrates defended themselves against the charge of not having accounted for all the county rate collections, showing that Mr. Hunt took different quarters in two years, and thus imposed on the county.

The Sheriff put the nomination to the show of hands, and declared the selections to have fallen on Mr. Dickenson and Sir T. Lethbridge. Mr. Hunt called for a division; the Sheriff said he had no doubt. Mr. Hunt then demanded a poll, at least said he should do so in the course of the evening. The meeting was then dissolved; but Mr. Hunt remained haranguing after the Sheriff had gone.

Westmorland.—The election for this county is fixed for Thursday, the 22d inst.

Appleby, Monday night.—The election for this borough took place to-day. The nomination is divided between the Lords Lonsdale and Thanet. The members returned to serve are, we understand, Viscount Maitland, son of the Earl of Lauderdale, and Mr. Tufton, brother to Lord Thanet.

PRESTON.

Monday Morning,

The result of this election must be a matter of manœuvring. Cobbett commenced the trickery on Saturday, by causing Sir T. Seevor to be nominated a candidate. His objects were these:—First, to keep the second votes of the men from the other candidates, and, secondly, to be able to bring to the poll two tallies successively, his own, and that which should come up in the name of Sir Thomas; but in this he was met by the other candidates, who also nominated a friend each, and so were enabled to bring up two lots of voters in succession as well as Cobbett. In the course of the first day, several of the voters, after drinking and feasting with one candidate, and coming to poll in their entertainer's tally, suddeoly turned round and gave their votes to another. Messrs. Stanley, Wood, and Barrie, complained indignantly of the treachery, and agreed to discountenance it, even though practised in their own favour. Cobbett also acceded to the agreement. Yet, when the very next tally that came up to vote for Wood, one of the voters gave a plumper for Cobbett; Cobbett, forgetting his promise, ran down to the booth, thanked the man, shook hands with him, and told him he was a very honest fellow! This shabby breach of faith has excited in the other candidates the most direct and determined opposition to him.

Captain Barrie, amid the confusion, denied that he had formed a coalition with any candidate. (Shouts of disapprobation.) While he was on his legs, he would tell them an anecdote of Mr. Cobbett. That gentleman went to an elector and asked him for his vote, the elector told him he had promised to give his vote to Mr. Wood and Mr. Stanley. Mr. Cobbett tried to persuade him to break his promise—the elector remained firm to his promise; then Mr. Cobbett saw no chance of obtaining the vote, he said to the elector, "May starvation for ever seize you."—(Shouts of disapprobation.)

Cobbett—"Oh, don't mind Capt. Barrie, my friends; don't you know that he is the noted Bob Barrie, the celebrated dog-fighter. (Laughter and renewed uproar.)

Tuesday Morning.

The hustings presented a scene of uproar, confusion, and alteration, similar to that of yesterday. It was reported that Cobbett would not appear upon the hustings again, but his friends have since contradicted the report. His chance of success is growing weaker every day. As to the charge of partiality against the Mayor, 'tis all moonshine; the opposing candidates are the persons who are really keeping Cobbett out, by splitting their votes with each other—three men of theirs (one for each candidate) being polled for one man of Cobbett's; it follows, naturally, that Cobbett must inevitably be thrown out. He is determined, notwithstanding, to keep polling to the last.

A party of the Foot Guards marched into the town yesterday.

At the opening of the poll this morning, Mr. Cobbett presented the fifth protest, complaining, that by the present rate of voting the majority of electors would remain unpolled at the end of the fifteen days. He complained also of the bringing in of the troops.

The Mayor denied that he had sent for them.

The Mayor stated that he had heard Mr. Wm. Cobbett, jun. had reported that he (the Mayor) had called Captain Barrie "Bob Barrie, the dog-fighter." He took that opportunity of stating that he never used such words of Captain Barrie.

Cobbett's son (William) came forward, and asserted that the Mayor did, in conversation with him, actually use the words "Bob Barrie, the noted dog-fighter."

The Mayor solemnly declared he never uttered that language; he never said the word "Bob." What he said of Captain Barrie was this—"Captain Barrie, so well know in the navy for his bull-dog fighters:" meaning sailors.

Marlborough Election.—For a long time the members for this borough have been returned by the Mayor and the select burgesses. On Wednesday last, when the election took place, the common burgesses claimed the right of voting, and 18 of them tendered their votes in favour of Thomas Hudson, Esq., and Col. Blackburn, in opposition to the Lords Bruce and Brudenell, for whom the Mayor and the seven select burgesses (two of whom are non-residents) voted. The two Lords were returned by the Mayor, but it will depend upon the decision of a committee of the House of Commons whether they or their opponents will be the sitting magistrate.

Knaresborough.—(From the Leeds Intelligencer.)—On Tuesday last the election of two members for the borough of Knaresborough took place in the Town-hall, when, after going through the usual forms, the Hon. G. Tierney and Sir James Macintosh were again duly elected. Mr. Allen, on this occasion, urged considerable objections to the mode in which it was conducted, and likewise touched upon those two great points—reform in the Commons House of Parliament, and Catholic Emancipation, —and concluded by proposing Mr. Spooner and Mr. Richards. These gentlemen apologized to Mr. Tierney, declaring they had been accidentally present on the occasion, and that neither were in the least degree acquainted with the intention of Mr. Allen to propose them. Mr. Tierney replied in a most able and satisfactory manner, after apologizing for the absence of his colleague, Sir James Macintosh, who, in consequence of ill health, was unable to travel. The usual festivities were prevalent on this occasion.

CORNISH ELECTIONS.

The election for the Borough of St. Ives took place on Friday se'nnight, the 9th. The members returned were, Sir C. Hawkins, Recorder of that ancient borough, and Mr. Halse, Alderman and Town Clerk, and an attorney-at-law. Sir C. Hawkins is the legitimate patron of St. Ives, having a larger estate there than any belonging to any other person. Mr. Halse is a gentleman who, several years ago, acted as steward for C. Hawkins, but a disagreement taking place between them, he became the head of an opposition party which has generally succeeded in returning one of the members, and at the opening of the last Parliament returned both—a circumstance which excited the highest indignation in Sir Christopher, and caused him, during three or four years afterwards, to harass Mr. Halse and some of his friends with a constant succession of prosecutions, none of which were ultimately successful, and almost all of which were abandoned without being brought into court. Besides these two rivals, there was a third candidate, a Mr. Mackinnon, a stranger to this neighbourhood, a gentleman who I understand had before offered himself with slight prospect of success at Ipswich and Callington. He came down ostensibly unconnected with either of the leading parties in the borough; but soon after his arrival connected himself with Sir Christopher Hawkins. Out of a total of 300 votes, Mackinnon is said to have had upwards of 100. These three were the bona fide candidates. But a question having been raised in the course of the election as to the eligibility of the two foremost candidates, whose offices in the Corporation were for some reason or other alleged to disqualify them from taking their seats in Parliament for this borough. Sir Christopher is said to have requested Mr. Ellis (late a solicitor in London) to offer himself as a fourth candidate, to whom he transferred two votes, in order that if the present return should be annulled by the House of Commons, Mackinnon and Ellis might be entitled to claim the seats—a measure which was very promptly met by Mr. Halse, who in like manner requested Mr. Williams, the barrister, to offer himself, and transferred to him four votes.

IRELAND.

CITY OF DUBLIN ELECTION.

From the Freeman's Journal, June 13.

On Monday morning, the usual forms having been observed, the sheriffs declared Henry Grattan and George Ogle Moore, Esqrs. duly elected to represent the city of Dublin in the New Imperial Parliament. Mr. Moore and Mr. Grattan severally addressed the electors. When the latter had concluded, his friends loudly called for a chairing, to which Mr. Grattan freely assented, and he was accordingly carried to his house in Stephen's-green.

The idea of a chairing being very sudden, the horses were taken from Mr. Grattan's carriage, and it was made to answer the purpose of a triumphal car; Mr. Hugh O'Connor and Mr. Humphreys sat on the dicky, Mr. James Grattan was in the body of the vehicle, and Mr. W. Murphy and Mr. Kirwan behind. The procession moved along Capel-street, Bolton-street, Dorset-street, Rutland-square, Sackville-street, Westmoreland-street, Grafton-street, and along the Green to Mr. Grattan's own house, where he addressed the assembled multitude, for a considerable time, and with much animation; they then separated.

After the resignation of Sir Robert Shaw, we are informed that a deputation from some of the leading interests in the city waited upon Sir Richard Steele, with an earnest request that he would again become a candidate for the representation of the city, but ineffectually, as he could not be induced to alter the resolution he had formed, of not again coming forward.

When Mr. Plunkett was declared elected yesterday, his friends insisted on chairing him home—and according he was placed in a chair, and carried on the shoulders of the gentlemen through the courts of the college. The crowd was so great, however, and the chair so unsteady, that feeling himself insecure, he got out and walked home.

Mr. Plunkett, yesterday, entertained at dinner, the provost, fellows, and scholars of Trinity College, on his re-election to represent the University in Parliament.

Waterford.—The high sheriff of the county of Waterford has not yet announced the day for the commencement of the election; but we are enabled to state it will be on Thursday, the 22d inst. the longest day in the year. It is expected that the contest will be terminated before the end of the month.—Evening Mail.

SCOTLAND.

From the Glasgow Courier.

Lord Fife.—We are happy to understand that this nobleman will be speedily elevated to the British Peerage, which will, of course, make it unnecessary for him to continue his contest in the North against the Grant and Huntley interests.

Berwickshire.—The Hon. Capt. Anthony Maitland will be returned for Berwickshire without opposition.

From the Courant.

County of Edinburgh.—Sir George Clerk, the present member, will be returned without opposition.

County of Haddington.—Lord John Hay has secured his unanimous election for this county.

Selkirkshire.—Wm. Elliot Lockhart, Esq. of Borthwickbrae, will be again returned for this county.

Perthshire.—Sir George Murray will be unanimously re elected.

Caithness.—The representation of this county will be keenly contested between George Sinclair, Esq. yr. of Ulbster, and the Honourable James Sinclair, brother to the Earl of Caithness.

Roxburghshire.—Henry F. Scott, Esq. yr. of Harden, who was lately elected for Roxburghshire, has again offered himself to the freeholders of that county, and no opposition is expected to be made to his being again returned.

County of Elgin.—We understand that the Honourable Colonel Francis W. Grant, of Grant, will be again returned for the county.

County of Inverness.—It is understood that the Right Hon. Charles Grant, Vice-President of the Board of Trade, will be again returned for this county.

County of Fife.—Capt. James Wemyss, the present member, will be unanimously re-elected.

The Right Hon. W. Dundas was this morning elected Member of Parliament for the City of Edinburgh.

CAMBRIDGE, Friday Afternoon.

CLOSE OF THE POLL.

The important contest for the representation of this University has this day been brought to a close, Mr. Bankes having, at eleven o'clock this morning, consented to the closing of the poll at one, instead of keeping it open till noon to-morrow, as had previously been arranged. Notice of this alteration was immediately posted about the town, and by half-past twelve o'clock the hall and galleries of the Senate-house were crowded to excess. Precisely at one the poll-books were closed, and the Vice-Chancellor rising from his seat, briefly announced the fact by saying, "Gentlemen, the poll is closed." The numbers, as follow, were then proclaimed by the Proctor:—

Palmerston	631
Bankes	507
Goulburn	437

Sir John Copley and Lord Palmerston were then declared to be duly elected, and the usual oaths being andministered, and the return to the writ filled up, the Senate was dissolved.

Mrs. Towers gave a grand ball on Friday night at her residence in Mansfield-street, Portland-place, which was attended by upwards of six hundred of the first persons of distinction. Dancing commenced about half-past eleven, with Weippert's celebrated Cherry-ripe Quadrilles, most exquisitely performed by his own band.

NOTICES TO CORRESPONDENTS.

In THE AGE of last Sunday we have to correct the following errors in our article on dramatic music. For "grouts," read "sweets," and for FALLIS read TALLIS.

Our correspondent from Hertford is informed, that we were aware of Mr. DUNCOMBE'S late arrest for 300*l., and of* MADAME'S visits when in durance vile. We are also aware of the arrest, during the election, for 1400*l. and the Under-sheriff's becoming answerable for the same; and all we can say is, we would sooner be than us. Our correspondent is referred to an article in this day's paper on the subject.*

"An Elector of Rottenborough" is too long for insertion.

"Not Prone to Fighting," from Mayo, has made its appearance. Its writer, whose wishes are therein anticipated, is referred to our musical corner.

We are too much occupied this week to attend to the Opera information forwarded to us.

THE AGE.

LONDON, JUNE 18.

THE LONDON MEMBERS, &c.

We take it for granted that there is some sort of reason for every thing under the sun, if we could find it out; and under this feeling, we presume that there has been some reason or other for the election of Messrs. WOOD and WAITHMAN. City Members have been, it is true, not always the most extraordinary persons for wisdom or wit in the world, and we must be prepared to make some allowances for the education of the counter. A considerable deficit of good breeding and grammar might be taken for granted; gentlemanlike acquirement should not be too sternly demanded; and every thing that bears the rank of literature must be out of the question. But we might be allowed to stipulate for common sense, for common breeding, and for common knowledge. In point of situation and means, we should not be remarkably scrupulous; but travelling bag-men and retail measurers of muslin would certainly have been among the last that we should have dreamed of. However, the good citizens have done the deed, and they may now exult in having placed in parliament a pair of individuals that never could have thought of sitting in the company of gentlemen; in having turned into counsellors of the nation a pair of empty coxcombs, that never exhibited a grain of understanding beyond that of mob-brawlers; and in having given the management of their rights into hands to which we firmly believe the most self-sacrificing patriot among them would not confide the management of his most trivial personal concerns.

So much for the vox populi—so much for the sagacity, public spirit, and manly determination of the London Livery!—No! we will not do the true London Livery this injustice—their crime is of another class: indolence and fastidiousness. Not half the electors polled. The gentlemen, the intelligent, the patriotic, to an extraordinary and most culpable degree, shrunk from the struggle, and left the hustings to be filled by the vulgar, the beggared, and the ignorant. On what principle could two such men as WOOD and WAITHMAN have been suffered to stand Members for London? If noisy and foolish prattle wanted representatives, here they have doubtless found the true ones; if the rambling, rude, and bloated insolence of mob politics wanted representatives, we say well and wisely have they chosen; if the clamourers for blind reform wanted to be led by the blind, we say then, Long live the new Members!

In Northumberland the GREYS are making a grand crusade. They take the field, in prodigious numbers, in honour of his Holiness. We could not have thought that there were so many GREYS on the face of the earth. Poor Lord HOWICK is the true sufferer in all this—what is sport to others, is death to him—no bantam, carried about in a cage from town to town to crow at the entrance and exit, and clap his wings whenever his feeder ordered him to make battle, was ever so weary. There is a vast deal of eating, drinking, driving, and oratory going on. This is all as it should be. The populace have a right to expect some amusement once in seven years, and as Lord HOWICK will be as mute as a LORD in the House, and be just as manly, munificent and gracious, as his lordly father out of it, they will not have a speech nor a shilling for the next seven years. LAMBTON—bilious and bitter as a Reformer should be—sycophantic and haughty as becomes the son-in-law of my LORD—and empty and tiresome as suits his own gifts and accomplishments—is the travelling talker of the party. He leads the caravan, and harangues in honour of his Bear; protesting, by all his hopes of pence or popularity, that there is not such another Bear in the North of England, that he is the legitimate offspring of the original Bear, and promises to be every way its equal, in his dimensions and his dancing, in the course of years. The unfortunate and weary pupil then dances, and the show moves on to the next village. The troop is strong—Lady LOUISAS, ANGELINAS, CELESTINAS, and SEREPHINAS, flourish their fair arms, and display their sister-captivations from the dickey; GREYS of all heights, costumes and colours, mountebank it on the roof—a travelling Doctor behind, busies himself with preparing toasts and speeches, one of which is a dose, and at each stop, a new bumpkin, hired from the town, is mounted, trumpet in hand, to announce the entry. Ainsi va le monde.

BROUGHAM, consumptive, and consumed by the workings of his own spirit, is worrying himself to death, and vastly amusing his contemptuous opponents, by the burlesque of standing for Westmoreland. Defeat cannot place him in any situation in which he has not stood before, and is thus lightly borne. Thus they say in the army, that a man once flogged is sure to get flogged again: the pain is forgotten, and he is accustomed to the disgrace. BROUGHAM'S cuticle is callous long ago, even before the application of Mr. GOURLAY'S scarificator, and he will undergo his hustings-torture with sardonic magnanimity. We shall see him smile, with the mastery over pain, of an Indian in the act of being scalped, or an impaled Turk—nay, we shall hear him talk of triumph, and run away—and of independence---and take refuge in Winchelsea.

We are rather inclined to think, from some circumstances which have transpired within the last week, that we have given offence to Mr. THOMAS RAIKES, for which we are really extremely sorry, and are almost at a loss to discern the cause. If it has arisen through some reference made by us to any of the later occurrences of the worthy citizen's life, we cannot do better than use every means in our power to rectify the error; and with a view of so doing, as we have rather minutely detailed some recent transactions, we will mention an early one, to balance matters as well as possible, and case the old gentleman's mind. When RAIKES was first introduced into what is called GOOD SOCIETY, he gave several very elegant dinners, at one of which the celebrated Mr. BRUMMELL was present, who, on being asked what kind of dinner it was, said, "Perfect, quite perfect, I assure you; every thing in the best possible taste: but the effect of the whole was destroyed the instant THE HOST seated himself at table!"

Imagining that the people may be anxious to know the pretensions of some of their recently-elected Representatives, we have deemed it a duty to make every proper investigation of the merits of the respective parties; and the first we have examined are those of THOMAS DUNCOMBE, Esq., just returned for the borough of Hertford. Among the many electioneering squibs that the fertile brain of mankind has brought forth at this eventful crisis, has appeared the following, which, as it exactly answers the point we would arrive at, we cannot do better than publish:—

TO THE INDEPENDENT ELECTORS OF THE BOROUGH OF HERTFORD.

GENTLEMEN,—The time is now arrived when the Candidates for your Representation in Parliament should be shown in their true colours; I have, therefore, taken off the mask of one of them, Thomas Slingsby Duncombe, Esquire, and will shew him as he is, not as he has represented himself to be; for example:—

I have thought it right, Gentlemen, to lay these facts before you,—Can you hesitate! Can you be weak enough to vote for such a man as THOMAS SLINGSBY DUNCOMBE, Esq. or regard, as friends, Persons who have recommended such a Character to your choice? A REAL FRIEND TO THE ELECTORS.

June 10, 1826.

Whether any more of these "frail memorials" remain behind, or not, we cannot pretend to determine, nor can we take upon ourselves to decide upon the particular motive that induced THOMAS DUNCOMBE, Esq. to try for a seat in Parliament—but certain it is that now he is there, he will be free, for the future, from all such impertinent visitors.

According to the above statement, the month of May last, and particularly the 31st of that month, must have been a very busy time with THOMAS SLINGSBY DUNCOMBE, Esq. M.P.

We have received the following letter, and insert it with much pleasure:—

TO THE EDITOR OF THE AGE.

SIR, Newselles, June 14.

I shall be much obliged to you, if you will in yonr next number of THE AGE, contradict the paragraph that appeared in it last Sunday relative to my daughter's marriage with Mr. John Mills, the statement not being correct.

I remain, Sir,
Your obedient humble servant,
ORBY HUNTER.

We are extremely sorry to have been instrumental in the circulation of such a mis-statement—but we were probably more disposed to give credence to the assertion of our correspondent, from the fact of ourselves recollecting that, about two years ago, Mr. JOHN MILLS was requested to suspend his visits in Grosvenor-place, from his marked attentions in the quarter referred to, and that he is now thicker there than ever.

CROCKFORD CONSPIRACY!

QUARTETTO,

BY LORDS GLENGALL AND BINGHAM, AND MESSRS. T. RAIKES AND BALL HUGHES.

Air—Bow, wow, wow.

We are by many looked upon the first men of THE AGE, Sirs,
And certainly we are the first each Sunday in its page, Sirs;
But as unto its ridicule no longer we will give in,
Let's prove, at least, that we are worthy of the age we live in.
Bow, wow, wow.

Let each of us set down his wrongs, and say how he'll redress them,
And make these fellows answer us for daring to confess them:
So as in Rome conspiracy the fashion was, let's summon
Our courage! and what cash we have!! and be at once "a Rum 'un."
Bow, wow, wow.

LORD GLENGALL.

Air—BOBBIN JOAN.

Though not worth a pound,
Mother says she'll lend me
All her Irish ground,
Merely to befriend me!
So we both have swore,
In a monstrous fury,
To bring them all before
The MIDDLESEX GRAND JURY!

Though they've said what's true
Of this noble high belle,
Yet, 'twixt me and you,
TRUTH is thought a LIBEL!
So the reason why
I've thus bent my mind, is
That, if you tell a lie,
It nothing of the kind is!

I subscribe my name,
For at least "a hundred"—
Though from whence it came
Every one has wondered!
As in Venice once,
By PIERRE a plot begun was,
They can't call him a dunce
That, as a Peer, in one was!

Chorus.

We are by many looked upon the first men of THE AGE, Sirs,
And certainly we are the first each Sunday in its page, Sirs;
But as unto its ridicule no longer we will give in,
Let's prove, at least, that we are worthy of the age we live in.
Bow, wow, wow.

LORD BINGHAM.

Air—TIGHT LITTLE ISLAND.

My name is Lord BINGHAM,
Whose merits to sing 'em
Would take up of foolscap a ream, Sirs,
And is'nt it now hard
To pass for a coward
Where lately I passed in esteem, Sirs!
They've dared to be writing,
I'm not "prone to fighti[illegible]".

(No soldier of PEACE should be breaker) ;
But wasn't I firmish,
In that bloody skirmish
With MOORE, the accoutrement-maker!
On consideration,
A crim. information
I'll move—as the best way to screen us ;
And that they may not, Sirs,
Think us in a plot, Sirs,
We'll have ONE ATTORNEY between us!

Chorus.

We are by many looked upon the first men of THE AGE, Sirs,
And certainly we are the first each Sunday in its page, Sirs ;
But as unto its ridicule no longer we will give in,
Let's prove, at least, that we are worthy of the age we live in.
Bow, wow, wow.

TOM RAIKES.

Air—I WAS THE boy for bewitching 'em.

As DICKY GLENGALL has just told me
That truth is a libel, so they Think me devilish plain who behold me,
'Tis PLAIN have no right so to say!

At Oatlands, for fun, though they name me
"TOM-tit," yet it is not a rule
Why any, who wish to defame me,
Should dare to nick-name me TOM-fool.

And hating, for which they me rate so,
MY OWN AGE to any to tell,
You can't be surprised that I hate so
THE AGE of these fellows as well!

Chorus.

We are by many looked upon the first men of THE AGE, Sirs,
And certainly we are the first each Sunday in its page, Sirs ;
But as unto its ridicule no longer we will give in,
Let's prove, at least, that we are worthy of the age we live in.
Bow, wow, wow.

BALL HUGHES.

Air.—THE NONPAREIL.

J'ai EU ma PLIE
(Twixt you and me)
And I don't care a d——
For all their "goes,"
As she best knows,
Quel noble DAIM I am!

So if you say
I am to pay
"A hundred" now in part ;
I give, what all
In French would call,
Un canton, with my heart!

Chorus.

We are by many looked upon the first men of THE AGE, Sirs,
And certainly we are the first each Sunday in its page, Sirs ;
But as unto its ridicule no longer we will give in,
Let's prove, at least, that we are worthy of the age we live in.
Bow, wow, wow.

The above musical composition was forwarded to us some few days ago, before the circumstances to which it has reference was communicated to us, and now we are in possession of them, we cannot but congratulate the noble and distinguished composers on this witty display of their intentions. Abstracting ourselves, however, from a consideration of this lighter matter, we are necessarily led into an examination of the motives that have induced these celebrated individuals to embark in that line of proceeding of which the events of the last week have let us somewhat into the secret—but as the majority of our readers may not completely understand the bearing of the business, we may venture to be a little minute.

It had been contemplated for some time by several gentlemen, supporters of CROCKFORD'S and WHITE'S Menagerie in St. James's-street, to enter into a combination, and at the same time a subscription, to adopt some legal proceedings against this Paper, for the purpose of castigating those harmless sallies that have from time to time appeared in it; but on an exposition by us of their intentions in March last, it was abandoned pro momento. About three weeks since, however, the subject was renewed, principally at the instigation of the Earl of GLENGALL (backed by his liberal MAMMA), who egged on the accomplished Mr. THOMAS RAIKES, who persuaded his particular friend Mr. BALL HUGHES —and who, all three, with some difficulty induced my "LORD LUCAN'S learned heir" to enter the lists. Lord BINGHAM, being a military man of some distinction, was elected as the public champion—and as the motion for a rule nisi (moved on Tuesday last, but REFUSED) will by this time have apprised the public generally—a very sorry champion he has appeared. As far as the individual charge brought against us by his LORDSHIP goes, we beg most distinctly to say, that in the innocent joke made by us against this Nobleman's late settlement of an affair of honour, not the slightest imputation was intended to be conveyed against his established courage, as an officer in his MAJESTY'S service. Without presuming to arraign the professional wisdom of Lord BINGHAM'S legal advisers, we cannot but lament that his LORDSHIP did not receive such counsel as would enable him to draw the line of difference between a want of that bravery for which this gallant Lord, in his ten years' campaign, has been always distinguished, and an infringement, as the learned and upright Judge BAYLEY very properly called it, of a moral and religious duty. No one could impugn this NOBLE LORD for not being "prone to fight" a duel—neither did we ; but if we had dared to accuse him of a want of that courage he has ever displayed ON SERVICE, we should have deserved all the punishment he proposed to inflict upon us.

My Lord BINGHAM'S motion was backed, on the same day, by the preferment of an indictment by my Lord GLENGALL, before the GRAND JURY, for our accusing HIS LORDSHIP'S mother of being formerly an extensive smuggler, as well as for an impeachment of HIS LORDSHIP'S "parts of speech;" our testimony upon the one, and our opinion upon the other, shall be reserved for "the hereafter," at our defence.

With a view to catch us in every direction, Messrs. THOMAS RAIKES and BALL HUGHES, had a few days before, served us with a notice of action, each laying their damages at 10,000*l.*; and although there is no doubt that the said sum would be extremely acceptable to the parties concerned, it is necessary to say a few words before it is awarded them. One of the principal charges brought against us by TOM RAIKES, is that of imputing to him UGLINESS—for which we feel really sorry—it is a misfortune for which every man is to be pitied; and though no man can be more pitted than TOM RAIKES is, it is nevertheless "no fault of his'n." It is on the authority of BERKELEY CRAVEN we made such a charge, whose word we have often received, that Mr. R. was discharged from the Ugly Hospital, as incurable," and that from this very same calamity, he was always designated by the name of BELLZEBUB, at Eton. However, as we find Mr. RAIKES'S opinion is so very different on the subject, we shall certainly make further enquiry before we repeat such an offensive appellation.

Mr. HUGHES'S ground of action is principally confined to our notice of his recent coquetry with a part of his Oatlands establishment. BALL is a good-natured lad, and we really feel well disposed towards him: but we must, nevertheless, when the time arrives, give all the testimony with which we are prepared, relative to the late dismissal (and the CAUSE THEREOF) of both the ladies' maids from this quondam Royal residence.

With these remarks we shall dismiss our worthy assailants for the present—we really cannot congratulate them on the legal advice under which they have acted, because we certainly gave them much better advice four months ago—however, having followed that of other people, and rejected ours, we can only wish them every success in their spirited undertaking.

Having commented at large, in another part of our paper, on the result of the GENERAL ELECTION in some quarters, we are induced to say a few words on its situation and circumstances in others. The return of Mr. BISH for Leominster, furnishes the subject of a Parliamentary investigation, before the right of the sitting Member can be determined; arising from the professional adviser of Mr. ROWLAND STEPHENSON having pronounced Mr. BISH'S ineligibility, on the position of his being a contractor with Government. All this is very entertaining for the good people of Leominster, who are anxious for as many of the sweets of a contested Election as their neighbours; but is very far from the point in dispute—a contraction with Government, FOR THE PUBLIC SERVICE, is certainly not eligible, but a contractor for PUBLIC AMUSEMENTS is quite as eligible as any pert citizen, or cockney banker in all Lombard-street; and without going into the question of the unfriendly or impudent conduct of Mr. STEPHENSON, arising from his suddenly starting into an opposition (merely on the strength of this quibble), after Mr. BISH had for many months past been expending some thousands in the town, we will content ourselves with recommending Sir ROWLAND to save himself the unnecessary expence of a Parliamentary scrutiny.

We are truly delighted to see the complete defeat PETER MOORE is sustaining at Coventry, which, while it will deprive him of a seat in the Senate, will also deprive him of "a good round sum," as Chairman of sundry joint stock companies, entirely procured by his dignified title of M.P.; but it is a proper retribution on the most consummate impudence and ignorance that ever one man was clothed with. We shall rejoice the more in Mr. ELLICE'S overthrow, if it induce him to oppose the present nonentities who aspire to the representation of Middlesex, of the probability of which, report is very strong.

There is nothing more diverting than an examination of the proceedings at Preston—while it furnishes you with an account of the very lowest order of electioneering squabble, it also lets you into a knowledge of the principles and minds of men, with which you before only professed to be acquainted. It is impossible to form a better idea of the vilest slang that ever fell from the lip of the vilest rabble, than the language used by COBBETT conveys—it must terminate in a fight yet, if the fellow has the slightest pretentions to the support of the words he puts into use; but with this we should not think of quarrelling—it would be a most becoming wind-up to this vagabond contest altogether, and the punishment would be duly awarded to those who could hit the hardest. But supposing, by way of a joke, that COBBETT were returned to Parliament—it is ten chances to one but on the very first night he sat there he would give the lie to the CHANCELLOR of the EXCHEQUER, and pull the SPEAKER'S nose. He would blackguard Mr. CANNING for about five minutes, and get kicked out of the House the next five. Oh, ye men of Preston, ye are really a nice set!

Every other kind of intelligence connected with the ELECTION will be found in our inner pages.

VAUXHALL.

The Proprietors of this place of entertainment (one of whom, by the way, is the new Member for Chippenham) really deserve well of the public, for in previous seasons they had thrown great variety into their entertainments, and this year have established a feature of the most attractive and commanding quality. In an anxiety to restore to these Gardens a phalanx of musical ability that might compete with the reputation they once enjoyed in this respect, the Directors have entered into engagements with nearly every singer of the least importance in the country, thereby immeasurably surpassing any other effort ever made by their predecessors. The Concert Room is very handsomely decorated, and, what is of far more consequence, admirably adapted for sound; and with all these advantages, it ceases to be a matter of surprise that such success has hitherto attended the undertaking. Indeed, if there had been little other aid, the appearance of Mr. BRAHAM would have insured them prosperity. His performances here have only re-convinced us all, of which there was no need, that whether in chapel or on the stage, in hall or in bower, he is the great enchanter of his art—his powers seem as exhaustless as the beauties of the best music they ever executed, and though surrounded by every proficient of his day, they become all extinguished at the shrine of his vast superiority. The experiment, which many doubted, of bringing this our great master to his present scene of action, has surpassed the expectations even of the sanguine—he is heard to the very best advantage, from his contiguity with the auditor, and by the direction of that good taste which introduces popular ballad, in lieu of the foreign trumpery which some others sing, under the idea of "astonishing the natives," he has become the idol of the place—but there is no one, and there never will be any one, that can for a moment be compared with BRAHAM.

The diversity of amusement here is well suited to the diversity of company—we have dark corners for those who bring their own supper, and light ones for those who procure it on the spot—fountains playing in one part, and flutes and fiddles in another—fireworks going off here, champagne going off there, and that evergreen of Vauxhall, the all-accommodating Mr. SIMPSON, going off any where in the direction he imagines his presence may be of the least utility. We really, in every point of view, congratulate the public on the liberality with which this favourite place of their recreations is conducted, and next to that, we congratulate the Proprietors on the success which thus far has accompanied their exertions, and which will even increase, with the advance of the season, as long as their only real enemy, RAIN, does not shower its favours on them more plentifully than it at present has done.

THEATRES.

A very agreeable farce, under the title of 'Twixt the Cup and the Lip, was produced at the Haymarket on Monday last. It is from the pen of one of our best living dramatists, Mr. POOLE, and remarkable for the smartness of dialogue, and disposition of the dramatis personæ, which have so distinguished this gentleman's numerous productions. If there is no particular novelty of character in either of the personages introduced to our notice, the quality of mind is so varied and so well displayed that we prefer the "old friend with a new face" to any speculative importation that could possibly be submitted to us. It would be supererogation to individualise the respective performances, from the circumstance of the chief responsibility resting on the shoulders of Mr. LISTON, for whom it was evidently written, whose exertions would have redeemed an indifferent piece, but which, when added to so agreeable an entertainment as this, produced every effect that could be desired. Mr. MORRIS is fortunate in having so entertaining an author as Mr. POOLE in his Cabinet, and the author is equally fortunate in having such an entertaining assistant as LISTON, to forward his wishes.

We consider ourselves almost bound to direct the attention of every one to the announcement of Mr. ELLISTON'S benefit for Thursday next, which at this particular crisis is entitled to the gratuitous exertions of most men of the profession, and the utmost patronage of the public. During a Lesseeship of seven years, this gentleman has expended a very considerable sum of money in support of Drury-lane Theatre, and in furthering the interests of the Drama; and while we are perfectly aware that we may be reminded of the many irregularities to which the present disastrous state of his concernments may be attributed, we do not think that position ought to be taken into contemplation now. This is not the period to enter into examination, accusation, or palliation—our purpose is to point out the state in which this Theatre will be transferred by him to his successor, and contrasting that with the state in which it was leased to him, and to adjudge and recommend him accordingly. On the strength of that scrutiny we can have no hesitation in calling upon every one to pay a tribute to Mr. ELLISTON'S spirit and indefatigability, by attending the benefit, announced in his son's name, for Thursday next—and discharging thus a feeling of duty to a most accomplished actor, and at least a zealous manager—let them bequeath to himself alone, who will have alone to suffer by them, any indiscretion he may have ever committed. This latter consideration uld never have been hinted at by us, if the many-lied gue of slander had not been so busy in depreciating e character of this most consummate performer, under e rascally desire the many sycophants of this life in- lge, of traducing a man when he is "fallen too far to r a farther fall." Wherever Mr. ELLISTON may di- ct his steps, and to what he may apply his great nius, he will have at all times our warmest wishes his welfare; and so, for the present, farewell King BERT!

We very shrewdly suspect there is some humbug at e bottom of the benefit at Covent Garden for VON EBER's survivors. The term is an ambignous one, asmuch as Messrs. KEMBLE, WILLETT, and FORBES, ing survivors of the great composer, as well as his nily, we are left in the dark as to which of the sur- ors this "benefit" is for. It is very well known that EBER was engaged for a certain sum to write the era of Oberon, and was not to receive any other nolument—and that, moreover, the revival of Der reischutz, first announced for his benefit, was an en- ely nominal one, of which he was not to receive one thing, having given the use of his name to the ma- gerial triumvirs---and taking this, therefore, into nsideration, and also knowing the SCOTS usual opi- ons of charity, our "dukedomto a beggarly denier," is is some crotchet in SAWNIE's head.

We are extremely happy at all times to be instru- ental in doing any one the least good, and with this ew, therefore, we congratulate Mr. ABBOTT, the blin Manager, on the effect our comments of Sunday t produced upon Madame VESTRIS. She has re- ived the 500l. in advance, and has consequently con- nted to go to Ireland, and we believe starts on Thurs- y—though her conduct in the transaction remains as per last," the consequences that might have be- len the Manager are happily removed. From Dublin e proceeds to Cork and Belfast. Miss PATON was to g last evening for the first time in the Manchester heatre, and sings the ensuing week at Liverpool, hich place Mr. MACREADY has just left to perform at enbigh. In consequence of a Mr. TURNER, spangle- aker, of Little Britain. having expressed his opi- ons somewhat too freely, on Wednesday last, of our exhaustible friend NINNY, we find the following touch the sublime in yesterday's Herald:—

TO THE EDITOR OF THE MORNING HERALD.

SIR—In a report which you have given in your paper of Wed- sday, purporting to be a Meeting of Mr. Elliston's creditors, name has been unnecessarily introduced by Mr. Turner, in nnection with the arrangement I made for Mr. Elliston with s creditors, a few months since. I will not occupy your time, r lose my own, by a lengthened reply to these effusions of bad te and misrepresentation, but content myself by assuring you, t the whole of this notable speech (as I found it reported) is stitute alike of truth and good breeding.

I am, &c. your obedient servant,

Covent-garden. G. H. ROBINS.

From a perusal of this, there is nothing left for the ck of Little Britain but to "show fight," and that the most gentlemanly way; for if he should attempt meet the Auctioneer in any other manner, it must be the said TURNER's bodily peril—for, by virtue of his ofession, he will to a certainty knock him down.

FOREIGN INTELLIGENCE.

ccounts from Leipswick state that the Grand Duke Constantine not proceed to Moscow, as it is feared that his presence there ld cause some new commotion.

he fall of the funds at Vienna is attributed to the Emperor of tria having experienced a relapse of his disorder. His journey uxemburg is deferred.

rivate letters from Vera Cruz, of the 23d of April, mention arrival of the Tweed there. Camacho, it was said, had reco- d from his late indisposition, and it was expected he would ark on board the above vessel, to proceed to England, for the ose of arranging the subsisting differences between this ntry and Mexico, upon the subject of the treaty.

ew York Papers to the 24th ult. and Philadelphia to the 21st, e been received. The following, which is from a Philadelphia er of the 17th of May, is the only article we find in them of interest:—

Mr. Morier, the British commissioner to Mexico, who re- ly landed at New York, left Mexico in March, without having eeded in his negociation with the government of that republic. British minister was very desirous that one of the Mexican isters should be deputed to England, in order to explain the ctions to Mr. Canning's proposals. President Victoria yield- o this desire, and informed the senate of his resolution. The y replied that they had a right to participate in the nomina- as the constitution says expressly, that all diplomatic en- s shall be appointed with the consent of the senate. The Pre- nt disagreed, and urged that the minister in question would be to continue in London, the negociations which had commenced lexico: the senate persisting, the President reluctantly sub- ed the nomination of the secretary of war, Gomez Pedraza, heir approval. Senor Pedraza had but one vote. The debate he senate on the subject, as reported in the Aguila, is not out interest, and the distinction takeu by the President not a singular. This matter bears a remarkable affinity to one of questions which have been "lengthily" debated by our own le during the present session of our congress."

y the last arrival of New York papers, to the 24th ult. are ces from Peru and Mexico. Bolivar had returned to Lima t the 13th of March from the upper province, and had fixed 20th of April for the assembling of a Peruvian Congress in a. Rodil late Governor of Callao, had embarked on board English frigate. It is confirmed that a fire occurred at the om-house at Vera Cruz on the 7th of April: the amount of ls consumed, chiefly of French manufacture, and the greater silk, is estimated at 400,000 dollars. The measure of sending Camacho, one of the Mexican ministers, to England, for the ose of negociating the disputed points in the treaty, had rgone discussion in the Congress, and had been decided in affirmative. It was supposed, therefore, that M. Camacho ld very shortly proceed on that mission. His appointment given great satisfaction in Mexico, where a knowledge of his acter had inspired much confidence of his ultimate success. advices from Mexico are to the 15th, and from Vera Cruz to 3d April.

MISCELLANEOUS.

A shocking and fatal accident occurred at Newton, near Manchester, on Thursday se'nnight. Robert Johnson and George Hyde, and a son of the latter, were employed in whitewashing and repairing the interior of a house inhabited by one Chadwick, a shawl-weaver. They had finished the lower rooms, and one side of a chamber above, when, in removing a bed, the boy found a pistol. "Let me look at it," said Johnson; so the boy gave it to him. "It is not loaded," he observed. "Oh, no," said the boy. Whereupon he touched the trigger; it flashed—it went off—and old Hyde groaned, and fell upon the bed. He said, "Oh, Robert, I thought it had something in," and immediately expired.—Verdict—"Accidental death."

Mr. WILKIE.—This gentleman is, we believe, now at Venice. A correspondent of the Leeds Mercury, in a letter dated from Rome, in January last, says, "Mr. Wilkie, the modern Hogarth, who is travelling for the restoration of his health, which was very seriously affected before his quitting England, is now, I am happy to say, greatly improved. He had scarcely touched a pencil since leaving England, till he saw the pilgrims at supper in one of the large halls at the Trinita de' Pellegrini in Rome, and he has made a sketch, I understend, of that interesting scene, which will ere long, it is to be hoped, be worked up by his brilliant pencil into a painting.

THE SIMPLE DORIC OR GENUINE DARTMOOR—(From the Plymouth Journal)—A countryman, a short time since, met a gentleman on horseback, and put the following questions to him:—"Measter, you ant a seed no such thing as never a calve no where at all here abouts ante."

The lady of a dashing baronet has surrendered to her husband 153 billets d'amour with which her virtue has been assailed by a gallant officer, holding the rank of a Colonel in a most distinguished corps. Our concern would be lessened, however, if we had any prospect of laying before our readers those exquisite morceaux, which, if report may be believed, outdo all that has hitherto been done in the way of amatory epistles.—Devizes and Wiltshire Gazette.

DEATH OF LADY STRANGFORD—On the 20th of May died here (St. Petersburgh,) Lady Strangford, wife of the English Ambassador at this Court, after a severe illness, caused by the voyage during winter, when she was in an advanced state of pregnancy. She was not 38 years of age, and leaves seven children, the youngest only six months old. She was a tender mother, an affectionate wife, and a pattern of every female virtue.—St. Petersburgh Journal.

We have received the Oriental Spectator to the 30th of April. We find in it an article dated Symrna, April 28. If the accounts which it gives could be depended upon, it would certainly result from them the Greek cause is in a desperate state; for it would seem that it has become necessary for the English to burn their ships for their piratical attacks on commerce, and Mavrocordato is said to have fled, to escape a violent death. The last Court of Admiralty at Napoli di Romania has resigned, because it would not have its decrees dictated to it by pirates, at the point of the poniard. That Court, it is added, has been re-organized, and three Cephalonians now compose it, who are known, from their excesses, and who will act in concert with the pirates.

At the Guildhall Police-office last week, a very fashionably-dressed lady, though neither young nor handsome, whose name was not mentioned, applied to be allowed to make oath that certain statements and reports set forth in her affidavit, which went strongly to affect her character for chastity, were entirely false and groundless. Mr. Alderman Ansley inquired what use was to be made of this affidavit, and whether it was to be published. The lady replied that it was not. No use whatever would be made of the document, but if his worship would be so kind as to suffer her to be sworn in the presence of a gentleman who accompanied her, it would allay the irritation which existed in her husband's mind. The Alderman immediately allowed the oath to be administered, and expressed his hope that it would produce the expected result.

THE SILK TRADE.—On Monday evening a numerous meeting of the journeymen employed in the above trade, took place at M'Kenzie's Chapel, Church-street, Bethnal-green, for the purpose of receiving the report of their Committee, and considering what measures it might be expedient to adopt, to procure from the master manufacturers a fair remuneration for their labour. At a former meeting, they expressed their satisfaction at the interest taken in their welfare by his Majesty's Government; and in consequence of the suggestions then made, notwithstanding the arrangements at the Custom-house, not a yard of foreign manufactures had been imported. On the present occasion, they expressed an opinion that the alteration did not afford that protection to the trade to which they were entitled. It was resolved, that a deputation should wait on the manufacturers, and remonstrate with them on the reduced scale of their payments, which was at least 30 per cent. lower than last year, though provisions had risen 40 per cent. since that period.

To the Free and Independent Electors of Great Britain who have not already given, or promised their Votes, are very respectfully solicited to vote for John Ingram and Son, to supply them with cheap and good Chairs, Bedsteads, Tables, Bason-stands, Drawers, Flower-stands, Garden and Rustic Seats, &c. &c. where every article will be found cheaper than can be got any where else, as for instance, Japanned rush seat Chairs, all Patterns, all colours, and all the same low price of 3s. 6d. per Chair, Impregnated Rosewood Windows, and all other kinds equally low. —N.B. Observe the sign of the Rustic House, No. 29, City Road, near Finsbury Square.

The village of Marsh Gibbon, Buckinghamshire, was the scene of much riot and disturbance on Monday last. A club feast was held at the Grey-hound there on that day, and after dinner, according to a custom (which ought at the present day to be dispensed with) a badger was baited, when the Reverend Mr. Crayecraft, Curate of the place, the Reverend Mr. Lee, Curate of Preston Bissett, and two dissenting clergymen interfered, and desired the persons to desist from their cruel sport; but speaking rather authoritatively, the mobility, already heated with beer, became still more excited, and a disturbance ensued, in which the Rev. Gentlemen were covered with mud and dirt, and were obliged to desist from their humane endeavours. Mr. Craycratt, we understand, has procured a summons for a blacksmith, who offered to fight him, to appear before the Bench of Magistrates at Buckingham.

The appearance of Mrs. RADCLIFFE's Romances, Gaston de Blondeville and St. Alban's Abbey, excites, as was naturally to be expected, the highest interest. Her former Works, it will be recollected, became popular immediately on their publication, not only with the numerous class of readers who seek principally for amusement, but also with the finer spirits of the age. Dr. Wharton, Sheridan, Burke, Fox, Cowper, Sir Philip Francis, and the Author of the Pursuits of Literature, have all spoken of Mrs. Radcliffe's Works in terms of the greatest rapture; and latterly, her fame has been augmented by the homage of Sir Walter Scott and Lord Byron. The series of her splendid fictions is now completed by the appearance of Gaston de Blondeville and St. Alban's Abbey, —the last and only remaining productions of her pen.

FUNERAL OF BARON VON WEBER.—This ceremony will be privately performed on Wednesday next. The body will, as originally planned, be deposited for the present in the vault of Moorfields Chapel. The necessary forms of St. Paul's Cathedral would not admit of the intended requiem being performed there; and the proposed conditions respecting it at Moorfields Chapel could not be complied with. The ceremony will therefore be quite private, unattended by any musical performance whatever.

The first day of the 2d of the Grand Matches of 500 sovs. for each, at 100 birds, between Messrs. Ross and Osbaldestone, at 21 yards from the trap, was shot off on Monday last, at the inclosure, near the Red House, Battersea. Betting, three to one on the gun, and even on the match. In the first 25, Mr. Ross killed 20, and Mr. Osbaldestone, 17. In the second, Mr. O. kilied 18, and Mr. Ross, 21. Total, Mr. R. 41, Mr. O. 35. Mr. R. shot remarkably well. To-morrow, the long talked of Rifle match, of 100 shots at a target of peculiar construction, will be shot between Lord Kennedy and Mr. Vernon, for 500 sovs.

Our old and valued friend, Mr. Spring, the box-bookkeeper of Drury-lane theatre, has put forth a most excellent bill of fare for his benefit on Tuesday next. It possesses both variety and novelty, and embraces the whole strength of the company, together with the talented efforts of Miss Lawrence, who, a short time since made so successful a debut on the same boards, in the character of Juliet, and who, on this occasion, will assume, for the first time, the difficult part of Portia in the Merchant of Venice. If we may judge from the capabilities she has hitherto evinced upon the stage, we have no doubt but her performance of this character will prove her a perfect mistress of her profession. Braham and Miss Stephens give their powerful aid, and that fascinating and rich actress, Miss Kelly, is also among the list. Altogether, it cannot fail proving a high treat. and setting aside the claim such a selection has upon public patronage, Mr. Spring's individual claim must be sufficiently strong to command an overflow, having been for nearly twenty years an attentive and faithful servant of the public.

After the manner of the celebrated translation of "Cæsar venit in Galliam summa diligentia," "Cæsar came into Gaul on the top of a diligence"—is one which occurred four days ago at Eton; Anchises in the Elysian fields addresses Æneas with the words "venisti tandem," which was thus classically rendered—"you have come in a tandem."

We received yesterday Lisbon Gazettes to the 26th ult. They speak of the Infanta as applying herself with great zeal to the business of the State, and as having ordered considerable retrenchments to be made in the public expenditure. A solemn religious procession was to take place on the 28th, in expiation of the insults offered to the Holy Sacrament some time since, by impious persons, at which the Infanta intended to be present if her health should permit.

It is rumoured, that there will be a contest for the county of Middlesex, and that Mr. ELLICE, who is now standing for Coventry, but with no chance of success, will be the third candidate.

The city and neighbourhood of Exeter were the scene of a tremendous tempest on Saturday last. At the village of Alphington, near Exeter, a thunderbolt struck the tower of the church, which was unprovided with a conductor, while four men and a boy, who had just been ringing a merry peal in honour of the election, were standing within the portal of the church, beneath the tower. They were all prostrated to the earth: the boy, named John Coles, having an iron hammer in his hand, was killed on the spot; one of the men was hurled many yards into the church. It is remarkable that the shoes of three, and the coat of one man, were severed into entire shreds. The vane of the tower was much distorted by the power of the electric fluid, which, in its progress to the ground, tore up the stairs of the tower, which are a complete wreck, and removed several stones of great weight. It then burst into the body of the church, and, after having dashed the communion-table to pieces, rebounded from the east wall, and terribly shattered the whole of the edifice, which presented a scene of awful interest to the beholder. The upper part of the tower, and the whole of the eastern side of the church, must be rebuilt. The storm passed over the city of Exeter about two o'clock in the afternoon, in the midst of chairing the newly-elected members, who, with their splendid silken cars and gallant cavalcade, were, as may well be imagined, most wofully bedrenched by the torrents of rain which accompanied the gleaming of the lightning and the rolling of the thunder. The gay holiday garments of the electioneering folks also came in for a full share of this sudden and unexpected "largess of the heavens." We are happy to find that the survivors in this awful visitation are doing well. The same tempest first passed over Cornwall, and during its continuance, a fine ox, the property of a farmer near Bodmin, was killed by the electric fluid, which also much injured a boy then standing in the field. Two horses, the property of J. H. Tremayne, Esq. were killed by the lightning. One of the animals was of great value. At Plymouth the sky was perfectly serene during the whole day.—Plymouth Journal.

The furniture of Carlton House is removing with all dispatch to the Old Palace, and when this is completed the work of dilapidation will immediately take place. It is expected that the workmen will begin to pull down at the end of the month.

BUTT ON CONTESTED ELECTIONS.—At the present crisis, when all England is more or less excited by the different conflicting interests of her Representatives in Parliament, a work defining the Laws of Election, and the exact limits "quos ultra citraque nequit consistere rectum," must of course be a valuable desideratum. Mr. Butt, we are glad to perceive, has very ably supplied this deficiency; he has laid down, with perspicuity and simplicity, the different statutes upon the subject, and we doubt not, will meet all the attention which his talents entitle him to receive. The book is adapted for the candidate's reading, and may be taken with him in his carriage throughout the county as his best friend and companion. He will be as good a lawyer with it as any of his agents need be, for the purposes of the contest.

Private letters from Vienna state that the Janissaries demanded that five captains taken at Missolonghi should be hung at Pera, before the English and Russian palace. On the 12th of May the Turkish commissioners had not set out for Bucharest.

It appears from the Mexican papers that a slight commotion, of a counter-revolutionary character, had occurred on the 29th of January, in one of the provinces of the Republic of Central America. A Spaniard named Jose Zamora, who had been exiled from Colombia, in consequence of his having been engaged in machination against the government of that state, contrived to organize a petty insurrection in favour of Ferdinand, in Costarica. On the 29th of January, he made an attack on the city of Alajuela, where he was repulsed by the garrison. Four of his band were killed, and a considerable number wounded and taken. The rebels were completely dispersed, but their leader escaped. He was, however, arrested on the 6th of February, and executed. The most remarkable circumstance connected with this affair, was the fact disclosed by Zamora before he suffered death, that he was one of 32 persons expressly commissioned by Ferdinand to endeavour to counter-revolutionize South America. He held a Colonel's commission, and appears to have been very active. A priest and some others, who had entered into his plans, have been arrested, and are to be imprisoned until Ferdinand acknowledges the independence of Central America.

LAW INTELLIGENCE.

COURT OF CHANCERY, Tuesday, June 14.

WELLESLEY V. THE DUKE OF BEAUFORT.

Mr. Treslove made application to the Court for a copy of the letter appended to the affidavit of Mr. Wellesley; his client had applied to Mr. Griffiths, that he might furnish the other party with a copy.

The Lord Chancellor thought it would be as well to hand down the affidavit of Mr. Treslove.

Mr. Treslove said his client wished to have a copy of the letter.

The Lord Chancellor desired to know what the other side had to say.

Mr. Heald said that his client, Mr. Wellesley, had no intimation of Mr. Treslove's application.

The affidavit was then handed down.

COURT OF KING'S BENCH, WESTMINSTER, June 13.

THE AGE NEWSPAPER.

THE KING V. RICHARDS.

Mr. Denman moved for a rule calling upon Richard Downing Richards, the printer and publisher of the Sunday paper called The Age, to shew cause why a criminal information should not be filed against him, for the publication of a libel in that paper. This application was made on the part of Lord Bingham, who was the son of Lord Lucan, and a Major in the 17th Lancers. Lord Bingham, while in Ireland, had a quarrel with a Mr. Brown, and his Lordship was bound over in the sum of 10,000l. to keep the peace towards that gentleman, and all other of his Majesty's subjects. The libel in question was in the shape of a poetical epistle, and was inserted under the head of "Letters of Ton." It alluded to the circumstance of Lord Bingham having been bound over to keep the peace, and observed, that there was no necessity for its having been done, for that the Noble Lord was by no means "prone to fighting."

Mr. Justice Bayley.—It would be forgotten in a week, would it not?

Mr. Denman thought it would not, especially as Lord Bingham was an officer in his Majesty's service. His Lordship had stated in his affidavit that he had been in the army for ten years, and that the publication had a manifest tendency to injure him in the estimation of his brother officers, and in the army in general; and that it was also calculated to irritate and induce a person so charged to commit a breach of the peace.

Mr. Justice Bayley.—Was it stated that by the words "not prone to fighting," it was meant that Lord Bingham was a coward?

Mr. Denman said, there was no such innuendo, certainly; but there could be no doubt that such was the meaning.

Mr. Justice Bayley.—A man who regarded the laws of his country ought not illegally to fight; all duelling was illegal. Could then a Court of Justice say that it was a libel upon a man to say of him, that he entertained a higher sense of his religious duties than he did of the laws of honour?

Mr. Denman did not consider that to be the necessary construction to be put upon this libel. There could be no doubt that it was meant to impute cowardice; but Lord Bingham was at present in Ireland, and an affidavit to that effect could not therefore be obtained before the term ended.

After some discussion, Mr. Justice Bayley refused to grant the Rule, as Lord Bingham did not state in his affidavit, that the libel meant to impute cowardice to him.

JUDGMENT.—THE KING V. WILLIAM BRYAN.

Mr. Adolphus prayed the judgment of the Court on the defendant, formerly printer and publisher of the Common Sense and Weekly Globe Sunday newspaper, and who had pleaded guilty to a criminal information, charging him with having published, on the 13th of November last, a libel of the most scandalous description on the character of Alfred Bunn, Esq. The defendant was brought up into court in the custody of one of the turnkeys of Newgate, in which gaol he is now suffering the judgment of this court for another libel by him published in the same newspaper, reflecting on the character of Colonel Berkeley, and ascribing to him the most improper conduct. The libel, which appeared under the head of "Notice to Correspondents," together with the affidavit of Mr. Bunn, denying the imputation, having been read by Mr. Dealtry, the defendant put in an affidavit, stating, that he had been engaged by Samuel Bamford Hamer, at a salary of two guineas per week, to act as printer and publisher of the newspaper in question; that he was in the habit of leaving the office for his home on Saturday nights about nine o'clock, and returning on Sunday morning about three o'clock, when the paper was ready for publication; and that during his absence in that interval, on the night previous to the publication of the libel complained of, it had been inserted without his knowledge; that he was entirely unacquainted with Mr. Bunn, was not actuated by any malicious motives of ill-will against him, and was extremely sorry for having been the unconscious means of publishing the libel, and had offered to give up the manuscript to the prosecutor's attorney, but believed it had been since destroyed by Mr. Hamer; and concluded by imploring the mercy of the court, he (the deponent) having been in custody since January last, and having a wife and six children wholly dependent on him for support.

Mr. Adolphus having been heard in aggravation of punishment, and Mr. J. Williams in mitigation,

Mr. Justice Bayley, in pronouncing judgment, observed, that if the court had to pass sentence on the author of the libel, the punishment would be very different from that which he was now about to impose. It was the duty of every printer and publisher to see from time to time what his paper contained, and to take care that nothing should appear calculated to cast reflections on the character of any individual. The negligence of the defendant had in this instance brought him into his present situation, but the court having taken into consideration the peculiar circumstances of his case, and that he had abandoned all connexion with the paper, and had pleaded guilty to the information, would impose a much lighter sentence than it otherwise would have done. The sentence of the court is, that you William Bryan be imprisoned in his Majesty's gaol of Newgate for the space of one month from the expiration of the period of your present imprisonment.

THURSDAY, June 15.

BOOTH V. HANDLEY.

This was an action by the plaintiff, a tradesman residing in the vicinity of Finsbury-square, to recover a compensation in damages from the defendant, a police-officer, for having assaulted and falsely imprisoned him under the following circumstances. Between ten and eleven o'clock on the night of the 1st of October last, the plaintiff, who had been passing the evening with some friends at the Crown and Anchor public-house in Paul-street, was standing in the street, when some altercation took place between him and a watchman named Groves; the defendant came up, and insisted that the plaintiff should immediately go home, or he would take him to the watchhouse. The plaintiff being "rather fresh," refused to comply, as he had committed no offence. A struggle took place, and the defendant ultimately took the plaintiff to the watchhouse, pinioned him, searched him, took from him his watch, eye-glass, silver pencil-case, and 12s. in silver, and then thrust him into the black-hole, where he ordered the constable of the night to detain him, till he, the defendant, should return the next day. A person was on the same night apprehended on a charge of felony, and confined in the same cell with the plaintiff, who was admitted to bail at ten o'clock the next morning. He was afterwards conveyed to Worship-street police-office, and there charged by the defendant and the watchman with having assaulted them. The parties were bound over to the sessions, and the plaintiff having been indicted both by the watchman and the defendant, was acquitted on both the indictments.

Verdict for the plaintiff—Damages 20l.

CONSISTORY COURT, June 16.

COX V. COX.

The Court ordered the sum allotted for alimony to Mrs. Cox to be reduced from 300l. to 220l. per annum, upon a statement, on behalf of Mr. Alderman Cox, that his income had been reduced from 1,600l. to 1000l. a year.

PORTSMOUTH V. MARY ANN HANSON.

The Court, it will be recollected, ordered, on the application of the party proceeded against in this suit, that the costs should be paid by the husband, and directed the monition to be served on the committee, Mr. Fellowes, notwithstanding his representation that he had no control on the funds of the estate of the lunatic, beyond what was given under express limitations, by the Lord Chancellor.

Dr. Jenner, for lady Portsmouth, applied to the court to pronounce Mr. Fellowes in contempt for disobedience of its orders; since, notwithstanding the court's sentence, the costs had not been paid. The question, in fact, was this—whether Lady Portsmouth was to be permitted to defend herself or not, since the examination of witnesses was going on by the other side (nineteen having already been examined), and her ladyship had not the means of cross-examining them, by reason of the expense of putting interrogatories. Of course, he did not mean that the court should pursue the measure so far as to enforce the motion, but merely to bring the matter to issue.

Dr. Lushington thought this was a most extraordinary motion, to place Mr. Fellowes in the situation of a person contemptuously disobeying the orders of the Court, when he had not the power to obey them. He was a distant relative of the Earl (not his brother, as had been supposed), and had consented, for the sake of the family, to act as committee of his person and estate; and he had commenced the present suit under the orders of the Court of Chancery. When the process of this court issued, he presented a petition to the Chancellor for directions, on the 24th of April last. That petition still remained unheard.

Dr. Jenner observed, that his only object was to protect Lady Portsmouth, and to enable her to defend herself fairly.

Sir C. Robinson observed, that this was an important case, and came before the court by the direction of a high authority; it must, therefore, take care that the objects of the suit were promoted. If any delay occurred, it must rest on the party who prosecuted the suit; but the court must wait till it could ascertain the cause. It could not decide thus summarily by motion.

Dr. Lushington said, it was not in Mr. Fellowes' power to expedite the suit, nor could he be at all interested in the delay.

Dr. Jenner disclaimed any intention of imputing intentional delay.

Sir C. Robinson did not see how he could assist the party proceeded against.

Dr. Jenner suggested that the proceedings should be suspended. This was an alternative the court had, and without such a step Lady Portsmouth would be exposed to great inconvenience.

Dr. Lushington observed, if the case was suspended, and any witness died in the interval, the benefit of their testimony would be lost.

Dr. Pickard said that the Lord Chancellor might eventually direct the costs to be paid out of Lady Portsmouth's ample allowance.

Dr. Jenner.—The Lord Chancellor has not the power of making such an order upon this court.

Sir C. Robinson considered that it would be abrupt and premature to pronounce the committee in contempt. It was for the party applicant to say what other alternative the court had to press the payment of the costs.

After some farther discussion, it was suggested by the court that the subject should be brought before the Lord Chancellor previous to the next court-day, and Dr. Lushington consented to mention the subject to counsel.

[The court was somewhat startled this morning by a ludicrous occurrence. One of the fair foreigners, who hawk brooms about the metropolis, popped her head into the hall, (whilst solemn silence reigned) and in a loud, shrill, and peculiar tone, cried "Buy a proom!"]

POLICE INTELLIGENCE.

MARLBOROUGH-STREET.—Yesterday se'nnight, Anne Brown, the woman in custody upon a charge of having murdered the illegitimate child of her husband by another woman, by cutting its head nearly off with a carving-knife, was brought before Mr. Dyer, the sitting magistrate, for final examination. It will have been recollected, that the coroner's jury, which sat on the body of the child, returned a verdict of wilful murder against the prisoner; but the magistrate, deeming it his duty to investigate the case, independent of the coroner's inquisition, had the prisoner brought before him for that purpose.

All the witnesses who were examined before the coroner attended at this office, and gave the same evidence as they did on the former occasion. The only difference between the depositions as taken down at the inquest, and those taken down by the clerk on this occasion, was, that in the evidence given before the coroner, the name of the deceased child was given as Hannah Browne, whereas her real name was Elizabeth Browne.

The prisoner being placed at the bar, the whole of the depositions were read over to her, to which she appeared to pay a calm and respectful attention. She said not a word on the subject of the charge against her, and she was fully committed to Newgate to take her trial for the murder. The prisoner, who was allowed a seat for the most part while she was at the bar, is about 60 years of age, slight in person, and low in stature; her face is thin, and a good deal furrowed with age; her mouth and lips are very large and projecting; she has rather a mild than an angry expression of countenance, and nothing bordering on the ferocious or cruel; she seemed quite collected and composed while [illegible] that occasionally her face became very much flushed; she conversed very calmly with a respectable-looking female who stood near her, against the bar; and the only thing that appeared to agitate her was the presence of her husband, Charles Browne. This young man, who seems to be about 25 years of age, and to all appearance might with ease be the grandson of the prisoner, approached her several times at the bar, and clung round her neck, in which position they continued for some time kissing each other.

The prisoner, on being removed from the bar, was placed in the strong room of the office until the hour arrived for conveying her to Newgate. The crowd in the office, and in all the approaches to it, was excessive during the day, of persons anxious to get a sight of the prisoner. The great majority of those curious persons consisted of females, all of whom, with scarcely any exception, had children in their arms.

Mansion-house.—Election Placards.—Yesterday, Mr. Fenton, the solicitor, appeared before Mr. Alderman Magnay, (who sat for the Lord Mayor), to prosecute a bill-sticker, who had offended against the provisions of the Act of the 1st of Geo. III., cap. 63, which subjects every bill-sticker who sticks up bills without the printer's name, to a penalty of 20l. for each offence.

The defendant was not forthcoming when he was called for, and on inquiry, it appeared that he had been liberated by the beadle, in whose custody he had been given on the preceding night. The beadle had taken his word to appear when called upon.

A summons was about to be made out against the beadle, when he appeared with his prisoner.

The prisoner's name was Jeremiah Brown. He stated that he is a bill-sticker, and resides at No. 129, Union-street, Southwark.

Mr. Hathaway, one of the Lord Mayor's Committee, stated that between eight and nine o'clock on the preceding night, he saw the prisoner near Southwark bridge, pasting up a placard, a copy of which he produced. It was as follows:—

"Roman Catholics!

"Rally round your staunch friends, Wood, Waithman, and the Lord Mayor."

There was no printer's name attached to it. Witness took him into custody.

Mr. Fenton said, that the prisoner had a number of other bills. He wished to know what had become of them.

The officers stated that they had only taken two from the prisoner, which two they had now to produce.

Mr. Fenton asked of the prisoner how he had disposed of the remainder of the bills?—The prisoner readily answered that he had stuck them all up that morning. There were 300 of them.

Mr. Hobler.—What, did you do this immediately after you were liberated?—Prisoner. Yes; I stuck them all up this morning.

Mr. Fenton.—Who gave you these bills? Prisoner.—Mr. Triquet,* the printer, of St. Clement's-lane.

Mr. Fenton.—It is impossible you could have got these from Mr. Ward's committee. They cannot have acted so ungentlemanly. Prisoner.—Yes; but I did though. When I was liberated last night I went to the committee at the City of London Tavern, where Mr. Triquet was. He told me he would see me righted, and he ordered me to post the bills which was left, which I did this morning.

Mr. Fenton.—Is Mr. Triquet one of the committee?—Prisoner. I believe so. There were three other gentlemen there.

Mr. Fenton.—Did the other gentlemen present hear the printer say he would see you righted?—The prisoner replied that he could not state positively.

Mr. Fenton.—Did you ever stick up any other bills from the same quarter, as coming from the Lord Mayor.—Prisoner. I have.

Mr. Hobler more than once interposed, and suggested that it was unfair to interrogate the prisoner, who was an ignorant man, and make him convict himself, if it were intended to proceed for the penalty.

Mr. Fenton said, that since the prisoner had shown himself ready to give an account of the transaction, and acknowledge who had employed him, he (Mr. Fenton) was inclined to abstain from further proceedings against him, and seek redress against his employers. Private squibs, of course, were fair; but placards like the one produced, when they came from committees, formed a species of warfare that was perfectly unworthy and unjustifiable, and must be resisted.

The prisoner, on engaging to appear when called upon, was then dismissed.

* Mr. Triquet, the parties subsequently learned, is not a printer, but the son of Mr. Triquet, one of the cashiers of the Bank, and secretary to Mr. Ward's committee. In the course of the afternoon he came on the hustings at Guildhall, and was charged with the fact. He denied the statement of the bill-sticker, but not in terms to satisfy the parties. The bill-sticker was sought after, that he might be confronted, when it was discovered that he had given a fictitious address, and no tidings whatever could be gained respecting him. The following is another instance of the insidious and unhandsome means adopted by some of Alderman Wood's opponents, to prejudice the public mind against him:—At a little after one o'clock yesterday, a crowd gathered round a man who was carrying a placard, of which the following is a copy, through Cheapside:—

"Roman Catholic Chapel, June 14.

"At a meeting of the Roman Catholics, held here this day, it was resolved unanimously,

"That Alderman Wood's staunch adherence to our cause, and his alone, claims our most strenuous support.

"Brother Liverymen,—Let not the Protestants triumph!"

Several in the crowd exclaimed that it was "a lie," and at length the board was seized and the placard torn from it. No violence was offered to the man.

The new Work recently announced from the pen of a noble author, entitled "Alla Giornata; or, To the Day," the scene of which is laid in Italy, will be published to-morrow (Monday.)

The publication of Sir John Chiverton has, we learn from good authority, been delayed in consequence of one of the chapters having been new-written, (in compliance with the suggestions of a paramount critic of the day) as savouring in its original state too much of the horrible. We have seen the Work in its present state, and it certainly possesses an uncommon degree of fearful excitation.

Female Fashions.—It is with pleasure we have noticed in the fashionable circles the prevalence of white pressed Chip Hats, and which, we are informed, can only be had in the highest perfection at 59, Holborn-hill, facing Ely-place.

The coronation of the Emperor Nicholas has been put off until August, on account of the death of the Empress Elizabeth.

A singular Forgiveness.—Sir W. Scott, in his article in the Quarterly Review, on the Culloden papers, mentions a characteristic instance of an old Highland warrior's mode of pardon. "You must forgive even your bitterest enemy, Kennuir, now," said the confessor to him, as he lay gasping on his death-bed. "Well, if I must, I must," replied the chieftain, "but my curse be on you, Donald," turning towards his son, "if you forgive him."

Richardson, a prisoner in York Castle, and the person mentioned in a petition presented to Mr. Hume, is dead. The petitioner had had a dispute with another party, on the subject of a life interest in 700l. which had led to the Chancery suit. The nature of the proceeding, and from the absurd language introduced into it, he had failed to put in an answer; the consequence was, he was committed for contempt. He has left an orphan child in York Castle. Some professional gentlemen in Hull have humanely undertaken the care of the child, and it is to be fervently hoped a liberal public will support their philanthropic exertions.

Awful Catastrophe.—On the morning of Tuesday se'nnight, between the hours of three and four o'clock, an explosion of hydrogen gas took place at the saw-pit in Townly Main Colliery, Stella, when 37 men and boys came to a premature death. An inquest was held on one of the sufferers, the body of Thomas Liddell, on Thursday last, before Michael Hall, Esq., one of the coroners for the county of Durham, at the house of Mark Snowden, Stella, when the following evidence was adduced:—Wm. Waugh, a pitman, stated, that he was down the pit on Friday, the 26th of May, and that it was then in a good working state; they knew that a seam had fire in it, but great pains were taken in rendering it safe. They worked with candles on Friday; Davy's had been seen in the seam, but not lately. Similar evidence, as regarded the good state of the works, was given by other witnesses, who were unable to account for the accident. Thomas Snowden, a tradesman, stated, that the ropes were all blown up out of the shaft, together with three men and a boy, who were descending at the moment; one of the men and the boy are dead. Another man, named Gray, was blown up from the bottom of the shaft. He saw the deceased, Thomas Liddell, brought up quite dead, and very much burnt. The fire caused his death—he can form no judgment of the cause of the accident, and does not attach blame to any one. Mr. Hall charged the jury at some length, and they immediately returned a verdict of Accidental Death.—Newcastle Chronicle.

DRURY-LANE THEATRE.

Wednesday a meeting of the creditors of Mr. Elliston took place at the Shakspeare's Hotel, Little Russell-street, for the purpose of determining upon the future proceedings with regard to that gentleman's affairs.

Mr. Henry Crace was unanimously voted to the chair. He stated the object of the meeting, and observed that Mr. Elliston was in the house, and was willing to give every satisfaction in his power as to his conduct, to any gentleman who might require it. He then read the report of the trustees who had heen appointed by the majority of the creditors to manage their concerns. The report stated that the debts of creditors who had refused to accede to the letter of licence had been discharged on the best terms possible, and that the trustees had advanced 1,100l. in pursuance of that object; that 4,795l. 16s. 8d. was due from Mr. Elliston to the sub-committee, who, on that account, had declared the lease to be forfeited, and ordered the theatre to let by sealed tenders.

Mr. Crace observed, that although the season would not last another fortnight, the creditors, with the exception of 5 per cent on their debts, were in the same situation as when they last met He understood that Mr. Elliston was anxious to make a statement to the creditors, and he therefore proposed he should b called in.

Mr. Elliston was called in, and proceeded to state that in consequence of his illness, it had been determined that the theatre should be governed by a committee. In pursuance of this determination the committe proceeded to act in their own way. Some of the engagements were much overrated, and the result was, as appeared by the balance-sheet, when it drew near the time that he was to be called upon to pay, he received a notice from Mr. Dunn to be prepared on a certain day to pay the balance due to the committee. On that day he had attended the gentlemen of the committee, aud entered into a discussion of the merits of the question. He had observed to them that this was the first year there had ever been a deficiency in the rent. He had stated that the origin of it was the malady which Providence had inflicted upon him, in consequence of which the committee was formed, and he thought that the committee, however well attended, was the fatal cause of all the disasters. It threw him (Mr. Elliston) into a state of nonentity as regarded the situation of manager. What a performer could not get from him he obtained from a committee-man, and then arose all those jarring, clashing interests, which were sure to happen where a committee was engaged. He had told the committee they had occasioned the greatest embarrassment, and was proceeding to particularise the points of mismanagement, when he was called to order by Mr. Calcraft, who said that he, Mr. Elliston had virtually forfeited the lease, but he thought it would be a very hard punishment, as he had almost rebuilt the theatre, to turn him out of possession. He told the committee that he defied any one to say he had expended more money than was necessary in his situation, and he had brought the premises, without extravagance, into such a state that, as a theatre, it was not to be parallelled in Europe. He had done so at the risk of his own personal convenience, happiness and comfort. He had expended 30,000l. of his own properly, consisting of a good private fortune and laborious earnings. This was all gone, but no matter, he had nerve, and hoped to recover it. He concluded by telling the committee that he was to make a composition with his creditors, and he should think it right to consult them before he gave any positive answer as to the payment of the balance.

Shortly afterwards, however, he received an official letter from Mr. Dunn, stating that the committee having heard the explanation he had given were determined to let the theatre upon terms to be delivered in in sealed tenders.

Mr. Elliston added that causes had led to the failure of the present season, with which he had nothing to do. He had not a single voice in the theatre that was of any use to him. He thought it very unfair the theatre should be torn from his grasp in this sort of way, when it was now entirely finished, and when it could easily by good management be made profitable. There was a talk about "Mr. Elliston being unpopular." What argument was that? Did not every one remember when Mr. Kemble was called "Black Jack," at the time of the O.P. riots, which lasted 140 nights. Whoever remembered Garrick must know that the same kind of humbug was practised eternally. It was hard that such property should be torn from the grasp of the creditors, when it was capable of being worked to a profit, and when such sums had been paid as made the shares 40l. per cent higher in value than they were when he took the theatre. Mr. Elliston having made this statement left the room.

Mr. Turner, one of the trustees, declared that Mr. Robins had practised a deception upon the creditors, in having, at the last meeting, led them on with the assurance that Mr. Elliston would be able to pay them all. There had been no less than 40 or 50,000l. expended within six years on this property; not a farthing of which the creditors were now to receive. Mr. Robins had given away orders and boxes, at his own discretion. Mr. Elliston had made a regulation, that no performer should receive more than 20l. a week, when Mr. Robins vitiated the whole arrangement, by engaging Mr. Liston at 40l. a week. In consequence of this, Miss Stephens, who had entered into an engagement, on condition that she should receive as high a salary as any other performer, also claimed 40l. a week.

Mr. Crace said, he was sorry Mr. Robins was not present to justify his conduct.

A Creditor asked what sum he and others were likely to receive as forfeited? ... proper to consider the lease

Mr. Crace said there was 6d. in the pound, together with what would arise from Mr. Elliston's Leamington property.

A Creditor asked what course the trustees had it in contemplation to pursue under the present circumstances?

The Chairman stated that the trustees had had a meeting yesterday, at which it was thought that it would be advisable to write a letter to the sub-committee applying for an extension of the lease, provided the trustees guaranteed the rent to the sub-committee, the trustees and creditors placing in the theatre whom they thought proper. If the creditors thought it advisable to take this step, they would decide so.

It was stated that the sub-committee would object to such an arrangement.

Mr. Rogers asked whether any man in his senses would have trusted Mr. Elliston a sixpence if he had known the tenor of the lease?

A creditor remarked, that surely such property in the theatre as was Mr. Elliston's, was ascertainable.

The Chairman said Mr. Elliston had none. According to the lease, the instant Mr. Elliston put a chair, table, glass, or any property in the house, it became the property of the Sub-Committee.

Mr. Rogers—That cannot be law or equity.

Mr. Burgess, the solicitor to the Sub-Committee, observed that whether it was or no, such was the lease.

Mr. Rogers—No such lease ought to have been made, nor ever was made.

Mr. Burgess—It is so, for I drew the lease myself.

Mr. Rogers—It does you great credit.

The Chairman observed that there was above 1000l. worth of glass in the Saloon, which was bona fide the property of the creditors.

Mr Burgess contended that it was the property of the Sub-Committee. He stated that the Committee had taken the opinion of two most eminent Counsel, who were decidedly of opinion that it was all forfeited.

It was observed that Mr. Calcraft or Mr. Robins had pledged his honour that if Mr. Elliston obtained the letter of license, the lease should not be forfeited.

After some further discussion as to whether any overtures should be made to the Sub-Committee of Drury-lane Theatre, to obtain possession of the Theatre; it was finally resolved that the trustees should be empowered to confer with the Committee, and should report the result of the conference to the creditors.

It is said that a charge of bribery is likely to be brought against some of the electors of Pontefract.

THE BRITISH SPECIFIC, for re-producing and promoting the GROWTH of HAIR.—The principle of its operation is to cool and contract the pores which are opened by a redundancy of heat, occasioning a relaxation of the roots, and render them incapable of retaining the hair; to counteract which nothing is better calculated than the British Specific, as, from its invigorating and oleaginous properties, it almost immediately arrests the falling off, and affords such effectual nourishment to the roots, that persons giving it a fair trial may assure themselves of its speedily restoring it even where it has become completely bald, however long it may have been so, and, if grey, gradually to restore it to its natural colour. The superiority of this preparation (the invention of a medical man) derives additional recommendation from its being, unlike other compositions for the hair, so extremely clean and agreeable, that its application is a real pleasure, and is only requisity to be generally known to receive the preference of every article in use for similar purposes. To be had only of D. Peden, 15, Burlington Arcade, Piccadilly, in bottles 6s. each, or cases of four bottles for 1l., forwarded to order on receiving the amount, post paid.

The most prominent trait of BEAUTY is a fine HEAD of HAIR, which is effectually produced by

ROWLAND'S Macassar Oil, the original and genuine, a vegetable production, which has for many years been universally admired; also acknowledged pre-eminent for nourishing the Hair, preventing it from being injured by illness, change of climate, study, travelling, accouchement, &c. removes scurf, harshness, and dryness—renders it soft and glossy; prevents its failing off or turning grey; creates a thick growth on the baldest places; producing beautiful curls, adding a most incomparable, transcendent, and beautiful lustre, rendering the head-dress truly enchanting. Ask for "ROWLAND's" Macassar Oil, at 3s. 6d.; 7s.; 10s. 6d.; and 21s. per bottle.

ROWLAND'S KALYDOR, for the complexion, which immediately diffuses on the skin a delectable and pleasing coolness, truly refreshing; renders the skin peculiarly soft and pleasant; removes freckles, pimples, and all cutaneous eruptions; imparts luxuriant and matchless beauty to the complexion.

ROWLAND'S ESSENCE OF TYRE for changing red and grey whiskers to black or brown.

ROWLAND'S ALSANA EXTRACT for the tooth-ach, and preserving and beautifying the teeth.

CAUTION.—In consequence of the high popularity of the above articles, base impostors have imitated the labels, bills, and bottles. To guard against such imposition, it is necessary on purchasing to ask for "ROWLAND'S," strictly observing their signatures in red on each bottle of the genuine articles, "A. ROWLAND and SON, 20, Hatton-garden."

IMPOSTURE UNMASKED.—The progress of Merit although frequently assailed, is not impeded by Envy and Detraction The aggression of ambuscade terminates in defeat; and conscious rectitude ultimately triumphs in the attainment of the grand object—public approbation The test of experience is the guarantee of favour, and has established WARREN'S BLACKING in general estimation: of which there exists not a stronger proof than the tacit acknowledgment of a host of servile imitators, who surreptitiously obtrude on the unwary a spurious preparation as the genuine article, to the great disappointment of the unguarded purchaser, and manifest injury of WARREN, whose character and interest by this iniquitous system are equally subject to detriment. It becomes therefore an indispensable duty to CAUTION THE PUBLIC against the manœuvres of Unprincipled Venders, who having no character to lose, and stimulated by avarice in their nefarious pursuits, aim at the acquisition of money through any medium than that of honour! The original and matchless BLACKING bears on each bottle a short direction, with the signature

ROBERT WARREN

All others are counterfeits; and in many instances the imposition labels are artfully interlined with a different address, in very small characters, between the more conspicuous ones of "No. 30," and "STRAND." It is earnestly recommended to Shopkeepers and ethers who are deceived by base fabrications of WARREN'S BLACKING, to return the detected trash to the source whence it came, and expose the machinations of rascality to merited obloquy.

WARREN's BLACKING is surpassingly brilliant:—it excludes damp; gives pliancy to the leather; retains its pristine virtue in all climates; and, combining elegance with comfort, is an article equally of indispensable fashion and utility. Sold by every respectable Vender in Town and Country, in bottles at 6d. 10d. 12d. and 18d. each.

THE ARABIAN VEGETABLE PILLS, free from Mercury or Antimony, are unrivalled in their beneficial effects in Nervous, Bilious, and Liver Complaints, Indigestion, and its numerous train of maladies, and are particularly mild and pleasant as an aperient. The superior efficacies of these Pills has increased the demand for them so much, that an additional number of Venders has been appointed in London for the accommodation of the Public; and they may now be obtained in Boxes at 1s. 1½d. and 2s. 9d. each, of J. V. Simpson (Proprietor,) 28, Henrietta-street, Covent-garden; Messrs. Stradling, Royal Exchange; Anderson, 156, Bishopsgate Without; Sequeira, 132, Whitechapel High-street; E. and F. Odling, 159, High-street, and 171, Union-street, Southwark; Ward, 324, and Hose, 309, Holborn; Prout, 226, and Burfield, 189, Strand; Stanley, 14, Tavistock-row, Covent-garden, Payne, 5, St. Martin's-court; Simpson, 21, Piccadilly; Hawkins, 11, Old Bond-street; Grignon, 174, Regent-street, opposite New Burlington-street; Colley, 5, Holles-street, Cavendish-square; Sanger, 150, and Chandler, 76, Oxford-street; White, t, and Yard, 28, Lamb's Conduit-street; and of all Medicine Vender; throughout the kingdom. Mr. Renard, 19, Rue Vivienne, is appointed vender of of these Pills in Paris.

New Edition, the Fifth, revised and enlarged, price 3s.

PRACTICAL OBSERVATIONS on STRICTURES of the URETHRA and RECTUM, recommending an improved system for their Treatment and Cure; illustrating its efficacy by numerous remarkable and highly important cases, in some of which, Strictures of from ten to twenty years duration have been totally removed in a few weeks, and its superiority thereby fully established over every other method hitherto practised. By C. B. COURTENAY, M.D. To which are added, Observations and Practical Comments on Gleet, Seminal Weakness, and the miseries occasioned by Self Abuse, for the cure of which a mode of treatment, the result of long and successful practice, and at once safe, speedy, and effectual, is adopted by the Author.

Printed for the Author, Robert-street, Adelphi; and sold by William Marsh, 145, Oxford-street, next to Fladong's Hotel; Jones and Sherwood, Paternoster-row; Onwhyn, 4, Catherine-street; Walker, 90, High Holborn; and may be had of all Booksellers.

"We earnestly recommend the cases related by Dr. Courtenay to the perusal of such of our readers as are afflicted with the complaints which the Author has made the subject of these Observations. Several instances are adduced of the recovery of perfect health from states which were considered hopeless by Practitioners of eminent talents, and very extensive experience. We entertain the highest opinion of Dr. Courtenay's professional skill, and congratulate him on his successful and judicious application to these severe and often fatal diseases."—European Magazine.

THE WHITE ANTELOPE.—This beautiful animal is just arrived from India, and is now exhibiting at the Bazaar, King-street, Portman-square. The beauty of the form and colour of this animal are very remarkable, having all the elegance of the tribe to which he belongs in an eminent degree, and being of the most pure white colour, with red eyes. This extraordinary LUSUS was procured when Fort Kittoor was stormed by the British troops; and he was esteemed by the Rajah of enormous value, being, like the White Elephant of the Burman Empire, an object of worship. Also a very perfect specimen of the Gazille, so often alluded to by Byron and Moore, to be seen with the above.

BATTLE of ALGIERS.—By permission, and under the Patronage of his Royal Highness the Duke of York.—The Boys of the Royal Military Asylum at Chelsea will march from thence (should the weather be favourable) proceded by their Band and Corps of Drums and Fifes, to the Great Room, Spring Gardens, on Monday, the 26th instant, to view MARSHALL'S NATIONAL PERISTREPHIC PANORAMA of Lord Exmouth's Victory over the Algerines, displaying the City as it appeared before, during, and after the Battle, with the British boats bringing off the Christian Slaves, &c. &c. The movements of the Panorama will be accompanied by their Band, consisting of 35 boys under 12 years of age.—No orders can possibly be admitted on that day.—Day Exhibitions from Twelve to Five; Evening ditto, by Gas, at Seven and Half past Eight o'Clock.

PANSTEREOMACHIA.—Mr. C. Bullock respectfully announces that his Panstereomachia; or, Model of the celebrated BATTLE of POICTIERS, in which Edward, usually styled the Black Prince, so eminently distinguished himself by the capture of John King of France, and the total overthrow of an opposing army, sevenfold the numerical strength of his own, is now open to public inspection, at the spacious Room, 209, Regent-street. The Exhibition occupies a space of 30 feet by 18, and consists of upwards of fifteen hundred figures, modelled with the strictest regard to historical truth, in the Costume and Arms of the period which it represents, forming the most novel and brilliant coup d'œil, ever presented to the Public.

BURGESS' ESSENCE of ANCHOVIES, Warehouse, 107, STRAND, corner of Savoy Steps, London.—JOHN BURGESS and SON, being apprised of the numerous endeavours made by many persons to impose a spurious article for their sake, feel it incumbent upon them to request the attention of the public, in purchasing what they conceive to be the ORIGINAL, to observe the Name and Address correspond with the above. The general appearance of the spurious descriptions will deceive the unguarded, and for their detection J. B. and Son submit the following caution:—Some are in appearance at first sight "Burgess' Essence of Anchovies;" others, "Burgis's," and many more without address.—JOHN BURGESS and SON having been many years honoured with such distinguished approbation, feel every sentiment of respect towards the public, and earnestly solicit them to inspect the labels previous to purchasing what they conceive to be of their make, which they hope will prevent many disappointments.

Burgess' New Sauce for general purposes having given such great satisfaction, continues to be prepared by them, and is recommended as a most useful and convenient sauce; will keep good in all climates.

E. PHYSICK & SON, Sculptors, intend publishing by Subscription, the size of life, the BUST of the late K. M. VON WEBER, which they have now Modelled, assisted by a gentleman intimately acquainted with the deceased, and other authentic documents, that have enabled them to obtain a most correct likeness. Messrs. P. have the honour to announce that subscribers names will be received at No. 16, Park Terrace, Regent's Park, opposite Upper Gloucester Place, where the Model is to be seen until next Wednesday, when it will be closed previous to the delivery of the Bust, in order as subscribed for.

TO THE PUBLIC.

IMPORTANT DISCOVERY for the Restoration of DECAYED TEETH, and the Cure of Tooth-ache, Mr. Clarke, (Inventor of the APPARATUS for facilitating the operation of Cupping, for which a Medal has been awarded by the Society of Arts, &c.) has the honour to announce a Composition for stopping Decayed Teeth. The new Composition, unlike Metallic Stopping, is applicable to every possible case, as it possesses the Plastic Properties of Cement, and almost immediately becomes as hard as stone. It relieves the severest Toothe-ache, and by excluding air and moisture, prevents the further decay of the Teeth. To be had only of Mr. Clark, No. 5, King-street, Holborn, where he continues to perform all Operations connected with the Teeth, in a superior manner, on moderate terms.

BY 4 GEO. IV. CAP. 60, ALL LOTTERIES END FOR EVER ON THE 18th JULY.

J. and J. SIVEWRIGHT, Contractors, most positively assure the Public this is the last and only Drawing that will ever be allowed in the United Kingdom, and all who are disposed to have a farewell venture for one or two of the SIX of £30,000!

Are respectfully advised to make their purchases immediately, as the price, which has already risen, is sure to be considerably higher, and from the present great demand, it is probable that Tickets and Shares may be rendered so scarce as not to be obtained when the drawing approaches, at any sum. TURKEY COFFEE of the FINEST QUALITY, at the following reduced prices:—Raw, 2s. 6d. per lb.—Roasted, 3s per lb. The Public are respectfully informed, that Government having reduced the Duty on Turkey Coffee, they may now purchase that article at the above-mentioned reduced prices, warranted of the finest quality, at John Marshall and Company's Tea and Coffee-Warehouse, No. 12, Southampton-street, Strand.

SILK HATS, Double Edged, at 17s.—This economical and useful hat is a widely different and superior manufactured article compared with those generally made, the body being composed of finer materials, and stiffened with a chemical composition, rendering them soft and pliable to the head; they also resemble in every respect the finest beaver, having a rich nap, with which the edges, are doubly covered. Travellers and commercial men can give best proof of their utility. To be had only of the Inventor, price 17s. Also, good Beaver Hats, in a variety of modern shapes, possessing the qualities held out by other contemporaries, without their imperfections, at 20s. 21s. 23s. and 26s.—Youths' Beaver and Silk Hats, Cloth, Seal, and Fur Caps in great variety, at PERRING'S, 412, Strand, two doors from the Adelphi Theatre, and at Hammersmith.

BRADBERRY's PATENT SPECTACLES, upon unerring principles, to preserve the sight to extreme old age. It is necessary to caution the public against the use of improper Spectacles, as their effects prove injurious, instead of beneficial to the eye. The unremitted and anxious study Mr. BRADBERRY has paid to his glasses for upwards of 30 years, has called forth the most distinguished approbation of their merit from the medical profession, and from many thousands of persons of the highest rank and respectability.—To be had only at 28, Holles-street, the first door out of Oxford-street, next to the large Fruiterer's at the corner, facing Hanover-square, and at no other place in the United Kingdom.—Orders from the country immediately attended to. Removed from 332, Oxford-street.

ARTIFICIAL TEETH.—MR. WM. BEACALL, and Mr. ROSE, Surgeon Dentists, 13, Newman-street, Oxford-street, having with unremitting diligence long made the Science of ARTIFICIAL TEETH, where mechanical contrivance is requisite, their peculiar study, continues to supply the loss of Teeth, with Natural or Artificial, in a superior manner, without the least pain, from a single Tooth to a complete Set, at little more than one-half the usual charges. Teeth cleaned if ever so discoloured, and rendered white and beautiful, without pain or injury to the enamel. Extracting, Stopping, and every operation on the Teeth and Gums.—Attends at home from Ten till Four.

SIMPSON's ROYAL ELIXIR of LIFE, unrivalled in good effects for Spasms or Gout in the Stomach, Indigestion, Loss of Appetite, and as a Restorative in cases of extreme Nervous Debility or the weakness of advanced Life. The most prominent trait of BEAUTY is a fine HEAD of HAIR, which is effectually produced by

ROWLAND'S Macassar Oil, the original and genuine, a vegetable production, which has for many years been universally admired; also acknowledged pre-eminent for nourishing the Hair, preventing it from being injured by illness, change of climate, study, travelling, accouchement, &c. removes scurf, harshness, and dryness—renders it soft and glossy; prevents its falling off or turning grey; creates a thick growth on the baldest places; producing beautiful curls, adding a most incomparable, transcendent, and beautiful lustre, rendering the head-dress truly enchanting. Ask for "ROWLAND'S" Macassar Oil, at 3s. 6d.; 7s.; 10s. 6d.; and 21s. per bottle.

ROWLAND'S KALYDOR, for the complexion, which immediately diffuses on the skin a delectable and pleasing coolness, truly refreshing; renders the skin peculiarly soft and pleasant: removes freckles, pimples, and all cutaneous eruptions; imparts luxuriant and matchless beauty to the complexion.

ROWLAND'S ESSENCE OF TYRE for changing red and grey whiskers to black or brown.

ROWLAND'S ALSANA EXTRACT for the tooth-ach, and preserving and beautifying the teeth and gums.

CAUTION.—In consequence of the high popularity of the above articles, base impostors have imitated the labels, bills, and bottles. To guard against such imposition, it is necessary on purchasing to ask for "ROWLAND'S," strictly observing their signatures in red on each bottle of the genuine articles.

"A. ROWLAND and SON, 20, Hatton-garden."

IMPOSTURE UNMASKED.—The progress of Merit although frequently assailed, is not impeded by Envy and Detraction The aggression of ambuscade terminates in defeat; and conscious rectitude ultimately triumphs in the attainment of the grand object—public approbation. The test of experience is the guarantee of favour, and has established WARREN'S BLACKING in general estimation; of which there exists not a stronger proof than the tacit acknowledgment of a host of servile imitators, who surreptitiously obtrude on the unwary a spurious preparation as the genuine article, to the great disappointment of the unguarded purchaser, and manifest injury of WARREN, whose character and interest by this iniquitous system are equally subject to detriment. It becomes therefore an indispensable duty to CAUTION THE PUBLIC against the manœuvres of Unprincipled Venders, who having no character to lose, and stimulated by avarice in their nefarious pursuits, aim at the acquisition of money through any medium than that of honour! The original and matchless BLACKING bears on each bottle a short direction, with the signature

ROBERT WARREN

All others are counterfeits; and in many instances the imposition labels are artfully interlined with a different address, in very small characters, between the more conspicuous ones of "No. 30," and "STRAND." It is earnestly recommended to Shopkeepers and others who are deceived by base fabrications of WARREN'S BLACKING, to return the detected trash to the source whence it came, and expose the machinations of rascality to merited obloquy.

WARREN'S BLACKING is surpassingly brilliant;—it excludes damp; gives pliancy to the leather; retains its pristine virtue in all climates; and, combining elegance with comfort, is an article equally of indispensable fashion and utility. Sold by every respectable Venders in Town and Country, in bottles, at 6d. 10½d. 12d. and 18d each.

FOREIGN INTELLIGENCE.

Dispatches have been received at the Admiralty from Commodore Sir James Brisbane, Commander of his Majesty's naval forces on the East India station (brought by Captain Chads, of the Alligator frigate), announcing that in consequence of the perfidious evasions of the Burmese Authorities, in regard to the ratification of the treaty of peace, General Sir Archibald Campbell found himself under the necessity of renewing hostilities with that power. The time granted for the ratification having expired on the 18th of January, Sir Archibald Campbell put his army in motion on the following day, and so well planned and vigorous were his operations, that the enemy were unable to oppose effectual resistance in any point. Their head-quarters at Melloun were attacked with such invincible bravery that the whole of the works were speedily carried by storm; the enemy, defeated with great loss, fled in the utmost confusion, leaving our gallant army in possession of Melloun, with all the ordnance, boats, stores, and some treasure. Thus has unpardonable perfidy been most justly and signally chastised; and we have no doubt that the next advices will enable us to congratulate the public upon the full submission of the enemy, with still more diminished means of disputing the powerful supremacy but mild sway of the British Government in that quarter of the globe.

The following are the official particulars:—

"MELLOUN, Jan. 20, 1826.—The time granted for the receipt of the ratification of the Treaty of Peace, by the Court of Ava, having expired on the 18th instant, and the Burman Chiefs continuing to act with base duplicity and evasion, no alternative was left the Commander of the forces (Sir A. Campbell), than the painful one of renewing hostilities, which was done yesterday, and was attended, I rejoice to say, with the complete defeat of the enemy, and the capture of Melloun, with all the ordnance, boats, commissariat stores, and a small quantity of treasure.

"Sir A. Campbell having made his disposition for the attacks of Melloun, about eleven o'clock, and in a short time, having made the necessary impression, the works were stormed in a fine gallant style. The enemy fled in the utmost confusion, with great loss, leaving us in possession of the Stockade, with, I regret to say, the gallant Colonel Sale and Major Frith, severely wounded, and about twenty casualties.

[Here follow the names of Officers who distinguished themselves, &c. and other minor details, for which we have not room to-day.]

I have the honour to remain,
H. D. CHADS, Captain of H. M. S. Alligator, in command of the Flotilla.

Return of Killed and Wounded, on board the Flotilla, at Melloun, Jan. 19, 1826.

Boats of his Majesty's ship Alligator—Killed, none; wounded, 4 severely; 1 slightly.

3d Division Hon. Company's Gun-boats—Killed, 1; wounded 6, severely.

4th Division Hon. Company's gun-boats—Killed 1; wounded, 1 dangerously; 1 slightly.

5th Division Hon. Company's gun-boats—Killed, 2; wounded 1.—Total; Killed, 4; wounded, 14.

DREADFUL CALAMITY.

[FROM A FRANKFORT PAPER RECEIVED YESTERDAY.]

DARMSTADT, JUNE 14.—A letter from Schotten, of the 5th instant, gives the following melancholy account of the ravages caused by a natural phenomenon in that neighbourhood. On the 3d, during an intolerable heat, with a perfect calm, heavy thundering clouds coming from the South, collected about the summits of the Vogelberg, and about five in the afternoon poured down a tremendous deluge, which, rushing from the mountain, carried away entire fields, and poured into the valley in which the village of Eschenrod, and five others, are situated. At Escehnrod the whole collected into one stream, which poured its desolating course to the village; this was the work of a few minutes; the whole road which passes through the village was at once thirty feet under water, which rose in waves as high as a house, entirely destroyed the causeway, rooted up the trees, carried off timber, immense stones and waggons, undermined the foundations of the buildings on the road, and swept away entire houses with their inhabitants. In this manner 21 persons perished at Eschenrod. Among them was a family of six members, with a foster-daughter: this family is now extinct. Of another family only the father, who happened to be in a field situated in an elevated spot, remains alive. His wife, three children, and two servants perished in the house; when he returned he could scarcely recognise the place where his house had stood.

Twenty-six buildings are entirely destroyed at Eschenrod, and twenty-nine more or less damaged. In the street through which the torrent passed, there are chasms from 20 to 30 feet deep, so that all communication was interrupted.

PROVINCIAL INTELLIGENCE.

We are sorry to state that a revulsion appears to have taken place in the manufacturing districts. The temporary demand for goods has ceased, and every description of manufacture at Manchester and Glasgow is offered on lower terms than at any preceding period. The following articles are selected from provincial papers:—

"MANCHESTER, TUESDAY.—The market to-day has been bad, and things are expected to get worse. The most gloomy rumours and surmises are afloat, relative to money matters; and it is known that, unless a sudden and prosperous turn open upon some respectable houses, they must go, as others before them have done. Yarns are lower; Common yarns, which have lately fetched 14d., may now be bought at 13½d. for cash. Calicoes are also at decreasing prices—say 3d. less than last week. Fustians, Jankeens, and prints, are at a stand—no demand.

"GLASGOW, TUESDAY.—We regret to state that commercial affairs are still depressed and of a cheerless aspect; the number of unemployed operatives continues to increase—distress and want are marching with vast strides amongst classes above the rank of common labourers. In Glasgow and its suburbs there are 19,000 to 20,000 weavers, and in other parts of Lanarkshire 9,000 to 10,000 more.

To the Free and Independent Electors of Great Britain who have not already given, or promised their Votes, are very respectfully solicited to vote for JOHN INGRAM and SON, to supply them with cheap and good Chairs, Bedsteads, Tables, Basonnds, Drawers, Flower-stands, Garden and Rustic Seats, &c. &c. Where every article will be found cheaper than can be got any where else, as for instance, Japanned rush seat Chairs, all Patterns, all Colours, and all the same low price of 3s. 6d. per Chair, Impregnated Rose Wood Windows, and all other kinds equally low.—N.B. Observe the sign of the Rustic House, No. 29, City-road, near Finsbury Square.

The annual dinner to celebrate the battle of Waterloo was given by the illustrious Chief at Apsley House, on Sunday evening, to a number of the heroes who distinguished themselves on that day.

The new saloon, or banqueting hall, was the scene of festivity. A grand service of Portuguese plate was used for the dinner; and the Dresden for the dessert.

The party sat down at half-past eight, and broke up at one o'clock in the morning.

LONDON ELECTION.

A scrutiny of the poll for the late Election took place on Saturday, when the numbers were found to be correctly thus:—

Alderman Thompson.....	6485	Alderman Wood.....	4891
Alderman Waithman.....	5045	The Lord Mayor.....	4514
Mr. Ward.....	6992	Alderman Garratt	330

The numbers polled at this election were greater than on any preceding occasion, and no citizen was ever returned with so triumphal a majority as Alderman Thompson, who had 6,485 votes, although the Liverymen who had polled during the Election did not exceed 8,631. Mr. Ward was third on the list, but had the contest continued a little longer, he would certainly have been the second.

READING.

Between twelve and three o'clock on Tuesday, Mr. Spence got two a-head, and every moment was watched with the most intense anxiety. Rumours of the arrival of voters were afloat, and the sinking spirits of Mr. Palmer's friends were kept up by various devices. The arrival of a post-chaise nearly made his Committee jump out of the window; but alas! there was nothing for him. A young man, who had been rejected as under age, it was ascertained, completed his 21st year that morning, and this gave them some hope, but he did not come forward.

At half-past four, the Town-hall, and every avenue leading to it, was crammed, and the windows, at the sides, were crowded with ladies. They, as well as the men who filled the Hall, were all in the Blue interest. The very few orange ribbons, which at first showed, soon disappeared when defeat was no longer doubtful. The uproarious applause of the multitude was most deafening, and it did not appear that the friends of poor Palmer had even spirits enough left to give one shout. The Crier read the Proclamation calling on all voters, yet unpolled, at once to come forward, as the poll would close at five o'clock. At twenty minutes before five, the Mayor stood up, and loudly and distinctly gave his commands to the constables and all officers of the Court, to keep the approach to the hustings clear, and cautioned them at their peril to suffer no obstruction to be offered to any voter coming up to the poll.

At five the Mayor stood up, and said, "Electors of Reading, I have now to inform you that the poll is closed." A space of about twenty minutes then elapsed in making up the state of the poll, and preparing for its announcement. When the necessary steps were taken the Mayor came in, and having Mr. Monck and Mr. Spence at either side of him, announced the numbers as follows:—

Mr. Monck	580	Mr. Palmer.....	488
Mr. Spence	492	Mr. Wakefield	366

He then said, "In pursuance of a precept directed to me for the return of two Burgesses to Parliament for the Borough of Reading, I have caused the poll to be taken, and do therefore declare J. B. Monck and George Spence, Esquires, to be duly elected."

The MAYOR said, that he could not separate from the Electors after the eight days arduous duty which he and they had performed, without expressing his heartfelt satisfaction at the generous, honourable, and peaceable conduct pursued by them. The contest was then at an end, and he trusted that the result would do them honour. He had only one favour to ask of them, which was, to join him in three cheers for "God save the King."

The good men of Reading most readily and most heartily acceded to the Mayor's request.

The Members were then conveyed to their chairs; and Mr. Monck, as first on the poll, took precedence. He was carried by his friends round the town; and, considering that he held the first place, it was astonishing by how few he was attended. No persons of respectability, with the exception of the Messrs. Stephens, and one or two others, were in his group. After having gone quickly through a part of the town, he came to the Market-place, and addressed those assembled. He thanked them, of course, but regretted much the want of his friend, Mr. Palmer's company, with whom he had been a school-fellow, and with whom he would have felt proud to be associated. Had his vote of yesterday secured Mr. Palmer's election, it would have been the greatest happiness of his life. Very different, however, was the attendance upon Mr. Spence. He was preceded by flags, one of which, of immense size, was inscribed, "Spence; admired for his talents, beloved for his integrity—chosen for both."—His Committee walked immediately before the chair, and the whole population of Reading seemed turned out to deck his triumph.

BERKSHIRE.

On Monday the election of the two County Members took place in the Town-hall, Abingdon, when Mr. C. Dundas and Mr. R. Palmer were re-elected without opposition. The former was proposed by Mr. Wroughton, and seconded by General Popham; the latter by Mr. Duffield, and Mr. Sawyer.

GLOUCESTER COUNTY.

On Friday week the election of two Representatives in Parliament for this county came on at the New Shire Hall, in this city, where a Special Court for that purpose was held by R. H. B. Hale, Esq. the High Sheriff. Soon after ten o'clock the Right Hon. Lord R. Edward H. Somerset and Sir Berkeley William Guise, Bart. the late Members, attended by numerous parties of their friends, entered the hall. No other Candidate appearing, a shew of hands was taken, and the High Sheriff declared the Right Honourable Lord Edward Somerset and Sir Berkeley William Guise, Bart. duly elected, when they again returned thanks to their constituents for their re-election. The ceremony of chairing them took place.

COVENTRY—EIGHTH DAY.

This Election terminated on Monday in a most unexpected manner. The Tory, or perhaps, we should more properly say, the Independent party, Messrs. Fyler and Heathcote, had for several days polled almost exclusively, till they had obtained so considerable a majority, that it was thought impossible for Messrs. Moore and Ellice to be able to equal them, even if they were to poll all the remaining freemen. This, however, did not prevent those Gentlemen from persevering in their exertions; and such were their arrangements, that to-day they stated it to be in their power, and to be their intention, of polling sufficient numbers to give them a majority on the aggregate amount of votes.

The Sheriffs continued to poll until two o'clock, and every thing passed as quietly as could be desired; when Messrs. Moore and Ellice sent in a formal document, signed by several freemen, declining to come to give their votes, assigning as a reason that they were intimidated by the conduct of the opposite party.

As soon as this was received, the Sheriffs declared the poll to be closed, and announced the numbers to be as follow, amidst the most enthusiastic cheering:—

Heathcote.....	1535	Ellice	1242
Fyler.....	1522	Moore.....	1182

KENT.

The election for the county of Kent took place on Tuesday, on Penenden-heath, near Maidstone, where a very large assemblage of the freeholders was collected. After the usual preliminaries had been gone through at the hustings.

Mr. Hodger proceeded to propose Sir J. Honywood as a fit and proper person to represent the county of Kent in the next Parliament—a situation which he knew no one capable of holding with more credit to himself, or with more advantage to his constituents.

Mr. Ryder seconded the nomination. Upon which

Mr. Hatton next advanced, to propose Sir E. Knatchbull as a second Representative.

Mr. Moreland seconded him.

As had been expected, no opposition took place, and the crowd dispersed, glad to escape suffocation from the dust in Penenden-heath-lane, which forms the approach to the heath for carriages and horses.

HEREFORD CITY ELECTION.—WEDNESDAY.

At length the contest is over, and the victory obtained by the friends of Mr. Clive. Never in the memory of the oldest freemen was an election so warmly contested, and scarcely ever conducted with so little party spirit—the Candidates strictly confining themselves in their remarks to their situation on the poll, and thanking those who voted with them. At the commencement of the polling on Tuesday morning, the Mayor, by proclamation, declared that the poll would finally close at half-past twelve o'clock, at which time the friends of Mr. Blakemore demanded a scrutiny of the votes, which was immediately commenced. At two o'clock the Mayor declared the majority of votes were in favour of Lord Eastnor and Mr. Clive, and they were returned as members to the new Parliament.

Shortly after five o'clock, the ceremony of chairing took place: Colonel Cocks was carried for Lord Eastnor.

CHESTER, JUNE 20.

The important contest for Members of Parliament, in this city, between the Grosvenor and Egerton parties, may be considered now, the tenth day of polling, virtually over; though, probably, some voters may yet be brought up to the hustings to-morrow, the numbers being this evening as follows:—

Belgrave...	809	Egerton.....	735
Grosvenor.....	739	Townsend.....	704

Those who witnessed the conflict of the parties yesterday evening would not be advocates for annual parliaments, let alone universal suffrage; as each party attacked one another, by pelting with large stones torn up from the pavement of the street. One woman has been sent to our infirmary with a fractured skull; and several persons severely wounded (we had, by the-bye, the County Election this same day, the former members returned, Mr. Egerton and Mr. Davenport), amongst whom was our respectable Town Clerk, Finchett Maddock, Esq., severely, but not dangerously, whilst in his office in the Exchange (the seat of the hustings) the windows were demolished.

STAFFORD COUNTY ELECTION.

On Friday week a Special County Court was held in the Shire Hall, for the purpose of electing two Representatives for Staffordshire. The Court was attended by a number of the most respectable gentlemen and freeholders of the county.

After the usual preliminary forms had been gone through,

J. B. Phillips, Esq. declared Mr. Littleton and Sir John Wrottesley to be duly elected.

HUNTINGDON, Tuesday Evening.

CLOSE OF THE CONTEST.

At six o'clock this evening, the sheriff proclaimed the numbers as under:—

Mandeville	968	Russell	858
Fellowes	911

The under sheriff then came forward, and proclaimed Lord Mandeville and Mr. Fellowes to be duly elected Members of Parliament.

Lord Mandeville, in returning thanks, said he hardly knew whether to consider his return as a duty imposed, or as an honour conferred. His former habits of life prevented him from bringing any thing beyond industry and integrity to their service; but they might depend upon him to the utmost of his abilities. He felt peculiarly grateful to those who had worn his distinguishing colours; but still he should never forget those who, although they had worn the colours of his opponent, had always treated him with respect and friendship.—(Loud applause.) He could not but consider his return as a mark of respect to the family of which he was a member; and he could assure them he would endeavour to revive those days in which the talisman of the Montague was a protection and safeguard to the county. He trusted his friends would show as much moderation, now that the victory had been gained, as they had done during the contest.

Mr. Fellowes came forward, but was received at first with considerable disapprobation. Silence being obtained, he said, that notwithstanding misrepresentation had been resorted to against him—notwithstanding that his opponent had began to canvass before he was aware that a contest was intended—and notwithstanding that figures had been dreseed up to insult him, still they had done him the honour to appoint him their representative for the fifth time. He begged them to accept his thanks, and his assurance that the same line of conduct which had hitherto obtained their approbation, would be adopted by him in future.

Lord John Russell addressed the freeholders, and the meeting dispersed.

CUMBERLAND.

The election for the county of Cumberland took place on Friday week. At an early hour the note of preparation was shown by different bands of music stationed before the Globe Inn, as the Yellow House, and before the Sun as the Blue one. Various flags, having appropriate inscriptions, were also displayed from the windows of several public houses, some of which, it was understood, were opened for public visitation. About half-past nine, Lord Lowther arrived, and quartered at the Globe. Several of the Blues waited at the entrance of the town, with banners and music, for Mr. Curwen, and accompanied him to the Globe.

At a quarter before twelve, the Gentlemen ascended the Hustings, and as soon as Sir. George Saul, as Under Sheriff, read the Act, and other necessary preliminaries were gone through,

Mr. Senhouse said—There being no person nominated besides Sir J. Lowther and John Christian Curwen, Esq., I do hereby declare them to be duly erected to serve in Parliament for the representation of the county of Cumberland.

Sir John Lowther returned thanks in a very few words.

Mr. Curwen did the same.

Mr. Curwen then, being booted and spurred, and girted with the Knight's sword, entered the Chair, and followed Sir John. They went through the Borough amidst immense cheering, and Sir John returned to his quarters, and Mr. Curwen to his.

DEVONSHIRE.

Exeter, June 15.—The election of two Knights to represen this County was fixed for this day. The candidates nominated on Thursday last were Mr. Bastard and Sir T. D. Acland. This morning, however, the Rev. Mr. Jones proposed Lord Ebrington as a third candidate for the honour of representing the County, and on a show of hands the Sheriff declared the Noble Lord and Sir Thomas Acland to have the majority. Mr. Holdsworth demanded a poll on the part of Mr. Bastard. The polling commenced at two o'clock, and at six in the evening the numbers were, for—

Sir Thomas Acland	77	Lord Ebrington	15
Mr. Bastard	72

Mr. Jones then gave up, and the Sheriff declared Sir Thomas and Mr. Bastard duly elected. Lord Ebrington was not present.

LANCASTER.

The old representatives for this county, John Blackburne, Esq. and Lord Stanley, have been again returned.

COUNTY OF YORK.

This election took place on Wednesday last at the Castle-yard, at York. Both parties had anticipated a contested election until Monday evening, when the committee which had been formed at Wakefield to secure the return of Mr. Bethell, announced to the committees of the other Candidates that they had that day resolved, at a meeting of delegates from Huddersfield, Halifax, Bradford, and other towns in the West Riding, to relinquish their intention of bringing forward that gentleman. This information was received at so late a period as to render it partly unavailing for saving expenses to the other candidates. In fact, all the preparations for a contest had been made, and it was resolved that the freeholders appointed to attend on the day of election should not be restrained in their inclination to support their favourite candidates. During the whole of Tuesday all the towns of the West Riding were in a state of extreme excitation. Leeds, in particular, was kept in continual bustle from eight o'clock in the morning till seven o'clock in the evening, receiving and forwarding voters, of whom nine-tenths were for Milton and Marshall, the popular candidates.

At eight o'clock on Wednesday morning the city of York had become extremely crowded, and before ten it was with difficulty that a passage could be obtained through the principal streets either for carriages or Pedestrians. About that hour the two parties—the orange and the blue—went in procession into the Castle-yard, Lord Milton and Mr. Marshall taking the precedency. In less than half an hour the capacious area was nearly filled in every part, and it was estimated that 40,000 persons at least were present.

The High Sheriff (the Hon. M. Langley) appeared on the hustings a little before ten o'clock.

At twenty minutes to eleven, Mr. Hindsley, the county clerk, read the proclamation, stating the object of the meeting, and calling upon all the freeholders who had business before the High Sheriff to come forth.

Mr. Brook, the Under Sheriff, read his Majesty's writ to the Sheriff for the election of four knights of the shire.

The High Sheriff then took the oath customary on these occasions; after which the Bribery Act was read.

The High Sheriff.—Gentlemen, the court is now open for the election of four knights of the shire, and any gentleman is at liberty to propose a candidate. I hope the speakers will be as short as they can; for they had a good deal of speaking on the day of nomination, and this is the day of business, which we wish to get through. If any gentleman has to propose a candidate he shall now be heard.

The several Candidates were then proposed and seconded; and after addressing the electors,

The High Sheriff made the following proclamation:—"If there is any freeholder who has any other candidate to propose as a fit and proper person to represent this county in Parliament, let him come forth and he shall be heard."

After a short pause, no answers being returned to this demand, the High Sheriff said—"As no other Candidate is proposed, I am now going to declare Lord Milton, Richard Fountayne Wilson, Esq., Richard Duncombe, Esq., and John Marshall, Esq., Knights duly elected to represent this county in Parliament; and I do declare the said Lord Milton, Richard Fountayne Wilson, Esq., Richard Duncombe, Esq., and John Marshall, Esq., to be duly and fully elected to serve as knights to represent this county in Parliament."

The indenture of the election was then executed by the High Sheriff and a number of the principal freeholders.

Lord Milton, on behalf of himself and Mr. Marshall, in a very few words, returned thanks to the freeholders for the honour conferred upon them. And Mr. Wilson (at the request of Mr. Duncombe) returned thanks for himself and on behalf of that gentleman.

The new members were then chaired. The ancient custom of elevating a chair, and bearing the members on the shoulders of the electors, was abandoned on the present occasion, and ornamental cars, drawn by six horses, were substituted. The car in which Lord Milton and Mr. Marshall were seated was covered with orange silk, and splendidly decorated, and the postillions had fancy dresses to correspond. The car was drawn by six black horses. After perambulating the Castle-yard, the procession moved to Etridge's Hotel, accompanied by an immense body of freeholders.

Messrs. Wilson and Duncombe's car was covered with blue silk, the riders having dresses of the same material; it was drawn by six gray horses, and proceeded to the Black Swan Inn, accompanied by a great number of their friends. The friends of the several members afterwards dined together at their respective inns.

CALLINGTON.

This election closed on Monday, the 12th inst. when the numbers were declared for—

Alex. Baring, Esq.	121
M. Attwood, Esq.	98
Rich. Bradnall, Esq.	49

A petition to the House of Commons is determined on, as not only Mr. Bradnall, (who is a gentleman of high character and fortune), but the electors too, are resolved and pledged to oppose the system of splitting tenements, and making occasional votes, to the destruction of their proper elective franchise. It is contended that the poll will stand thus, when investigated by a Committee of the House of Commons:—

Baring	57
Bradnall	49
Atwood	37

Mr. Bradnall comes forward on the ministerial and independent interest, and nearly all his votes are plumpers.

MALDON.

A few minutes before three o'clock on Friday the Mayor came upon the hustings; at this instant two plumpers were voted for Mr. Dick, which caused much cheering. The clock having struck three, the Mayor declared the poll to be finally closed. After some little time occupied in casting up the books, a statement of the number standing against each candidate's name, was handed to the Mayor, who announced them to be as follows:—

Mr. Winn	1747
Mr. Lennard	1454
Mr. Dick	1401

Mr. Dick instantly stepped forward, and demanded to put in his claim for a scrutiny against Mr. Lennard previous to that gentleman being declared duly elected. (This was received with much cheering.)

Mr. P. Wright then addressed the Mayor, and demanded a scrutiny on the part of Mr. Lennard against Mr. Dick and Mr. Winn. (Applause and hisses.)

The Mayor now retired with the Recorder and other officers of the Court; Mr. Telford as counsel for Mr. Lennard, Mr. Sheppard for Mr. Dick, and Mr. Broderick for Mr. Winn.

IPSWICH ELECTION.

[From the Suffolk Chronicle.]

The poll closed at half-past three on Saturday last, leaving a majority in favour of the Yellows, eight for Mr. Haldimand, and seven for Colonel Torrens. An accurate statement of the poll during the several days has been handed to us, and is as follows:—

	Haldimand.	Torrens.	Mackinnon.	Dundas.
1st day	289	290	263	263
2nd day	416	416	384	384
3rd day	467	467	449	450
4th day	479	478	472	473
5th day	486	485	480	480
6th and close	496	495	488	488

Previously to the return being made by the bailiffs, they heard counsel on the right of voting claimed on behalf of some extra boatmen, who had been sworn in as occasional assistants in the service of the Customs, and whose votes had not been finally received. Similar votes, it seems, have been rejected by Government itself, during the present general election, on the authority of an Act excluding all custom-house officers, and all persons employed by the Customs, from exercising their franchise, unless they have been discharged twelve months from the service. When these votes had been finally rejected by the bailiffs (the counsel for the Blues having given way to the argument of Mr. Law, who was Counsel for the Yellows), the Blues demanded a scrutiny, chiefly on account of the paupers who had voted. This was refused by the bailiffs, on the grounds, that as they had not power to compel overseers to produce evidence, they had not competent jurisdiction; that when a scrutiny had been entered into before, leaves had been torn out of parish books by Blue overseers; that the measure would be exceedingly expensive, without the attainment of justice; that there were, in all probability, as many paupers on one side as the other; and that if the Blues carried the whole affair, as they said they would do, to the House of Commons, a committee of that House would take all matters into consideration, as they were fully competent to do, and decide upon the whole at once. Soon after the decision had been made known, and the return made, the candidates, on both sides, addressed their friends from their respective hustings. Mr. Mackinnon and Mr. Dundas insisted that they ought to have been returned, and stated that they would appeal to a higher Court.

MIDDLESEX.

It was confidently reported that a strong contest would take place for the representation of the county of Middlesex, and among the competitors for the honour, were named the Lord Mayor, Messrs. Ellice, Mellish, and Polhill; but, notwithstanding all the rumour afloat on the subject, matters were on Tuesday transacted very quietly at Brentford, and the old members, Messrs. Byng and Whitbread were returned without opposition. At about half-past ten o'clock Mr. Byng reached the hustings. Those of his retinue were decorated with orange and sky-blue ribbons. Shortly after followed his former colleague, whose friends were distinguished by pink and dark-blue colours.

Before the business commenced by proclamation, a man in the crowd, who said his name was Westbrook, a brickmaker, caused much laughter and some disapprobation, by a most obstreperous tirade, which he levelled at both the candidates. In the quantity of his invective, however, he gave a decided preference to Mr. Byng, whom he charged with an attempt to introduce "fire and faggot." Mr. Byng addressed one or two sentences to him in the way of a pacific reply; but the soothing system was of little avail, it rather contributed to raise the ire of the incensed elector.

The usual preliminary forms having been completed, and the usual speeches made,

Mr. Sheriff Crowder announced that George Byng, Esq. and Samuel Charles Whitbread, Esq. were duly elected.

The Members were chaired in the afternoon.

SPORTING INTELLIGENCE.

THE LATE DERBY STAKES.

We are authorised to publish the following report which was presented at a General Meeting of the Jockey Club, held at the Clarendon Hotel, on Saturday, the 17th instant, and approved by the Members present:

"The Committee appointed to enquire into the charges made by Mr. Farquharson, upon the subject of Mr. Thornhill's horse, The General, with reference to the last Derby Stakes, have to report that—

"They have heard the evidence brought forward by Mr. Farquharson, and also that which was produced by Mr. Thornhill, in answer thereto, and in explanation of the several matters contained in the statement delivered in to the Jockey Club by Mr. Farquharson, when called upon so to do by Mr. Thornhill; and they are unanimously of opinion, that Mr. Farquharson has entirely failed in proving any part of that statement.

GRAND RIFLE MATCH FOR 500 SOV. &c.

The interesting match between Lord Kennedy and — Vernon, Esq. to shoot at a target of peculiar construction, each party having 100 shots, was decided at the Red House Inclosure, Battersea, in the presence of a great assemblage of the first shots in the kingdom in favour of M. Vernon, his Lordship having given in long before the 100 shots were fired. His Lordship then shot a match for 300 sov. with Mr. Osbaldeston, but also gave in before the 50 pigeons were shot at. Another match has been made for a considerable sum between the last named parties.

BURIAL OF BARON VON WEBER.

Yesterday forenoon having been appointed as the time for the last offices to the remains of this distinguished composer, the vicinity of Great Portland-street was, as early as nine o'clock, thronged with respectably dressed persons, among whom appeared a very general expression of sympathy at the loss of so great an ornament to the science of music. At a quarter past nine o'clock the arrangements of the undertaker being completed, the coffin was placed in the hearse, and the funeral cavalcade slowly proceeded along the New-road, &c. to Moorfields.

The choir was perfectly complete, and contained some very distinguished performers; but the confusion that prevailed in the gallery, and the immense crowds, prevented us from obtaining any account of their names.

Some of the Psalms of David were delivered in Latin. The "Exaudiat" and "Miserere," were most delightfully executed, and the latter sublime hymn produced the most thrilling effect. The congregation joined in the response, and the high swelling tone of the organ produced a peculiarly grand impression. At the parts of the service where the responses of the "Beati Quorum," and the "Domine ne in furore," appeals to Heaven for mercy on the deceased and all mankind, several of the congregation were observed in tears. The "De profundis," was sung with exquisite taste; and the grand appeal commencing with "Domine exaudi," was given by the full choir in a brilliant manner.

The service proceeded with the usual prayers and ceremonies, and at its close the "Requiem" of Mozart was sung by the entire choir.

After the ceremonies had concluded, the coffin was lowered into the vault, the clergyman descending and reading the burial service.

Southwark Election.—The ceremony of chairing the Members returned to serve for the Borough took place yesterday morning. Sir Robert Wilson was not present, in consequence of the sudden death of his eldest daughter; but Mr. Calvert appeared in an open carriage. This procession started from the Obelisk in St. George's-fields, and passed through all the principal streets in Southwark, towards the Grove-house, Camberwell, where the friends of Sir Robert Wilson dined. At a late hour the preceding night, placards were posted up, stating that, in consequence of the sudden death of Sir Robert's eldest daughter, he would not be able to preside at the dinner, but that J. C. Hobhouse, Esq. would do so for him.

The Rev. Mr. Barwis, of Longrigg, near Winton, eulogizing Mr. Curwen, at the Cumberland county nomination, said—"Mr. Curwen was brought up in the greatest political school that this country ever saw. He was reared with Fox, with Burke, and with Erskine, and, what is more, he inherits all their talents!!" Mr. Barwis was hissed by some, and laughed at by others; whether justly, or no, we shall not undertake to decide; but the venerable trumpeter was not to be prevented from scrambling to his climax; and he appropriately concluded by saying, that the never-to-be-equalled Mr. Curwen "had done more good than all the politicians in the world ever could."—Whitehaven Paper.

Mrs. Radcliffe's "Gaston de Blondeville."—This Romance is introduced to the reader as decyphered from an illustrated MS. found in a chest which was dug up among the ruins of Kenilworth Castle. It contains the history of eight days spent by Henry the Third with his Court at Kenilworth, and abounds in images of the rude magnificence of the time, which set off and heighten the effect of the main adventure. The unearthy agency is powerfully imagined: "but we will not," says a late Review, "by giving the solution, injure the effect which every appearance of the spectre, until the grand and fearful catastrophe, is calculated to produce. The style is weighty as the subject; the figures, with which it is richly embossed, have a substance in them like quaint devices on a stately monument; and the general impression left, is of the chill magnificence and august superstitions of departed years."

A fine sturgeon, measuring eight feet six inches, and weighing above two hundred weight, was brought before the Lord Mayor yesterday morning, by Nelson, the water-bailiff. It was caught above the Kennington Lock, by getting through the bar. The Lord Mayor sent it to his Majesty, with orders to have the usual ceremony observed. It is the largest that has been caught for more than thirty-six years.

N.B.—At Charles Wright's Masquerade, Argyll Rooms, Tuesday Next.

Adolphus!—yes—'tis fix'd, we go:
Be prompt—and rove the circle through,
Until we meet—until our eyes
Exchange their watchful mysteries;
But mind—for Love's—for honor's sake,
Pass on—I may not—dare not speak:
Strict is my escort—ev'ry glance
Is rife with peril and mischance;
As you repace the crowded floor,
And when I see my aim is sure,
I'll drop a letter—seize with care
The pledge, and quickly disappear;
'Tis final—Read—in all obey,
Deserve, and hail a happier day!

P.S.—That Spanish mantle—wear it now,
The same dark feathers o'er your brow;
O'er mine, the signal I assume
You'll soon discern, your fav'rite plume;
While pendent from my neck shall rest
Hope's chosen symbol on my breast,
Her golden anchor—hced the sign;
The heart that flutters there, is thine.

NOTICES TO CORRESPONDENTS.

C. has communicated to us the following trait in the character of the new City Representative, WAITHMAN, which is certainly worth recording:—"A person who had done some work for WAITHMAN, was much pressed for money, and went perhaps somewhat prematurely to ask for assistance. One of the young W.'s told him he had no objection to give him a draft on account, to oblige him, provided, —— what?—provided he would give a guinea towards the expences of his father's Election!" The poor man was obliged to comply, and by this process was the Linen-draper returned.

We have received C. x R.'s favour, and are much obliged—if he will only say how we can address him, we have a good-sized volume of materiel to submit to his perusal.

X is thanked for his information—surely Lord GLENGALL, who is so remarkable for veracity, cannot assert that the Proprietor of this Paper is in prison, from not tendering bail to His LORDSHIP'S action,—but we will wade through the history of my Lord's maternal grandmother, Mrs. JEFFERIES, and see how far she would sanction such assertions, and thereby ascertain if the spirit runs in the family.

THE AGE.

LONDON, JUNE 25.

THE ELECTIONS.

We are afraid that it is going hard with Radicalism. BURDETT and CAM HOBHOUSE, 'tis true, have got in for Westminster, but this was to be expected. The place is for the men—the men are for the place. Beggary, riot, filth, and folly, must not be left without their Representatives, and the present ones would do at least as well as any other. We should as soon expect Billingsgate to abandon its dialect, as Westminster to choose any thing better than BURDETT and HOBHOUSE; though, after all, it may seem hard to a gentleman, whose lot has unluckily been cast in Westminster, to have such advocacy thrown in his teeth, and be forced, in the face of day, to admit that such men are his Representatives. For our part, we may not be very valiant, but we should think that our first impulse would be to knock the man down who should suppose us acquiescent in the selection. But "Freedom of Election"—"Representative purity"—"Virtuous Reform," and so forth, as may be seen more at large in the annual speech of Sir FRANCIS himself, and in the septennial oratory of his supporting cobblers, order the matter otherwise, and tell the nobleman or gentleman that he should be very well pleased to find himself stripped only of his vote, when in such an association he might so naturally have been stripped of other things. But all this is "The Rights of Man;" and Sir FRANCIS carries the day, as he ought. Still there must be some surprise, among the few Radicals who can read and write, that Sir FRANCIS, not content with rough-riding the Westminsterians, should insist on their carrying double, and such a double! Boroughs are no doubt exeellent things, and the cheaper the borough, the better in the estimation of the economical Baronet. Westminster is incomparably convenient in this point, for Sir FRANCIS would see all its population washed before he would expend a farthing of his idolized purse upon them. CAM HOBHOUSE has the vigour of servility, and he stands as a thorough substitute in the House for the BARONET, when he finds some topic on foot too distressing for his nerves, and stays at home to save his feelings. But this might be so easily done by any other street-orator, that we must leave the original choice and steady continuance of the BARONET'S "Man," as Mr. CANNING calls him, to be explained alone, when some antiquarian shall suddenly fall in with the records of Radicalism, shake the dust from Cobbettian correspondence, and let out the "secrets of the prison house," in the publication of the "BURDETT papers."

In the country, however, where men wash their faces, hear the parson occasionally, and are not dextrous in picking pockets, and the use of phosphorus-boxes, and centre-bits, things are not going on well. COBBETT, with all his rancour, foaming at the mouth against all the world, and roaring out his lungs in all possible nonsense, will be thrown out, neck and heels, at Preston. The bone-grubbing, the debt to poor BURDETT (who, in that instance, lost alike his money and his man), the white feather, and all the other events of his eventful life, have come up in array against him, and even the friend and worshipper of TOM PAINE, is popular no more. But COBBETT was wrong in his location. He should have come to Westminster. There, with kindred souls to sustain him, with the true recipients for his oratory open-mouthed before him, and not a man who could reproach him with any inferiority of any kind, he might have unhorsed the Baronet himself. At all events, he would have learned to ride behind him; and Westminster might have had the honour and pleasure of seeing two Representatives, each as independent of the other as both, and fairly unequalled in the empire.

HUNT is making fierce battle against Sir THOMAS LETHBRIDGE in Somerset. The contest is amusing enough, and HUNT has infinitely the best of it in point of tongue. We think the liquid-blacking fellow a very superior animal to O'Connell's animal. HUNT is a bold, brutal, and sturdy creature, probably sincere, and certainly no unworthy specimen of the lowest order of JOHN BULLISM. COBBETT is a beggar in rhetoric, to the phrenzy, force, and straight-forward ferocity of his illustrious friend. In short, unfortunate Sir THOMAS LETHBRIDGE has got into very bad hands, and if he does not come out of the conflict as much battered and bruised, broken, and ridiculous as any country gentleman would wish to be, we are mistaken in HUNT altogether. Sir THOMAS, on the other hand, is by no means deficient in scurrility. He is as bull-fronted, brawling, and self-satisfied a gentleman, as any of the native breed of Somerset. He blunders as intrepidly as most men can do for their souls, and is as arrogant as thick-headedness and ten thousand a-year can make a knight of the shire. But he has met more than his match—for example:—

Wednesday morning the polling commenced, and continued during the day without spirit. But few of the voters for Mr. Hunt made their appearance. His bands were no longer heard in the town; but the other Candidates supplied the lounging country people with music on the same terms.

Soon after the Court-house opened, and the Sheriff took his seat, Mr. Hunt and Sir T. Lethbridge entered.

Sir T. Lethbridge, addressing the Sheriff, said he had a question to put to Mr. Hunt, which would settle the business altogether; but the Sheriff ruled that it could not then be put.

The bribery oath was then administered, and the voters were sent to the booths to undergo examination as to their qualifications: Mr. Hunt ran from booth to booth, and was as severe in questioning the voters for Sir T. Lethbridge, as if (to use his own language) the representation of the county was "a toss up" between them.

At five o'clock the poll-books were closed, and brought into the Sheriff; but the speaking was delayed, in consequence of the numerous objections made by Mr. Hunt to some votes, and his elaborate defence of others.

The Sheriff declared that the state of the poll was as follows:—

Mr. Dickinson	972	Mr. Hunt	179
Sir T. Lethbridge	874

The following is a specimen of the manner in which this contest is conducted on the part of Hunt.

Sir T. Lethbridge then turning towards Mr. Hunt, who had got up close to him, said, "Now, Sir, do you wish to say any thing? You shall have the opportunity."

Mr. Hunt.—No, no; you are yet above me on the poll, and can avail yourself of your situation. (Laughter and hisses.)

Sir T. Lethbridge declared that he was highly gratified at the state of the poll. As far as they had taken the sense of the county, that sense had been most energetically expressed. He concluded by congratulating the voters upon the successful efforts they had made in turning aside the stigma which had been attempted to be attached to the county.

Mr. Dickinson expressed, in a few words, his thanks for the strong proofs of approbation he had received.

Mr. Hunt said, as to Sir T. Lethbridge, that Honourable Person had said he should be astonished if the person would not decline any further attempt to get up on the poll. It was not the first time Sir Thomas had been astonished at what he (Mr. Hunt) was disposed to do, nor should it be the last. (Laughter and hisses.) He (Mr. Hunt) should consider that he should be acting disgracefully to the county of Somerset and to himself, and that he would deserve to be branded as the wearer of the white feather, if he listened for a moment to Sir Thomas Lethbridge upon such a subject. Not more than a sixth or seventh part of the county had already polled; and unless more was done by both of the old Members, with the blessing of God he would not only gallop up to them, but pass by them in less than ten days. (Cheers, hisses, and laughter.)

Mr. Dickinson begged to say a few words, as something had been said upon this and former occasions by the Gentleman opposite (Mr. Hunt) of a personal nature. He thought it necessary to declare now, that he had in his possession documents relating to the private and public character of that Gentleman, and that he should make use of them in case he considered himself called upon to do so. He then defended his conduct in Parliament.

Sir Thomas Lethbridge—My worthy friend has alluded to a weapon which he has in store, with which to chastise this individual.

Mr. Hunt to Sir Thomas—Ba, ba, ba, boo.—(Laughter.)

Sir T. Lethbridge—I assure my hon. friend that whatever may be the weapon, this animal (pointing to Mr. H.) will not feel it.—(Laughter, cheers, and hisses.)

Mr. Hunt—I say, Sir Thomas.

Sir T. Lethbridge—Well, Sir.

Mr. Hunt (pointing at him with his finger)—Bow, wow, wow—(Roars of laughter, and great tumult.)

Sir T. Lethbridge—If any other person in this court had said one word of what this extraordinary animal has uttered, I would at once take notice of it.

Mr. Hunt—I only said bow, wow, wow, Sir Thomas—(Uproar and laughter, amidst which the Sheriff adjourned the Hall.)

This is all very lively in its way, and must have been of great benefit to the general audience. The fact is, that the Somersetshire BARONET makes but a sheepish figure, and the fox-hunting capacity does not shine much more on the hustings than at table. The conduct of the BARONET'S son, "his gallant boy," the other day, was also something in the landed-interest style, and he met with such a rebuff that we are afraid his talents will not be conspicuous for a vast length of time.

In all this, we know that Sir THOMAS LETHBRIDGE is a very diligent advocate of Protestantism, and every thing else that he takes it into his sagacious head to think worthy of his eloquence. But all partiality apart, we wish that he would confine himself for ever to turnpike bills, poor-rates, game convictions, and the other customary and appropriate employments of the squirish intellect. He makes but a miserable exhibition when he handles mightier things, and we can assure him, that the kindest effort of his advocacy in the House would be—to hold his tongue.

Mr. MESSITER, the County Treasurer, too, has come in for his share of popular discussion, and his accounts will, we presume, form the subject of a little more enquiry still. Mr. DICKENSON, too, the other candidate, a very silent, indignant and gouty gentleman, has been handled in the same agreeable style. We hope he will make a better figure in the House than on the hustings, for there his castigator had it all in his own way. Now, with all our aristocratic partialities, and genuine hatred of the mob, and the men of the mob, we must ask, what is the earthly use of sending blockheads into the Council of the Nation. The county-breed, as they are now chosen, are a burlesque. They have no talent that can give them importance as advisers; they cannot open their mouths without making all the world wonder at their want of self knowledge. Many of them, and those much the wiser, never make the attempt; and where infirmity, indolence, and ignorance, are the qualifications, we cannot conceive that it would not be the wisest act of all to stay at home. We consider HUNT a barbarian—but save us from blundering babyism and bloated pride, even though it should be roared into parliament by all the forty-shilling freeholders of the most burly proprietors of the most fox-hunting and foolish population of England.

Mr. HOLME SUMNER has been turned out, by PALMER, for Surrey. This, too, moves no sorrow of ours. Mr. HOLME SUMNER is, to the general conception, personally, one of the most assuming and arrogant persons alive. He might have come in for ever for his county, if his manners had not stood in the way. Bustling and brawling may do very well for dependents, but the time comes when it comes back to its employer. And Mr. HOLME SUMNER, as he has now got his lesson, will have leisure to polish his style, and teach himself, in obscurity and ridicule, to learn, if the thing be possible at his time of life, the civility of a gentleman. He may thank himself alone for having been tossed out of Surrey!

MARRIAGE IN HIGH LIFE.

Lady CHARLOTTE OSBORNE, daughter of the Duke of LEEDS, eloped on Thursday morning, with FOX LANE'S brother, SACKVILLE, and was married at St. George's, the same day, at 9 o'clock, if the following extract from yesterday's Post be true:

Marriages.—On Thursday morning last, at St. George's Hanover-square, Sackville Fox, Esq., to the Right Hon. Lady Charlotte Osborne, daughter of his Grace the Duke of Leeds.

If it were only for the purpose of furnishing posterity with as correct a view as possible of the actions and impulses of the present generation, we should feel bound to publish the following "Copy of a Letter from Lord COCHRANE to his Highness MOHAMMED ALI, Pacha of Egypt," which has gone the regular round of the press during the last week, and been generally acknowledged as genuine. But we have, in addition to this feeling, a still stronger one—of exemplifying the proceedings of those personages who are looked upon in these forlorn days as the safe-guards of the nation abroad, and the only fit representatives of it when at home. My Lord COCHRANE has latterly deserved so well of his country, that she is bound to consider any thing emanating from his Lordship's brain of the utmost value to her prosperity, even though it bear a direct reference to another State; and in this light must GREAT BRITAIN view the singular address herewith subjoined. Every one remembers the adage which declares, "that the Devil himself can quote Scripture to serve his own ends," and it must undoubtedly have been under this, and this impression alone, that his Lordship proposed to Christianise the poor Pacha by the quotation from Isaiah, which cuts so distinguished a figure in his appeal to him--for what other bearing it professes we have not the remotest idea; but ALI is so much accustomed to treat with pirates, that we imagine even this holy touch will produce very little effect on the Egyptian Councils. The Times, which first introduced this precious pearl into existence, roundly asserts that it is "a master-piece of coolness and self-possession;" and however much we might feel disposed to question the judgment of this journal respecting the latter qualification, we can have no difficulty in so far uniting our opinion to its own on one point, which is, that it is certainly one of the coolest productions we ever remember to have perused.--Ecce signum:—

COPY OF A LETTER FROM LORD COCHRANE TO HIS HIGHNESS MOHAMMED ALI, PACHA OF EGYPT.

Your employing foreigners in your military and naval service, the privilege which you claim and exercise of building and equipping ships of war in neutral States, and of purchasing steam-vessels, and hiring transports under neutral flags, for hostile purposes, and to transport to slavery a people whom the Ottoman arms have never yet been able to subdue, warrants a belief, (whatever your sentiments may be), that the civilized, educated, and liberal portions of mankind will be gratified, that succours, similar to those which you have unfortunately obtained hitherto from those States, are now about to be afforded to the brave, the oppressed, and suffering Greeks; nor will the advantage derived be wholly theirs; for until you shall cease or be forced to abandon your inhuman traffic in Christian slaves, and the commission of cruelties which stain the character of man, your subjects must inevitably continue barbarous—a state from which it would be a source of great gratification to contribute to release them.

It is true that the Christian world have not of late contended in arms with those of your faith on points of religion; they have not, however, fallen into a state of apathy so great as to see unheeded the perpetration of those enormities which you are daily committing on their Christian brethren: a sentiment with which no feeling of animosity towards you, or towards your people, is combined, but, on the contrary, a desire to render you every good service consistent with that duty, paramount to all others—namely, to wipe out the stain from the civilized world, of unfeelingly and inhumanly co-operating to exterminate, enslave, and transport to bondage, a whole Christian people; and such a people, the descendants of those Greeks, whose genius laid the chief foundation of literature and the arts—who reared those noble monuments and edifices, which time, and the more destructive barbarian hand, have yet failed to destroy, and which, compared with the wretched hovels of your hordes, may better point out to you the elevation they attained, and the prostrate state in which your people are—owing, alas! to the baneful effects of bigotry and despotic sway. Surely, surely, there is ample field for the exercise of your energies at home, in encouraging industry, the arts, and sciencies, in promoting the civilization of your people, and in enacting equitable laws for the security of persons and property; on which basis the national prosperity of all countries must rest. But should your ambition, not content with bestowing blessings like these on your native land, lead you to soar almost above mortal acts, distant oceans would unite, and the extremities of the globe approach at your command! thus might your name be rendered immortal, and Egypt again become the emporium of commerce, and one of the richest and happiest nations upon earth. How infinitely great the glory of such acts! How despicable the fame of a tyrant conqueror—the ruler of slaves!

It would be pleasing to support you as the author of great and good works; but it is shameful to permit your present proceedings, and dastardly to leave the unfeeling and apostate sons of neutral and Christian nations unopposed, aiding to perpetuate barbarism for horrid gain, drawn from the price of Christians torn from their homes, and sold as slaves in foreign lands.

Against these atrocious men, my companions and myself cast the gauntlet down, and will contend, in the hope, that you and they may perceive your true interests, and your great error, and pursue a different course before it shall be too late. Quit the classic sacred soil of Greece. Let the flayings, the burnings, and impalings of this people cease; and, oh! shocking to humanity! the ripping up of pregnant females, and the hewing in pieces of their infant babes, and other acts yet worse than these, too horrid to relate! Release the Christian slaves—pursue an honourable and enlightened path, and we become friends to aid you in your pursuits. But should the present course be continued, let the bands of cruel assassins in your employ count on our opposition; count, too, on our neutralizing the effect of every vessel procured or bought from Christian States. "Hear the word of the Lord, ye rulers," (in the prophecy now to be fulfilled.)—"Wo to them that go down to Egypt for help and stay."* "When the Lord shall stretch out his hand, both he that helpeth shall fall, and he that is holpen shall fall down, and they all shall fall together."

Instead of filling brimful the cup of bitterness, of which you yourself must ultimately drink, how admirably might you employ your people, and your treasure, the waste whereof is bearing to you a barbarian successor, to prolong the bondage of Egypt.

The Christian prayer of those called to rescue their suffering brethren is, that conforming yourself to the dictates of reason and humanity, you may live long to benefit mankind; and as you are more enlightened than your predecessors, so may you become more humane and just.

(Signed) COCHRANE.

* Isaiah, c. 31.

When a man once becomes afflicted with the mania of ELECTIONEERING, he seldom permits a trifle to stand in his way; and to such an extent has this feeling prevailed with Mr. ROWLAND STEPHENSON, the Cockney Banker of Lombard-street, that no sooner had he returned from his late honourable and distinguished journey into Herefordshire, than he started for the gown, vacated by the death of Mr. ALDERMAN COX, and is now using every possible exertion to secure his return for the Ward of Aldersgate. We shall not at the present moment dilate on any expeditions, either theatrical, amatory, or senatorial, of this redoubtable citizen, but reserve them for any suitable occasion that may present itself; yet we cannot dismiss the subject without extending a caution to Sir PETER LAURIE, Mr. Sheriff KELLY, Mr. KAY, and the other candidates, apprizing them of the usual system adopted by their antagonist on any such occasion—for if there be the least quibble by which either of them can possibly be declared INELIGIBLE, they may rest assured it will be taken advantage of.

In looking over the opinions we placed on record in the autumn of last year, when the subject of the GENERAL ELECTION was considerably agitated, we find so many prophetic remarks, that we hope to be pardoned for any slight recapitulation that may appear to us of the least utility at the present moment. We find the following lines on the probable issue of the contest at Reading:

At Reading, where fish-sauce has got such renown,
They're resolved to send FISH up much better to town:
In order their present supplier may see
They're not to be palmed on by such men as he.

The result of the late election in this select borough rather corresponds with this suggestion, for Mr. FYSCHE PALMER, we rejoice to say, has lost his election there, after as arduous a fight as we can at this moment call to mind. PALMER was never made for a senator, and if, in a moment of drunkenness or bribery, the good people of Reading once made him so, the least they could do, on coming to their senses, was to *un*make him—and so it is.

In speaking, at the very period above alluded to, of the chances at Coventry, we ventured thus to give our sentiments:—

The people of Coventry feel the disgrace
Of dubbing their members heir-looms of their place,
And wisely, at last, scruple not to express
They will have less of MORE, and no more of ELLICE.

And here again, oddly enough, we are borne out by facts—for Messrs. ELLICE and PETER MOORE have not only been turned out from the representation of this very civilized city, but they have been, into the bargain, as well beplaistered with dirt and blackguardism, as any two poor devils in Christendom need be. The honour of such an association as that of PETER MOORE, could only have been competed for at any time by such a place as Coventry; and it is not, therefore, much to be wondered at, that in proportion as "the march of intellect" (to use a familiarism of the present day) proceeds, even these people should be inspired, towards their late members, with the sentiments of Sir JOHN FALSTAFF, and exclaim—

"I'll not march through Coventry with 'em, that's flat."

Those two distinguished Senators, *Leather*BREECHES and *Leather*HEAD, as Messrs. BYNG and WHITBREAD are generally called, have been returned without opposition for Middlesex. The spirit of a sparrow, in any man, would have defeated them.

The advocates of Popery have, until within this last week, uplifted their brazen fronts in very full daring, owing to the partial ascendancy their cause receiv d in the termination of the Borough Election, and the absence of any struggle for Westminster and Middlesex, by which means they retain some trifling power in the old Members of these places—but this aspiring confidence has been monstrously shaken, since our last paper appeared, by the result of the two contests we have just alluded to, by the defeat of Lord JOHN RUSSELL at Huntingdon, and the evident decline of the influence of the noble house he belongs to, in its hereditary county, by the triumph of Mr. MACQUEEN, over the Marquis of TAVISTOCK—together with the scouting of those two dreadful blackguards, COBBETT and HUNT, in the spheres they are now respectively agitating—a notice of which appears in our leading article.

It will be seen that our friend "fighting Bob" is returned for Mayo.

The greatest exertions are making to secure the return of Mr. G. DAWSON for Tipperary, and with a view of giving every possible strength to the cause, my Lady GLENGALL has started for Ireland, to exercise those abilities for which she has ever been, in matters of this kind, so celebrated. We congratulate HER LADYSHIP on one part of her mission, viz.—that her interest in this country is not about to be employed in behalf of any member of her own family; for, if in one of those humours in which sons now and then indulge, and mamas patronise, it had pleased her to nominate her son RICHARD, it is almost superfluous to say that HIS LORDSHIP would have been treated with the most sovereign contempt, even in the county of Tipperary!

By a very proper spirit on the part of Colonel MACKINNON, we are enabled to lay before our readers a renewed attempt, on the part of that miserable prostitute, calling herself HARRIETTE WILSON, to extort a sum of money from those distinguished individuals who, in an early part of their life, condescended to make themselves in any respect known to her. Although the conduct of this courtezan has very properly come under the cognizance of the law, and executions have in consequence been levied on the property of the vagabond who published her infamy, yet we do not hesitate, with a view to suppress a continuation of these outrages, to give the utmost exposure to her horrible practices. The following is the letter received, within this last week, by Colonel MACKINNON, and we cannot too much applaud his manliness in enabling us to circulate it:—

My very old acquaintance, Mr. Mackinnon, late of the Guards, will much and greatly oblige me by sending me thirty pounds, and if he does so immediately, I shall, out of gratitude, and for old acquaintance sake, burn the Sketch I have drawn of him in my Memoirs, about to be sold to a publisher—It is not FLATTERING, I confess—but Mr. Mackinnon has invariably shewn himself selfish towards me, therefore cannot wonder if I do not scruple to shew him up to ridicule, as far as truth will admit. However, if he obliges me with the trifle I want just now, he will quite disarm me—otherwise it will certainly be published.

I remain, obediently,
H. ROCHFORT (late WILSON).

Direct to me at Mr. Allen's, wine merchant, No. 33, Threadneedle-street, City, and it will be forwarded free. Do, however, just as you please—I shall not apply to you again.

Dan. Mackinnon, Esq. Ipswich.

JURYMEN.

We consider it of the utmost importance to give every publicity to the following circumstance; and from the perspicuous manner in which it is given in our cotemporary, the Courier, we cannot do better than adopt that paper's very judicious account of it:—

At the London Sessions, a person of the name of Nettleship was fined for non-attendance when summoned as a juryman. Mr. Nettleship stated, that "when the summons was served on him, in May last, he was about to commence a commercial journey in an hour, for which he had been making preparations several days before; he, therefore, hoped the court would be pleased to remit the fine it had imposed upon him."

The Lord Mayor, after conferring with the aldermen on the bench, informed the applicant that, "in order that it might be known that private business must not be put into competition with a public duty, the court were of opinion that the fine should be enforced."

Mr. Nettleship replied, that "the journey was due at the time, and it was important that he should go and collect monies due to him."

The court refused relief, observing, that "unless reasonable cause were shown, absentees in all cases would be mulcted."

[Now, surely, there was no want of "reasonable cause" in the above statement of Mr. Nettleship, assuming that statement to be correct. Private affairs, of an ordinary character, should not, we willingly allow, be admitted as a valid excuse to shield a man from the discharge of a public duty; but when the performance of the latter would obviously operate to the serious injury of an individual, as in this case, and when, too, the course of public business would experience no hindrance, inasmuch as others were present who could give their time to the public, we do think the penalty ought not to be enforced. We should like to know, indeed, what is to be considered a reasonable excuse on such occasions; if it be not sufficient to shew that serious detriment to a man's private interests would be the consequence of his obeying the summons.]

THEATRES.

Drury Lane Theatre terminated its season on Tuesday, and its rival on Friday last. As the pages of this Journal are so continually referred to for dramatic information, we feel justified in transmitting to posterity the following unique address, delivered on the occasion by Mr. FAWCETT, the Stage Manager:

"Ladies and Gentlemen—Custom and good manners require from us, at the termination of our theatrical season, some acknowledgement of the support which we have received. During a period of commercial and manufacturing distress, it is not to be expected that a Theatre can be triumphantly successful; we have, however, little cause for complaint, and much for the language of congratulation and gratitude. I must now bid you farewell, and express the thanks of the proprietors, the performers, and, though last, not least in the acknowledgment of obligation, return you thanks on my part, for the indulgence with which our efforts have been received. The Theatre is closed until the latter part of September, and the interval will, I assure you, be spent in your service."

In reading this sublime effusion, one is naturally impressed with the idea that the said Mr. FAWCETT is the most polished man in existence—whether it be the case, or not, we do not pretend to determine—but certain it is, that it would have been quite as well for him, throughout his managerial career, if he had always been on such intimate terms with "good manners," as he seems to have on the present occasion. However, having been appointed, for the ensuing year, sole director of COVENT GARDEN THEATRE, and being aided in the musical department by that distinguished genius, Sir SNUFFLE SHUFFLE, we shall see wonders accomplished yet. It was, indeed, high time that some change took place in the administration of the affairs of this concern, as the events of Friday fully proved, exclusive of all preceding concurrence of testimony: for on the very day the proprietors terminated as disastrous a season as they ever had, they were cast in the Court of King's Bench, by Mr. SINCLAIR, to the amount of 420l., and more than half as much, we should presume, for costs, through a mean attempt to deprive this singer of the "reward of merit." We have seldom seen a more bare-faced defence than the one set up on this occasion, which will easily account for its being immediately set down: and if Mr. HENRY ROBERTS [illegible] acquit himself at all times so notably in the [illegible] of his important duties in the theatre, as he did on [illegible] occasion in Court, he must really be a very talented and valuable officer.

The Drury-lane Committee assembled yesterday se'nnight—again on Thursday last, by adjournment, and yesterday again, by further adjournment;—but [illegible] was the result of their deliberations, we did not exactly ascertain.

COURT OF KING'S BENCH.—(Yesterday.)

MARTIN ESQ. V. CLEMENT.

This was an action brought by Henry Martin, Esq. the Member for Galway, against the defendant, proprietor of the Morning Chronicle Newspaper, for a series of attacks published in that Journal in the months of July, September, and October, in the last year.

Mr. Chitty opened the pleadings, and Mr. Gurney proceeded to state the nature of the case. He said that the plaintiff was a gentleman well known, and during his official duties in the House of Commons, he had caused a Bill to pass for the Prevention of Cruelty to Animals, in consequence of which he charged a boy with ill-treating an ass, by beating it with a bludgeon, and the attacks in question arose from some proceedings that took place before the Magistrates on that occasion, which were afterwards published in the Morning Chronicle. The Learned Counsel said that his client had only brought this action in the vindication of his character.

Here the Attorney-General, who appeared on the behalf of the defendant, rose and said, that his client had no intention whatever of impugning the character of the Hon. Gentleman (Mr. Martin) and felt sorry that such had occurred. He (Mr. Attorney-General) considered, if the plaintiff was present, he would be satisfied with what he had stated, and agree to a nominal verdict against his client.

Mr. Gurney said, all Mr. Martin required was, a justification of his conduct, and that being done, he should not carry the cause further.

The Jury was then called on, when they returned a verdict for the plaintiff, damages 1s. costs 40s.

THE ARMY.

MILITARY COURT MARTIAL.

At a general court martial held at Chatham on the 26th April, 1826, Major Edward Browne of the 36th Regiment of Foot, was arraigned on the following charge:—

"For threatening to put Lieutenant Hewitt, R.N. the Commander of the transport then at sea, in a gale of wind, with a detachment of the 36th Foot on board, under arrest, and to take the command of the said transport into his own hands."

Upon which charge the court came to the following decision:—

"That Major Edward Browne is guilty in part of the charge preferred against him, in having threatened to put Lieutenant Hewitt, R.N. under arrest; but the court acquit him of the remaining part of the charge, as it does not appear that any actual interference was exercised by him, or any alteration made in navigating the transport, in consequence of the expressions used by him; and the court does therefore sentence Major Browne to be publicly and severely reprimanded."

His Majesty has been pleased to confirm and approve the finding of the sentence of the court; but his Majesty was at the same time pleased to consider the conduct of Major Browne to have been most injudicious, and calculated to bring into contempt the authority of the officer of his Majesty's navy placed in the responsible charge of the transport; and under this view of the case, his Majesty was pleased to command, that Major Browne shall be called upon to retire from the service, with permission to receive the value of his commission.

The gallant 56th Regiment has just arrived at Portsmouth from the East Indies, after a service of upwards of twenty years. This regiment, which, it will be remembered, was at the storming of the Isle of France, is returned with nearly its complement of men

Marshall's New Peristrephic Panorama of the Bombardment of Algiers, in Spring Gardens, is more attractive than any of its predecessors. We perceive on Monday the Boys of the Royal Military Asylum visit it by permission of the Duke of York.

We are most happy to announce the safe arrival of that undaunted and indefatigable traveller, Capt. Clapperton, at Loocatoo, the residence of his old friend, the Sultan Bello. This information is from Mr. James, who is resident at Whydah, and a sort of agent to the mission, who dates the 20th of April. This is a grand point gained. Mr. Dickson, who pursued a different route through the kingdom of Dahomey, was at a place called Cha, from whence he expected to reach Youri in a few days.—Morning paper.

The King's Visit to the Duke of York.—On Wednesday morning, about ten o'clock, his Majesty left his Royal Lodge, in Windsor Park, in his open travelling carriage, to visit his Royal Brother, the Duke of York. His Majesty alighted from his carriage at the apartments of his Royal Sister, the Princess Sophia, at his Palace in Kensington; and shortly after the King proceeded to the Duke of York's house in South Audley-street, where Sir Henry Halford was in attendance to report to the King the state of the Royal Duke, which, we are happy to say, was—"That his Royal Highness was a great deal better, and had experienced a very good night." The King remained with his Royal Brother nearly an hour and a half, and then left town on his return to the Royal Lodge.

The military were brought into Weymouth on Monday, in consequence of the riotous proceedings in that town.

An article from Florence, dated June 6, states that the new Government at Napoli di Romania has not only readily acceded to the demands of the commanders of European naval squadrons, immediately to set at liberty a great number of merchantmen detained in that port, but that it has even had a great many of them conveyed to their destination by the two Captains Secturi and Jakini,

A meeting of the London and Birmingham Rail-road Company was held on Thursday, at the London Tavern, to take into consideration the recommendation of the Directors that the Company be dissolved. Resolutions were unanimously agreed to, to that effect; and also, that the balance in hand be divided among the Proprietors. The whole amount subscribed was upwards of 17,000l., of which about 2,500l. had been expended in surveys and law expenses—leaving a sum of 15s. 9d. on every pound subscribed. The meeting was not numerous; but there was a warm expression of satisfaction at the zeal and economy which the Directors had manifested in promoting the objects of the Company, and of regret that the altered circumstances of the times should have rendered it necessary to abandon a design which promised to have been so beneficial to the shareholders, and so advantageous to the country at large. Had the money which was lavished away on foreign loans (one of the proprietors observed) been expended in ordinary objects of national improvement at home, this, as well as many other projects which had been abandoned, would have been under a profitable operation.

The launch of his Majesty ship Powerful, of 84 guns, took place on Wednesday, at Chatham. Early in the morning the ships and vessels on the Medway were seen displaying their various colours. The company began to assemble about eleven o'clock, and before one, some thousands of spectators had arrived, and were accommodated with handsome booths, erected for the purpose, on each side of the ship. The Powerful is built by the same draught as the Formidable, which was launched from Chatham Yard last year. She has a circular stern, and, throughout, built on Sir Robert Sepping's improved plan. At half-past one, most of the blocks being split out from under the keel, the order was given by the builder, G. Parkin, Esq. to "down with the dog-shore," when she glided off her ways in a very majestic style, and the huzzas of the spectators, who were not quite so numerous as on some former occasions; a shower of rain coming on at twenty o'clock, was the cause.

LAW INTELLIGENCE.

COURT OF KING'S BENCH, June 19.
Sittings after Term, before the Lord Chief Justice.

NECESSARIES TO A MARRIED WOMAN.

PARKER V. MORRIS.

This action was brought to recover the price of a quantity of shoes, and some articles of furniture, supplied to Mrs. Morris, the wife of the defendant. It appeared that she had lodged a short time in the plaintiff's house, and her distresses having been made known to him, and also that she was the wife of the defendant, he was induced to furnish her with the articles which became the subject of this action. It was proved, that whilst Morris was confined under an arrest in the house of Radcliffe, a sheriff's officer, Mrs. Morris came with her child, and the defendant said it was his wife and child. He added, that his father was a man of fortune in Ireland, and would pay all her debts.

The Lord Chief Justice, in his address to the jury, said it was clear she was not living with her husband; but if a man deserts his wife, and others supply her with necessaries, they have a right to recover a reasonable compensation. If she elopes from him, and commits adultery, the husband is no longer obliged to support her; but if, without a charge of adultery or reasonable cause, a man deserts his wife, merely that he may live with another, any person supplying his wife with necessaries may recover. The defendant is said to be the son of a gentleman of fortune in Ireland, but there is no proof why he should discard his wife. I cannot agree with the learned counsel for the defendant, when he says the plaintiff cannot, in law, recover. I think if a married woman is living deserted by her husband, and she cannot have necessaries and lodging, there is no law to say a person supplying her with lodging and necessaries may not recover from the husband. The statement that she was not his legal wife is a question that neither you, gentlemen of the jury, nor I, can decide in this place.

The jury found a verdict for the plaintiff—Damages 39l. 13s.

June 21.

THE KING V. HARBOROUGH AND ANOTHER.

This was an indictment against Lord Harborough and James Bayley, Esq. for an assault on Richard Adderson, a watchman, belonging to the parish of St. George, Hanover-square, on the 30th of June last, in Stevens's hotel, Bond-street.

The Common Sergeant stated that the unfortunate prosecutor in this case had been obliged to appear against a noble peer of the realm, and the other defendant, who was a gentleman living in high respectability in society. His wish was, that persons of distinction might never place themselves in a situation which called for the interference of criminal law. Lord Harborough and his friend, Mr. Bray, were returning to his hotel in June last, late at night. They were making a noise in Bond-street: the watchman had been told to prevent all noise and disturbance in the street, as there was a lady lying dangerously ill. The watchman requested Lord Harborough would not repeat the noise he was making, but finding all his remonstrances disregarded, he endeavoured to take him into custody. Lord Harborough ran from him and rang the bell at his hotel. The watchman followed, and on the door being opened was pushed in by Mr. Bray, Lord Harborough's friend. When the watchman was within the door, the defendants beat him in a most serious manner, and the man would have lost his life had he not been rescued by other watchmen who came to his assistance. The learned counsel said he should call his witnesses and prove the facts he had stated.

Richard Adderson, a watchman of St. George's parish, Hanover-square, said he was watchman in June last year. On the morning of the 20th, his beat was in Conduit-street, Bond-street. He saw Lord Harborough and another gentleman making a great noise about two o'clock in the morning; Lord H. was making a loud cry, like the cry made by sailors. This was near Mr. Cooper's house; Mrs. Cooper was ill at the time; the witness told him not to make a noise; he said he had a right to make a noise, and continued his disturbance; the witness said, if they were gentlemen, they ought to conduct themselves differently; the witness sprang his rattle, and said he should take them into custody; he went to lay hold of him, and Lord Harborough ran away to Stevens's hotel; there was no scuffle before he ran away; at the door of Stevens's he laid hold of him; the door was open; he rushed in, and the friend who was with him pushed the witness in after him; Lord Harborough called out, rescue; and several more gentlemen came to his assistance. Mr. Bray pulled off his coat and began to knock the witness about. My Lord called for the poker. When he had the poker in his hand, he cried "Now for Waterloo!" He beat the witness about the head. The witness produced the weapon, which was a small iron rod with a hook. Captain Bayley assisted Lord Harborough in beating the witness. They pulled the coat over his head and dragged him up to the stair-case. My Lord said, "Now, Bayley, d——n him, do for him; pay him; d——n him, kill him." Bayley struck the witness a severe blow between the eyes with his fist. Then some other watchmen came to his assistance. The other watchmen came in and took him off. He then got away; he had a wife and family, and was three weeks ill in consequence of the assault.

Another watchman deposed to the same effect.

Mr. Henry Bray was acquainted with Lord Harborough. On the night of the 20th of June he was in company with Lord Harborough, who, on passing the house of his noble relation, gave a cry of "Yeo, ho!" The watchman came up and said, Don't make that noise. The man was very impertinent indeed. He said, Don't make a noise, or I shall take him to the watchhouse. The witness said, I do not make a noise. Lord Harborough then ran across the street, and rang his bell. The watchman came up and said he would take him to the watchhouse; Lord Harborough said, I may make a noise at my own door. The watchman said, do if you dare Lord Harborough then did give a "Yeo, ho!" The watchman then sprung his rattle, the other watchman, Murphy, came up and asked what was the matter; the answer was, this gentleman has been making a noise in the street; Murphy said it was Lord Harborough, he knew him very well, and that he lived there; the watchman said he did not care who it was, he would have him to the watchhouse. The door being open, Lord Harborough rushed into the coffee-room. The watchman went in after him. The witness also went in and remonstrated with the watchman. He told him to let Lord H. go. The watchman laid hold of him, on which the witness caught hold of the watchman's arms, and released Lord Harborough. The watchman then seized the witness. He could not get away, and Mr. Bayley came down from a room up stairs. The watchmen came in and behaved in the most brutal way. Lord Harborough was beaten black and blue, and so was Mr. Bayley. The clothes were torn off their backs. The prosecutor swore he would have Lord Harborough out of the house dead or alive. Lord Harborough was dreadfully beaten.

Here a person in court said that was wrong.

The Lord Chief Justice ordered him to be turned out of court.

The witness was then examined by the Common Sergeant:—Lord Harborough was in the habit of crying out Yeo, ho! under the window of Mr. Fitzroy Stanhope. The witness had dined with Lord Harborough, on the day the affair took place, at Richmond, and only took one bottle of wine between them. The wine was bad. The conduct of Lord Harborough was not disorderly. The man was impertinent, and said he would take him to the watchhouse. Lord Harborough ran across the street to get to his hotel. Lord Harborough was receiving blows from Adderson's stick when he called for the poker. An attempt was made by every one in the room to turn the watchmen out.

Thomas Murphy, a watchman, at Stevens's hotel, was on his beat. On the 20th June, at half-past one o'clock, he saw Lord Harborough running across the street, another gentleman was with him. They went to Stevens's coffee-room door. Lord Harborough first, Mr. Bray next, and the watchman followed. Lord Harborough rung the bell, and the watchman said, if you do that I will take you to the watchhouse. Lord Harborough said, may I not holloah if I please. The watchman said, if you do I will take you to the watchhouse. Lord Harborough made a cry of yeo, ho, and the watchman seized him by the collar. The witness said, it is Lord Harborough, he lives here, and if he has done wrong you may take him to Marlborough-street to-morrow. They went into the coffee-room and a general scuffle ensued. He did not see any watchman strike Lord Harborough.

The Common Sergeant having addressed the jury in reply,

The Lord Chief Justice adverted to the leading points of the case. The question was, whether the watchman was informed who Lord Harborough was before he attempted to arrest him in the house. His Lordship was of opinion that the watchman was not justified in persisting in taking from the hotel to the watchhouse a gentleman with whose name he was acquainted.

The jury found the defendants—Not Guilty.

FRIDAY, June 23.

[Sittings before the Lord Chief Justice and Special Juries.]

SINCLAIR V. KEMBLE AND OTHERS.

The Attorney-General stated that the defendants in this case were the Proprietors of Covent-garden Theatre, and the plaintiff, Mr. Sinclair, was a gentleman long distinguished for musical talent as a composer and performer. He had been compelled to bring this action for a compensation in damages in consequence of a breach of contract with respect to his engagement at the Theatre Royal, Drury-lane. In 1823, Mr. Sinclair had been in Italy, and an application had been made to him on the part of the Proprietors of Covent-garden Theatre, to perform at that house. On the 30th of January, 1823, a letter was sent from Mr. Kemble in the following terms:—

"The arrival of your letter gave great satisfaction. Your terms are acceded to by the Committee of management. Twenty pounds a night for fifty nights, but we are desirous you commence the ensuing season. There will be no objection to your singing at Oratorios and Concerts, so long as they do not interfere with your engagement at Covent-garden. We will bring out two new Operas, &c. "C. KEMBLE."

In consequence of the above letter, the terms being arranged, Mr. Sinclair, in September, in the same year, was ready to commence his engagement. He was not called on till the 19th of November to perform. He played only four or five nights, and at the expiration of the engagement went to the Dublin Theatre, leaving the Managers to re-engage him, early in the following season. The Managers of Covent-garden were desirous of employing him the following season, and another engagement was made by the same parties.

A second letter was sent by Mr. Kemble to Mr. Sinclair.

"I have received a letter from Mr. Trotter, in which he tells me you are willing to renew your engagement with Covent-garden on the following terms:—To commence in October, say the first week. Now we having a new Opera ready, it will be necessary for you to be in town ten days previous to the opening, to attend rehearsals. Two new Operas are to be got out. Let us hear from you soon, as I shall put something in hand for you. "C. KEMBLE."

Mr. Sinclair sent for answer:—

"Dear Sir—I received your's of the 29th, and consider myself re-engaged for the next season. I will be in town in October, in time to study for the New Opera.

"I remain, &c. "SINCLAIR."

The terms were the same as in the former engagement. He was to perform fifty nights, and receive 20l. for each night, and there was a stipulation that he should have an unlimited right to issue orders for his friends to any part of the house. Mr. Sinclair considered his engagement concluded, and in the course of the latter part of the season he was engaged in Scotland, and in September he received a letter from Mr. Fawcett. It was dated the 21st of September, 1824—

"Will you by return of post let us know what day we are to expect you in London, as we are going to act Der Freischutz. The music is difficult, and you require some time to study.

"FAWCETT."

Mr. Sinclair said, in answer, that it would not be convenient to be in London before the 15th of October. He supposed the answer had been acquiesced in, and that if he arrived in London by that time it would be sufficient. He came to London in October, and was not employed before the middle of November. He arrived at the theatre on the 15th of October, having received no intimation that his presence was required before that time, and was surprised to find the character (Gwillan, in Der Freischutz,) which had been intended for him, in the hands of a respectable performer of the name of Pearman. On the 3d of November he received the usual call to attend rehearsal, and attended two or three times in a piece which was not played before the month of December. He was to come out as Prince Orlando, in the Cabinet, and announced in the bills for that part.

Here the Lord Chief Justice asked whether this matter could not be the subject of a performance in private.

Mr. Scarlett said the question would be short, and might be settled in court.

The Attorney-General was convinced the plaintiff was still on good terms with the defendants, and that the cause, whichever way it might go, would not produce discord. He then resumed his statement. In consequence of public notice, Mr. Sinclair appeared in the part of Orlando, and no other engagement was entered into than the engagement before mentioned. Thus matters passed on until January, when an application was made to Mr. Sinclair, by Mr. Arnold, of the English Opera. He was offered an engagement to perform three nights in the week, at 30l. a night, and if he played four nights, was to have 40l. He was also to share in the profits of the music he might furnish. This arrangement was made between Mr. Sinclair and Mr. Arnold, subject to the consent of the proprietors of Covent-garden Theatre. He did not think he was justified in making the engagement without their consent. In consequence of that feeling Dr. Kitchener waited on Mr. Kemble, and wished to know whether they would allow Mr. Sinclair to make the engagement. Mr. Kemble said no, we cannot spare him, and in consequence of that refusal Mr. Sinclair gave up Mr. Arnold's advantageous offer. A new Opera at that time was in rehearsal at Covent-garden. It was not successful, and Sinclair only performed two nights. The late Mr. Weber had engaged to get up an Oratorio for the season, and from the merits of that celebrated composer, it was expected to be productive of advantage. It was not supplied, and from that circumstance, as well as the bad success of the new opera, Mr. Sinclair was not employed. He did not play so many as fifty nights. He played only nine nights, and received only 180l. Mr. Sinclair was engaged for fifty nights, and he claimed the full amount of that engagement, which the proprietors of the theatre had refused to advance. At the same time the plaintiff felt no hostility towards the proprietors of Covent-garden. Justice in that court would be done to all parties, and there would be no interruption of harmony between them.

The letters were then put in and read; also the play-bills from the 8th of December, 1824, to the 15th of the same month, announcing the engagement of Mr. Sinclair at Covent-garden, and his appearance as Orlando in the Cabinet.

Dr. Kitchener said he was acquainted with Mr. Arnold and Mr. Sinclair. In 1825, he applied to Mr. Arnold for an engagement for Mr. Sinclair. He saw Mr. Charles Kemble, and, at Mr. Sinclair's request, asked his permission that Mr. Sinclair might go to Mr. Arnold the first week in June; Mr. Kemble said he was sorry he could not give him leave to go.—He daily expected Oratories,

EASY-LEARNT MUSICAL INSTRUMENTS.—J. SIMPSON, Manufacturer, 260, Regent-street, near Oxford-street, continues to give a Lesson Gratis upon his New Patent Improved Double and Single Flageolets. His late improvement of Keys, &c. for the lower notes, makes this beautiful instrument so easy to learn, that J. Simpson will undertake to teach any lady or gentleman to play Solos and Duetts in the above lesson. His Tenor Flageolets has the rich mellow tone of the musical glasses, and daily meets with the admiration of the first professors and amateurs of music.—Flageolets on the same principle as the German Flute, on which the flute-player has nothing to learn. Instruments repaired. Be particular in the number, 260, Regent-street, three doors from Oxford-street. Agents in Paris, Messrs. Collinetti, Fils, and Marcillac, Rue de la Paix, No. 8.

NEW MUSIC.—"ALADDIN." The Publishers respectfully announce that the following Music in "Aladdin," composed by Henry R. Bishop, is ready, and the Opera may be had complete early in the next week:—

NOTICE.—WILLIAM BAINBRIDGE, No. 35, Holborn Hill, Inventor and Manufacturer of the Patent Single and Double Flageolets, deems it proper to communicate to the trade, that having brought an action against Messrs. Paine and Hopkins, of Cornhill, for publishing a Book of "Instructions for the improved Patent Double Flageolet," also "Scales for the Single Flageolet," the same has been decided by the Arbitrator to whom the said cause was referred, to be a piracy of the different works published by Mr. Bainbridge on the same subject.

Any person therefore who sells the said Book, or any other Book, which infringes on Mr. Bainbridge's Copywright, renders himself liable to legal proceedings; and Mr. Bainbridge will feel himself compelled to take them, if after this Notice, any further attempt is made to deprive him of those privileges, to which every man is justly entitled as the reward of his own industry.

☞ Mr. Bainbridge is the only Patentee for further improvements on the Single and Double Flageolets.

Just published, in one vol. post 8vo. price 10s. 6d.,

TO THE PUBLIC.

IMPORTANT DISCOVERY for the Restoration of DECAYED TEETH, and the Cure of Tooth-ache, Mr. Clarke, (Inventor of the APPARATUS for facilitating the operation of Cupping, for which a Medal has been awarded by the Society of Arts, &c.) has the honour to announce a Composition for stopping Decayed Teeth. The new Composition, unlike Metallic Stopping, is applicable to every possible case, as it possesses the Plastic Properties of Cement, and almost immediately becomes as hard as stone. It relieves the severest Toothe-ache, and by excluding air and moisture, prevents the further decay of the Teeth. To be had only of Mr. Clark, No. 5, King-street, Holborn, where he continues to perform all Operations connected with the Teeth, in a superior manner, on moderate terms.

in the second Class ..... to 2s. 6d. per Cent.
in the third Class ..... to 4s. 6d. per Cent.

Fire Policies, the renewals of which become due at Midsummer will expire, unless renewed within fifteen days from that period.

The Company continues to undertake Insurances on Lives, on liberal Terms. No charge is made on such Insurances, in the way of Admission Fine, or Entrance Money: and a large Commission is allowed to Solicitors, and others, by whom such Insurances are effected. WARNER PHIPPS, Secretary.

IMPORTANT IMPROVEMENT in PENKNIVES. The usual manner of manufacturing Penknife Blades has long been a subject of complaint. A supposed improvement which consisted of making the marked side of the Blade concave, and the other convex, was some years ago introduced; but from a conviction of its inutility it is now discontinued. It removed one ground of complaint, but substituted another, and the Penknife now commonly in use has all its original defects about it. The edge is made too steep and the angle too obtuse; the consequence is, that the edge in cutting is sometimes unmanageable and driven into the quill nearly across. This inconvenience almost every person, in the habit of making Pens, has frequently experienced. To obviate this entirely, THOMAS CLARK, Exeter Change, London, has introduced a Penknife blade, manufactured entirely on a New Principle: the line of the edge being parallel with the side of the blade, forms a very acute angle; the instrument, therefore, even in inexperienced hands, may be easily governed; no cutting, but what is intended, can take place, and the Pen is formed with the greatest nicety and the utmost facility. The blade of this Penknife is beautiful in workmanship, and can be recommended with confidence, as superior to any article previously introduced into this branch of Cutlery. Also can be used with the right or left hand.

☞ The Blades are made from refined Silver Steel.

BURGESS' ESSENCE of ANCHOVIES, Warehouse, 107, STRAND, corner of Savoy Steps, London.—JOHN BURGESS and SON, being apprised of the numerous endeavours made by many persons to impose a spurious article for their make, feel it incumbent upon them to request the attention of the public, in purchasing what they conceive to be the ORIGINAL, to observe the Name and Address correspond with the above. The general appearance of the spurious descriptions will deceive the unguarded, and for their detection J. B. and Son submit the following caution:—Some are in appearance at first sight "Burgess' Essence of Anchovies;" others, "Burgis's," and many more wit out address.—JOHN BURGESS and SON having been many years honoured with such distinguished approbation, feel every sentiment of respect towards the public, and earnestly solicit them to inspect the labels previous to purchasing what they conceive to be of their make, which they hope will prevent many disappointments.

Burgess' New Sauce for general purposes having given such great satisfaction, continues to be prepared by them, and is recommended as a most useful and convenient sauce; will keep good in all climates.

Warehouse, 107, Strand, corner of the Savoy Steps.—The Original Fish Sauce Warehouse.

The most prominent trait of BEAUTY is a fine HEAD of HAIR, which is effectually produced by

ROWLAND'S Macassar Oil, the original and genuine, a vegetable production, which has for many years been universally admired; also acknowledged pre-eminent for nourishing the Hair, preventing it from being injured by illness, change of climate, study, travelling, accouchement, &c. removes scurf, harshness, and dryness—renders it soft and glossy; prevents its falling off or turning grey; creates a thick growth on the baldest places; producing beautiful curls, adding a most incomparable, transcendent, and beautiful lustre, rendering the head-dress truly enchanting. Ask for "ROWLAND'S" Macassar Oil, at 3s. 6d.; 7s.; 10s. 6d.; and 21s. per bottle.

ROWLAND'S KALYDOR, for the complexion, which immediately diffuses on the skin a delectable and pleasing coolness, truly refreshing; renders the skin peculiarly soft and pleasant; removes freckles, pimples, and all cutaneous eruptions; imparts luxuriant and matchless beauty to the complexion.

ROWLAND'S ESSENCE OF TYRE for changing red and grey whiskers to black or brown.

ROWLAND'S ALSANA EXTRACT for the tooth-ach, and preserving and beautifying the teeth and gums.

CAUTION.—In consequence of the high popularity of the above articles, base impostors have imitated the labels, bills, and bottles. To guard against such imposition, it is necessary on purchasing to ask for "ROWLAND'S," strictly observing their signatures in red on each bottle of the genuine articles,

"A. ROWLAND and SON, 20, Hatton-garden."

FOREIGN INTELLIGENCE.

Intelligence from Madrid, to the 6th instant, states that the correspondence between the British, French, and Spanish cabinets was more active than ever, but that the applications made both by England and France for the payment of the large debts due to them, has only led hitherto to the drawing up of an act specifying their respective amount, but stipulating nothing respecting the time or mode of their being repaid. A circular lately issued by the King for the suppression of improper books, or at least of works deemed improper by the ministers, had excited general alarm throughout the peninsula, in consequence of its stating that the measure was adopted "until the moment of re-establishing the Inquisition should have arrived." It was not believed, however, that Ferdinand would ever dare to carry such a plan into execution, as the bare mention of it had filled almost every class of people in Spain with terror and indignation. It is also stated that notwithstanding the opposition of the clergy, the supreme council finding it impossible to defray the public expences, had recommended that a tax should be laid on all ecclesiastical property.

Ibrahim Pacha is said to have taken by storm another strong hold of the Greeks, (Galavrite) where 5000 men, women, and children, perished.

By New York papers to the 1st of June, it appears that General Paez, who has ever been restless and intriguing, has got up a sort of counter-revolution at Valencia—a city which has always had a hankering after the old Spanish government. The Colombian government, if we may judge from the past, will have energy enough to put down this rebellious effort, and with it, we trust, its infamous author.

[From the Spanish Main.]

New York, May 28.—Captain R. Brookes, of the English army, arrived yesterday in the schooner Mary Hobin, Captain Hamilton, in 15 days from St. Thomas, on his way to England, with despatches from Sir Robert Perter, the British consul at Caraccas, and Mr. Cockburn, the English minister to Colombia, who was on board the Galatea frigate, Captain Sir Charles Sullivan, at Laguayra. A revolution broke out at Valencia on the 29th of April, the exact nature and object of which was not known, but it was reported that the troops and cabildos of that city and Puerto Cabello had proclaimed General Paez their chief and president of Venezuela. This officer, to whom the troops and people are said to be much attached, had some time previously been recalled to Santa Fe de Begota, and General Escalona appointed his successor; but he still retained his command of the troops, and was with his staff in Valencia when the revolution took place. Some lives were said to have been lost in that city. General Marino was marching on Caraccas at the head of a body of troops, and expected to enter on the 5th. The day Captain Brookes left that city, the authorities did not intend to offer any opposition to the revolutionists, but were preparing to receive them. The merchants had been called upon for a supply of money, and had advanced 5000 dollars on sales on the Custom-house at Lagnayra, and it was feared this would be the forerunner of large demands. An embargo was laid on vessels at Laguayra on the 4th; but on the evening of that day his Britannic Majesty's frigate Galatea most opportunely touched there, on her way to Carthagena, with the minister to Colombia on board; and at night the embargo was taken off. Some alarm existed amongst the merchants. It was supposed the frigate would remain till confidence was restored, and the object of the revolt definitely known, which was generally supposed to be the formation of the department of Venezuela into a federal state. Capt. Brookes will sail for England in the first packet.

Despatches were received on Thursday from Vice-Admiral Sir Laurence Halstead, Commander-in-Chief of his Majesty's ships on the Jamaica station. The squadron generally had been healthy, but the Iris, being the Vice-Admiral's flag, had suffered considerably from sickness. We are sorry to learn that Dr. Archibald Lang, Surgeon of the Royal Naval Hospital at Jamaica, died on the 21st of April, in consequence of having accidentally pricked his fore-finger, while assisting at an operation on a dead body at the Military Hospital, on the 13th of that month. Dr. Lang was universally respected, and was in his 45th year.

PROVINCIAL INTELLIGENCE.

DREADFUL CATASTROPHE.

A few minutes before six o'clock, on Wednesday evening last, a horrible accident occurred at the house of Michael Hoban, a respectable carrier on the Keils-road, about half a mile from this city. Early on that morning, two drays belonging to Hoban, loaded with goods, arrived from Dublin, on their way to Waterford, and were laid down on the road side, near his door.—Among the other parcels, there unfortunately happened to be a cask of gunpowder; through some accident that can never be known, the powder blew up at the hour above mentioned, with a tremendous report, which shook the earth to a considerable distance around, and the report was followed by a black dense column of smoke. On visiting this scene of calamity, nothing could present a more frightful appearance. Two young men were blown to pieces, and their limbs scattered in different directions through the surrounding fields. Two other young men and a young woman were so dreadfully maimed and blackened by the explosion, as scarcely to retain the appearance of human beings. These three were conveyed as promptly as possible to the County infirmary, with scarce a hope of recovery. Three of the unfortunate sufferers were sons of Hoban, and the female, who was about twenty years of age, was his daughter. The fifth was a next door neighbour, of the name of Dowling. Hoban and his wife were fortunately in the fields, at some distance from the house, at the time of the accident, and a young child, who was on the spot, escaped most providentially, without the slightest injury. Two houses were blown down, and quickly consumed to ashes. The drays, with their iron axles, were shivered to pieces, and large bales of cloth, parcels of silk stockings, quantities of tea, books, paper, deal planks, and other articles, that composed the loading of the cars, were scattered in fragments, and blazing in every direction, and presented an awful appearance, heightened by the almost frantic wailings of the unhappy Hoban and his wife, who beheld the wreck of their family and property thus accomplished in a few moments. Some of the burned fragments were driven so high, by the force of the explosion, as to be carried nearly a mile from the spot. Mr. C. B. Clarke was quickly on the spot, and showed every anxiety to alleviate the distress of the unhappy survivors of this wretched family. The Honourable Gentleman and his Lady, and the Marquis and Marchioness of Ormond, set on foot a subscription for the relief of Michael Hoban, who is really a worthy man, to which they contributed liberally. Several of the County Constabulary were also in attendance in a moment, to render any assistance within their power. Soon after the accident happened, an inquest was held by Messrs. Colles and Keough, City Coroners, on the remains of Michael Hoban, jun., and John Dowling.—Verdict—"Came by their death by the accidental explosion of a keg of gunpowder." The other sufferers were Patrick and Mary Hoban, who died soon after being brought to the Infirmary, and Martin Hoban, of whose recovery Dr. Pack entertains some hope. —Leinster Journal.

Lamentable Accident.—On Thursday last, as Captain Thomas Wilson, of the sloop Jane of Preston, was going on board his vessel in the River Urr, the boat, in which were himself and two of his children, unfortunately upset, and Captain Wilson lost his own life in endeavouring to save the lives of his children. He could swim, and with a child in each arm he kept himself above water for a short time, until, becoming faint with fatigue, he gradually sunk; his last struggles being exerted in endeavouring to save his children's lives, which seemed more the object of his heart than his own preservation. John Nelson, his mate, the only person present who could render him any assistance, immediately stript off his clothes, and swam to their relief. By the time he reached them, Captain Wilson had disappeared, but his children were still near the surface of the water. Them the mate with difficulty succeeded in bringing to the side; but their father, alas! had sunk to rise no more. Immediately on the ebbing of the tide, the body was found at a short distance from where the fatal accident took place. On Friday the remains were accompanied to the church-yard of Colvend, by a great number of sorrowing friends and relations. Captain Wilson was in the prime of life; he was a man of the strictest honesty and integrity, and was a kind father and affectionate husband. He has left a widow and four children to bewail his irreparable loss.—Dumfries Courier.

PRESTON—Fifteenth and Last Day.

The polling commenced this morning at eight o'clock. The Duke De Monte Bello and his friends appeared again in the Mayor's box to-day, on their return from the Westmoreland Election.

On Mr. Woodcock, one of Mr. Wood's committee coming up to vote—Captain Colquit said, Mr. Mayor, I request you'll put the bribery oath to that man.

Woodcock—Then it must be put to every man round.

The Mayor—Don't be offended—I have seen it put by the other side to the most respectable gentlemen. I expect it to be put to my own son.

Woodcock having taken the bribery oath—Now, Mr. Mayor, I insist, as an elector, that the bribery oath be put to every man that comes up to vote.

The Mayor—Then you must stand by and require it to be put to each individual as he comes to be polled.

Woodcock—I will; I'll stand by all day.

Mr. Wood—Oh! No, no.

Woodcock insisted on putting the oath to the next elector who appeared, but was, after a few minutes, induced to desist. The polling then proceeded quietly and rapidly.

There are no dragoons in sight of the hustings to-day. The door to Cobbett's booth is open to all parties. Every thing is tranquil.

Woodcock, to whom Captain Colquit put the bribery oath a few minutes since, has just mounted a warehouse window, and made an oration to the Woodites—"Gentlemen, I understand that Captain Barrie has sent a challenge to Mr. Wood—he wants to provoke him to fight—not a boxing match, gentlemen, but a duel. Captain Colquit, too, has challenged Mr. Wood. Now, Gentlemen, is this fair? Will we let a Reformer be put down in this way?—(Huzza.) No; he sha'nt fight—we wo'nt let him, but will fight for him in the lawful way, Gentlemen—we'll vote for him—we'll bring him in—and if the two captains want to shoot, we'll give them cause to despair—we'll defeat them—and if they can't survive it, let them shoot themselves, or each other.—(Huzza.)

We hear of nothing, this morning, but duels, challenges, and arrests. Mr. Orator Woodcock's mention of the challenge was not quite without foundation.

Mr. Wood, in one of his evening speeches, from the window of his hotel, last week, alluding to the circumstance of Captain Barrie's using the national flag in his possession, said that Captain Barrie had no private right to appropriate the public colours, and and that such appropriation of them by a party was unjust and improper. A London paper gave the following version of Mr. Wood's sentiments:—The national colours! I lament to see him (Captain Barrie) appropriating to himself the national flag; let him bear them against the foe, if he will, but if he were here I would tell him this, that the national flag was never more disgraced than it is by being borne in a procession of men who are brought up to vote against their consciences by the price of bribery." Captain Colquit, the friend of Captain Barrie, instantly sent a friend to Mr. Wood, requiring to know whether Mr. Wood had used such language. Mr. Wood sent back a verbal answer, denying the paragraphs. Captain Colquit was not satisfied with this, but demanded a denial, in writing, signed by Mr. Wood. Mr. Wood sent him a written denial, signed with his name; thus ended that transaction. A friend of Mr. Wood's next, in a communication with a friend of Captain Colquit's, pointed out in a newspaper, certain strong words reported to have been applied by Captain Colquit on the hustings to Mr. Wood. They were these—

Captain Colquit—"This all arises from Mr. Wood's infamous harangues—from the cowardly treachery of Mr. Wood."

Mr. Wood's friend requested that Captain Colquit would state whether he used the words, and if he had used them, that he would explain them away in some apologetic manner. Captain Colquit being informed of this request, sent a letter to Mr. Wood, stating that he did use the expressions, and would not retract one syllable. A message from Mr. Wood to Captain Colquit was expected as a matter of course. The next morning came, but brought no challenge; but in its stead the unexpected news that Mr. Wood was bound over by the Mayor to keep the peace for two years. The same constable who arrested Mr. Wood went to arrest Captain Colquit, but the Captain would not be arrested nor bound over; he disappointed them—there was no catching him. He however sent a letter protesting against the Mayor's intentions to arrest him, on the ground that he had sent no challenge, and that as Mr. Wood was bound ever to keep the peace, there was no chance of a rencontre between them. This reasonable request has had the desired effect. The Captain remains free and unfettered; but the effect of the rhetorical flourishes of your extemporary did not stop here. Captain Barrie saw them this morning extracted into the Preston Chronicle. On reading that part, which set forth that "the national flag was disgraced" by being borne in the procession, he started from his seat on the hustings, and was with difficulty restrained by his friends from venting his indignation against his opponent on the spot; after a short consultation among his friends, a gentleman (Captain Mackay) went to Mr. Wood, called aside that gentleman out of the hustings, showed him the obnoxious paragraph, and asked whether he had spoken the speech as it appeared in the paper. Mr. Wood disclaimed it. Captain Barrie again sent his friend Captain Mackay to Mr. Wood, to say that he would not be satisfied unless Mr. Wood would state in writing what part of the paragraph he had spoken, and what he had not. Mr. Wood accordingly wrote the following, and sent it to Captain Barrie:—

"I am not censurable for newspaper reports; but I have no hesitation in saying, that the report of my speeches were inaccurate in many important points, and that I did not utter the words as quoted from the Preston Chronicle; and I have, further, no hesitation in saying that I never said, or meant to imply, that Captain Barrie had, in any manner, 'disgraced the national flag,' or that he (Captain Barrie) had brought up his men 'to vote against their consciences by the price of bribery.'

26th June, 1826. (Signed) JOHN WOOD."

The successful candidates ride in grand procession this evening. The Roman Catholics intend to accompany the procession, to evince their gratitude to them (Stanley and Wood) for having omited to put the oath of supremacy. All is quiet. Cobbett is expected every moment. Captain Barrie bears his defeat with the best humour.

The numbers at the final close, at three o'clock, were—

Hon. G. S. Stanley....	2944	Captain Barrie.....	1653
Mr. Wood.....	1974	Mr. Cobbett.....	995

The Mayor declared the Hon. Edward Geoffrey Smith Stanley, and John Wood, Esq. duly elected to serve the borough of Preston in parliament.

The several candidates (except Cobbett, who was not present) returned thanks in speeches, and having left the hustings with their respective friends, in processional array, bands playing, colours flying, proceeded to their hotels. The successful candidates then made their triumphal parade through the town on horseback, Mr. Stanley and his friends in front—the Roman Catholics in one body after—and Mr. Wood and his friends bringing up the rear.

CHESTER CITY

This contest will, in all probability, cost the Grosvenor party about 20,000l. and the Egertons not more than 6,000l.

The chairing of Lord Belgrave and Mr. Grosvenor is fixed to take place on Tuesday next, and all those who voted for them, about 900 in number, will be presented with dinner tickets, value 1l. each.

DENBIGH.

The election for the Denbighshire boroughs is at length decided after a most severe contest, which lasted nearly a fortnight. The assessors gave a double return, but we understand there is no doubt that it will be decided in favour of Mr. West, as there are a great many disqualified votes on the other side, which, to the astonishment of the court, were allowed to poll. Owing to the strong feelings excited by the violent contest, it was thought prudent for the peace of the town that one candidate should be chaired there, and the other at Ruthin. Mr. West was chaired at the last mentioned place, which was thronged to excess, and it seemed as if the whole population of the Vale of Clywdd had actually assembled on the occasion. Afterwards there was a sumptuous breakfast a-la-fourchette at the castle.

WEYMOUTH.

The Weymouth election closed not till the fifteenth day. The Right Hon. Thomas Wallace, Masterton Ure, Esq. T. F. Buxton, Esq. three of the former members, and Colonel Gordon, have been returned as representatives in parliament for that borough. John Martin, Esq. Mayor, attended by the town clerk and his proper officers, on Tuesday, proclaimed them duly elected at the usual place. His worship, attired in his magisterial robes, gold chain, and medal, attended the colonel, seated in an elegant chair, to the Royal Hotel, where he alighted. Owing to the violent proceedings which had taken place during the election the other members declined being chaired. Previous to and during the election attempts had been made to affect Mr. Ure's influence in this place. He has repelled those attempts in the most satisfactory manner, and he remains unshaken in the good opinion of his constituents.

Mr. Masterton Ure is a trustee of the late Sir J. Lowther Johnson's estates, and nephew to Col. James Masterton, who represented Stirling, &c. in several parliaments, and nearly allied to some of the oldest families in Scotland. Had the friends of Mr. Wallace, Mr. Ure, and Mr. Farrer, (who is universally esteemed here) been enabled to proceed to the hustings, a great majority of the electors would have polled for them.

Final close of the poll, 15th day:—

T. F. Buxton, Esq....	248	Masterton Ure, Esq....	170
Col. Gordon.....	189	J. W. Farrer, Esq.....	153
Right Hon. T. Wallace	177

WESTMORELAND ELECTION.

State of the Poll.—Seventh day, four o'clock.

THE GROSS POLL OF THURSDAY.

Lord Lowther	1,638
Colonel Lowther	1,566
Mr. Brougham	1,262

Appleby, June 29.—The contest for this county is, I am happy to tell you, at last virtually, if not actually, at an end. Mr. Brougham, after boasting upon the hustings, yesterday, that he had still upwards of 800 unpolled men, found it necessary to betake himself this morning to Kendal, to stir up his lukewarm supporters, and his friends have, since his departure, been polling at the rate of about one man per hour, while the average number who have voted for the Lowthers, in the same period, has been scarcely less than one hundred. At the moment in which I write (three o'clock) there is a majority in favour of Colonel Lowther of 297. The business of the Assessor's Court has been suspended for some time.

Mr. Brougham has not yet returned from Kendal. Should he not do so after the time for closing the poll has arrived, it is supposed that one of his brothers, or some other friend, will address the populace from the hustings, on his behalf. Whether the poll will be kept open to-morrow, is as yet a matter of doubt.—Should it be so, there will be no difficulty in guessing at the object of the procrastination.

Half-past four.—I have only time to send you the state of the poll, and to tell you that Mr. Brougham has just returned. I suppose he will be able, with his usual ingenuity, to account for his deficiency upon this day, as he has done upon former occasions. He need be no conjurer, I fancy, to do so.

SOMERSETSHIRE.

Ilchester, Thursday, June, 29.

The voters came in this morning rather more briskly than yesterday, but still very tardily. About two o'clock the gentry of the neighbourhood pressed to the hustings, in expectation of the poll being closed at three; and Sir Thomas Lethbridge and Mr. Dickinson took their stations on the platform. A little before three Mr. Hunt, attended by his friend Mr. Hayward, and by his sons, also pressed through the crowd, and came up close to the other candidates.

The Sheriff then stated the numbers on the poll for the day. They were as follows:—Lethbridge, 41—Dickinson, 34—Hunt, 8.

Mr. Hunt said he would take leave, before the poll was finally closed, to put a question. Mr. Dickinson must be aware that there were many freeholders who were not permitted to poll on account of not having their names entered as having paid the land-tax. That was an evil that was much to be lamented, and he wished to know whether Mr. Dickinson (to the other he should say nothing) would propose any measure in Parliament to remedy so grievous anevil?

Mr. Dickinson said he certainly was not prepared to say whether he should bring in a bill to effect that object, but he should certainly be always ready to support any measure calculated to facilitate the business of elections. (Cheers.)

The Sheriff then, with the accustomed formalities, closed the poll; and declared the numbers to be—Dickinson, 1812—Lethbridge, 1719—Hunt, 309. And announced that the two former gentlemen were elected fit and discreet Knights to represent the county of Somerset in Parliament. (Cheers and hisses.)

Mr. Dickinson, in addressing the freeholders, admitted the propriety of Mr. Cresswell's question to him as a candidate. (Cheers.) Mr. Hunt had observed that his (Mr. Dickinson's) manner was subdued. He certainly regretted that he had used it: the irritation he had received at Bridgewater was the cause of it. If Mr. Hunt thought that peace ought to be the order of the day, he would find im h(Mr. Dickinson) ready to go more than half way.

[For the further discussion and uproar of the parties engaged, we refer our readers to the leading article in the centre of the Paper.]

Mr. Cresswell again called upon Sir T. Lethbridge to avow or deny the use of the offensive words, but in vain. The Baronet refused to say another word.

Mr. Hunt then rose, amidst the loudest cheers.—I am, said he, sorry that I have to address the freeholders at a time when some of them appear to be in a state of fermented feeling. I regret much that the course which Mr. Dickinson adopted has not been followed (cheers;) and that there was any interruption to the good humour which ought to prevail at the termination of a contest of this kind. Not a quarter of the freeholders have been polled. The disinclination to vote for Lethbridge must have been almost unconquerable. Those who canvassed said to the freeholders, "You must vote both for Whig and Tory;" thereby declaring that there was not a particle of honest feeling in the county. The moment the freeholders see the two factions join, they naturally say in disgust, "We'll not go at all." (Cheers.) I return thanks to those who came up for me, for I believe that every one who did so believed that he was serving his country as well as himself. That such men were dishonest, no man but a Lethbridge could have the audacity to declare; but he will suffer for all this: in that very house to which he has again gained admission, he will be more laughed at than upon any former occasion. (Laughter.) He was laughed at when he said that the words of Sir Francis Burdett made his hair stand an end, but the figure he will cut in the next Parliament will infinitely surpass that in the ridiculous. Every one's eyes will be fixed upon him, and his responsibility will greatly exceed any which he formerly groaned under. I shall return home to my blacking-men. (Loud laughtea.) I am perfectly satisfied with the contest, and I shall feel no shame in going round to my honest freeholders, and in eating bread and cheese, and drinking cider with them, on my way home. I shall not run away, but pay my way as I go. Before I retire, I shall show you that I am not ashamed of my trade, and that I bear no resentment. I therefore present to Mr. Dickinson and Sir Thomas Lethbridge, a bottle of my best blacking, my real matchless. (Roars of laughter whilst he handed over the bottle to Mr. Dickinson, who received it in the very best humour.) I had but one left, and I thought of sending for another, but one will do. You have been in the habit of splitting votes, and you may split my bottle of blacking between you. (Roars of laughter, in which all the magistrates, all the lawyers, and the clergy joined.)

Mr. Dickinson.—As I have received this present in public, I think it necessary to return to the gentleman who has given it to me my most unfeigned thanks for my half of his bottle of best blacking. (Continued laughing.)

Sir T. Lethbridge, who never smiled during this exhibition, said, I have no explanation to make; but I hope my hon. friend will keep the whole bottle of best blacking to himself.

Thanks were voted unanimously, and with three cheers, to the Sheriff, for his conduct during the election; and thus ended this never-to-be-forgotten contest for Somersetshire.

The members were afterwards chaired round the town, and Mr. Hunt went down in his barouche to dine with his friend Oliver Hayward.

IRELAND.

COUNTY AND CITY OF KILKENNY, Thursday.

FIFTH AND LAST DAY.

Mr. Butler Clarke and Lord Duncannon are returned for the county, and Mr. Doherty for the city of Kilkenny. Few were polled for either to-day.

Nothing unpleasant occurred during the election, except bad language and a few broken heads. Riots are expected to-night and the horse police are patrolling; the numerous foot police, now in town, are at their posts. They have behaved with singular forbearance; notwithstanding bitter taunts, and even assaults, not even a blow has been inflicted by one of them. Col. Butler and his son are to be chaired to-morrow.

KERRY ELECTION.

EXTRAORDINARY, UNCONSTITUTIONAL, AND HORRIBLE PROCEEDING!!!

Tralee, Sunday Evening, half-past ten o'clock.—It becomes our painful duty to announce to the public, that on this evening, about eight o'clock, and before the commencement of any poll, three unoffending persons have lost their lives, four mortally wounded, five dangerously wounded, and four severely wounded, amongst whom is a female. All owing to the unconstitutional, and, as we believe, unwarrantable conduct of Mr. Hickson, the High Sheriff, the Hon. Major Mullins, George Rowan, and Peter B. Hussey, Esqrs. magistrates for this county, who not only ordered out a large force of the rifle brigade and police, but actually ordered them to fire upon an unarmed multitude, without even the form of reading the riot act. The town is in such a state of dreadful alarm and dismay, that it is considered the election cannot possibly be proceeded on.

[Extract of another letter.]

The election commenced yesterday, when the different candidates were proposed and seconded, but no polling took place. A combination of absentee peers have attempted to force a protegee of the Convamore-house upon the people. In consequence, the enthusiasm of the people has been excited to the highest pitch, by this attempt on their independence.

Lord Ennismore's freeholders, since their arrival in town, have been barracked in a corn store in the rear of the court-house, and a guard of the police put over them. A few minutes ago, about 100 of Lord Ventry's tenants were brought in under a guard of police. Major Mullins and G. Rowan, Esq. magistrates, riding at their head. Colonel Crosbie's freeholders in a large body had previously arrived with flags, green boughs, &c. The parties met near the court-house, when a scuffle immediately commenced. Stones were thrown, and one of Lord Ventry's tenants was pulled off his horse. A party of the rifle brigade had previously been placed in the corn store, and orders were given to them and to the police to fire. The first few shots were supposed to be blank, but they soon began with ball, when six men were shot dead, and as many more wounded—two of the men were shot in their own house, and a father and son in the street. Of those shot, I believe only one was actively engaged in the riot. Colonel Crosbie went to Benner's Inn, and told Lord Ennismore his conduct in ordering out the military was ruffianly, and instantly horsewhipped him. John O'Connell is straining every nerve to make the mob disperse quietly.—Dublin Evening Post.

ARMAGH, June 24.

The poll commenced this morning, at 11 o'clock, very quietly. Col. Verner entered the town at the head of a large body of the Richhill tenantry, so numerous, indeed, that every spectator imagined he would be second on the poll this day.

About half-past twelve, a crowd left the vicinity of Mr. Brownlow's tally-rooms, and marched, in a very threatening manner, towards Mr. Verner's committee-rooms, in English-street. When within a few yards of the rooms, they halted on perceiving a powerful muster of the true blues; each party eyed the other with a most deadly scowl, and rushed to the attack with sticks, stones, horsewhips, &c. &c., when a scene of the most warlike description was presented. Several accidents were the consequence—two men with fractured skulls were carried to the hospital, where they are said to be in a very precarious condition. The green party gave way, and were pursued to Mr. Brownlow's tally-rooms, when another severe conflict took place, which terminated in the blues taking possession of Mr. Brownlow's tally rooms, and driving out every voter they could meet. Some had to escape over walls, from their height almost unscaleable. Mr. Little, the attorney, it is said, received a severe fracture on the knee. A party of the 72d Regiment, assisted by the police, soon succeeded in restoring order. This was the only striking circumstance that occurred outside of the Court-house this day.

At the commencement of the poll, Col. Verner addressed the Electors in a style quite military, assuring them that at present he was only skirmishing a little to induce the opposite party to come out; but, on Monday, and following days, he would bring up his heavy artillery, and sweep the enemy off the field.

Mr. Brownlow also addressed the electors. If (said he) any of the gallant Colonel's friends are present, I have obtained a vote for every day in the year more than their candidate has brought up; and I can assure him and them that it will require all the days of their lives to bring me down from the proud station I now occupy. I will only require the steady aid of my friends for a few days longer, to make 'the enemy despair of ever occupying this field.'

The several candidates were loudly cheered; and all remained quiet at the hour of post (six o'clock.)

COUNTY OF DUBLIN.

Every resource that outrage, stratagem, superstition, zeal, and drunkenness could supply, has been exerted to run off with a transient majority for the popish candidates. Immense mobs dispute every inch of ground with the freeholders, who would approach the hustings if they could, to poll for Mr. Hamilton; and he who is not the slave of priests and demagogues, and who will not bow down before the idol of liberality, and lend himself to the crusade, goes to vote as he would go to battle—he must fight his way to and from the hustings at the hazard of his personal destruction. Fraud and violence and falsehood beset him at every turn; he is a sort of public prisoner, even when safest; and if he presume to act with the spirit of a freeman, he is in peril of being involved in some personal thraldom, or perhaps knocked upon the head outright. Still the honest and loyal freeholders, and the true friends to the honour of the county of Dublin, contend like men of principle and courage against this enormity. It was a shocking scandal to see, preceding some cart-loads of drunken and turbulent liberals going to poll for the popish candidates, a large wooden cross, decorated with green ribbons! The most impressive symbol of christianity, so foully prostituted, is a burning shame to a party which dares to cant and jabber about religion, and to affect a very special reverence for its principles. The intoxicated fanatics, who followed in this reprobate procession, exhibited the wild and furious aspects of demons rather than men, of creatures collected for the express design of being the agents of any outrage which they may be excited to perpetrate, and who panted for the mandate of havoc. Another exhibition of the like sort, offended religion and loyalty with equal scandal. A squad of liberal ragamuffins proceeded through the streets, carrying a large green flag, with a white cross in the centre. It is quite unnecessary to descant upon this double symbol—of the reminiscence of 1798, and the holy liberality, which is working out new convulsions and disasters—a day so disgraced with such sights as these, ended in violence and outrage. There were, until a late hour of the night, liberal mobs in various parts of the city. In College-green, Mr. Hamilton's committee-room was attacked, and the windows shattered. We have not yet heard of any murders. In spite of all this nefarious chicanery, Mr. Hamilton stands his ground manfully, and every hour draws towards him the wishes and zeal of the respectable portion of society, superadded to his own powerful friends.—Dublin Correspondent.

COUNTY OF GALWAY.—Saturday.

It would seem the mob of Galway were made drunk, from the following extract from the Galway Advertiser of Saturday:

"Whoever gave the spirits the mob certainly got it not from any friend of the Recorder, and a riot commencing, the police were called out and obliged to act, in consequence of which one unfortunate man (a butcher) was run through the body, and killed on the spot; another had his face desperately cut with a sabre, and two more were severely wounded in the body. This is all the "Independents," (a name the most odious that can now be given) gained by their attempt; for up to this hour (two o'clock) their hero has not polled a man, and it is currently reported that he will resign to-night. In the riots, several gentlemen on both sides were attacked, and the windows of the booth and committee rooms broken. Mr. Daly, of Dunstable, was forced to take refuge in the College-house; and Mr. T. Blake, of Menlo, fled through a back door over a yard wall in Lombard-street, and across the river to the county gaol, where he was protected until night. In Clare-galway, we are sorry to say, lives were also lost. The tenants of Mr. Bingham, who are friendly to Mr. Lambert, attacked those of Mr. Kirwan, of Castlehacket, who vote for Mr. Martin, and the police, who were directed to fire over their own heads, shot two women and a child, who were at some distance in the fields. One of the women, we are told, since died. Two or three sign-boards, on which the Marquis of Clanricarde's name or arms were painted, were torn down by the mob, and broke or burned.

Galway, June 27.—Here all seems blood and strife. Since writing the above we learn that Galway is in little less than a state of siege; whilst fighting occurs in almost every part of the county at which parties come into contact with each other. The freeholders of Mr. D'Arcy, who were proceeding to give their suffrages for Mr. Lambert, were beaten back, we understand, by Mr. Martin's partizans, who were stated to occupy all the roads and passes coming out of Cunnamara.—Dublin Correspondent.

WATERFORD

[From the Waterford Mail.]

STATE OF THE POLL ON TUESDAY.

	Day's Poll.	Gross Poll.
Power -	214	902
Stuart -	239	967
Lord G. Beresford	47	458

Mr. Power returned thanks with his accustomed brevity.

Lord G. Beresford came forward amidst the clamours of the well disciplined rabble, but spoke in his usual distinct, firm, and manly tone; he said, "I have just reason to thank my friends and the free electors for the handsome manner in which they have come forward to support me. Their support is of a character not to be put down by a confederacy acting as shamefully as unconstitutionally. (Great uproar.) I rejoice to be enabled to tell my friends, that the final issue of this contest shall be to their satisfaction. (Groaning, hissing, and continued uproar.) His Lordship resumed with perfect coolness: "I thank God we have laws and a Constitution equal to defeat a confederacy formed against the rights and privileges of the electors, and the interests of the country. (Tremendous confusion.) To-morrow morning I shall again meet my friends at the hustings. His Lordship and his friends then withdrew.

Mr. Stuart was again proud of his place on the poll. The confederacy alluded to by the Noble Lord was no more than the union of patriots: and he would rather be defeated with such a band, than successful with the enemy of his country. (Great applause.) It was not true that he and his friend had split. On the contrary, they were quite happy in their mutual friendship.

WATERFORD COUNTY.

The following is but a faint description of the style in which this election is carried on; one scene will give an idea how it is managed:—

SATURDAY—THIRD DAY.

The poll was yesterday delayed by the ingenuity of some of the agents, and every vote was canvassed.

Barony of ——

The deputy sheriff, clerk, and poll clerks. Two Catholic clergymen at one side of the table, a Protestant clergyman at the other; the latter waiting to vote for Lord G. Beresford. Agents at each side, with their coats off, faces inflamed, and with books, papers, and affidavits before them. The freeholder, an old man, with keen grey eyes and bushy eye-brows, wearing a blue frieze coat, blue stockings and brogues, and a bit of a stick in his hand.

Deputy—Here, take the book. What is your name?

Freeholder—Darby Haurahan.

Deputy—Listen to the oath, and repeat after me.—"I, Darby Haurahan, do swear, that I will true answer make (and to be sure I will) to all such questions as the sheriff deputy presiding in this booth shall demand of me; and I also swear, that I have not polled before at this election (God knows I have not) and that I am, as I believe, twenty-one years of age (it is myself that can very safely swear it.)—(Loud laughing in the booth.)

Deputy—Where do you reside?—Voter—At Bally Mick Thomas.

Deputy—Do you swear you are possessed of a freehold in the county of Waterford?—Voter—I does.

Deputy—Is it the freehold described in the affidavit you hold in your hand, the same which you swear you are possessed of, and out of which you vote?—Voter—If it is the same affidavit for which I registered, it is the same.

Agent—I call on you, Mr. Deputy, to reject this man, for not giving a direct answer according to law.

Deputy—Be quiet; don't be bothering me.

A standerby—Tell it to him in Irish, and he'll understand it.

Policeman—Come, clear the court; quit, quit entirely.

Agent—I call on you to reject the vote.

Opposite Agent—I call on you to admit it.

Deputy—I must in fairness send the point up to the assessor.

Opposite Agent—Adjourn the court for ten minutes.

Agent—No don't now; I give up.

Opposite Agent—We'll go on; let him run the gauntlet of your questions.

By-stander to the Roman Catholic clergyman, (aside.) "Father H——, keep looking at him."

Deputy repeats the question—Is it the same freehold.

Voter—I think it is, for I am no scholar.

Deputy—Do you swear you have been in the actual occupation of the freehold, as described in the affidavit, by tilling it, by grazing it, or by residing upon it for the last twelve months?

Voter—I hired it from my father for the grazing of a heifer.

Agent—And I suppose you hold it while the heifer lives!

Opposite Agent—Be quiet, if you please.

Voter—And I pay one shilling a year to my father.

Deputy—Do you swear you have been in the actual occupation by grazing of the freehold for the whole of the last twelve months?

Voter—I do, your honour, sure enough.

Agent—That is not a direct answer; send him up to the assessor.

Opposite Agent—Mr. Deputy, I request you will silence Mr. M.

Agent—I request, Mr. Deputy, you will first silence Mr. H.

Deputy—For God's sake, Gentlemen, be quiet—the man is in my possession. What are we to do? This is a case I don't like to decide.

Agent—Why not?

Deputy—Do you swear you have been in the actual possession of the freehold?

Voter—To be sure I have, by grazing—and I'll tell you how it was.

Agent—I won't hear it; the man has been asked over and over again.

Agent—Oh! be easy opposite.

Agent—Well, I give up. Put the Bribery Oath. I beg your pardon. Mr. Haurahan, I don't mean it any offence; but if you were the first man in the land you must take it.

Deputy—Here, take the book, and repeat the oath after me, "I Darby Haurahan," &c. "Well, kiss the book."

Mr. Deputy's Clerk, in the mean time, draws a cork, and takes a drink from a bottle which he had in reserve under the table.

Agent—I'll trouble you for a drop, if it is not salt.

Deputy—Kiss the book.

The voter touches the book to his nose.

Agent—Hullo; that won't do.

Deputy—Kiss the book, Sir.

The Voter kisses the cord round the book.

Agent—That won't do either.

Deputy—Kiss the book—the book itself.

The Voter catches the end of the book in his mouth, as if to bite it.

Agent—That won't do again—kiss the flat of the book.

The Voter at last kisses the book.

Deputy—There are three candidates, honest men, Lord G. Beresford, Mr. Power, and Mr. Stewart—you can vote for any two of them, or for any one of them, just as you please.

Agent—Stop a bit—ask him the seventh question, Mr. Deputy.

Deputy—Do you swear the freehold is now of the yearly value of 40s. above all charges payable out of the same?

Voter—I do, Sir.

Agent—Bravo, a fine half acre it is.

Deputy—Well, now, for whom do you vote?—[If he answer for Lord G. Beresford, he is allowed to pass away quietly—if for Mr. Stewart, there is some applause—clapping on the back of the voter, and cries of—That's a boulelhaeen boy (a good fellow); manomastig (you're my darling you are) The old lad goes away chuckling, and to be sure he never calls at the whisky shop on his way at home.]

GROSS POLL ON SATURDAY AT THE CLOSE.

Power.....540	Beresford.....336
Stewart.....513

Lord George Beresford has published a very energetic address on the subject of the present contest, from which we extract the following passage:—

"Gentlemen, this is no ordinary contest—a few itinerant orators, emanating from a scarcely legal association, aided by a portion of the Roman Catholic clergy, subservient to its views, claim a right to impose a representative upon the legitimate electors of the county, and temporal power is usurped by a spiritual body, whose interference in politics should even excite the jealousy not only of a Protestant government, but of a Roman Catholic people. The Sabbath is profaned and the altar polluted for the almost avowed purposes of excluding the rank, the wealth and the intelligence of the county, from a share in its representation, of defrauding the landlord of his influence and the tenant of his freedom, and of erecting a spiritual despotism upon the ruins of civil and religious liberty."

NOTICES TO CORRESPONDENTS.

H. D. directs our attention to a most amusing caricature (now in private circulation) of my Lord Harborough reclining on his Lady-Love's bosom, and these words written underneath: "A well known hotel"—Answer—" SARACEN*'s head on* SNOW*-hill."*

ARGUS is thanked for his account of the "Delicate Investigation;"—but we cannot at present insert it, for very obvious reasons.

The communication from Hertford is inserted.

A. is thanked for his obliging account of the "Sporting Pieces" now in course of publication, which we will take an early opportunity of recurring to.

We have very cogent reasons for wishing to hear from CASTIGATOR*, in a day or two—and shall be further obliged by a full account of the hoax he refers to,*

A PLEASING APPEARANCE.

THE Grand Characteristic of Mrs. VINCENT'S CELEBRATED LOTION is—that it is no repellant, but gently and kindly opens the pores of the skin, extracting and dulcifying the morbid virus lurking in it. The most tender Lady or Child may at all times make use of it with the greatest safety. It removes every kind of coarseness, eruption, and unpleasant appearance, and renders the skin clear, smooth, and transparent. Nothing has ever yet been found to compare to its effects and excellence; but its unexampled reputation having excited various imitations, it is particularly recommended to ask for Mrs. VINCENT'S GOWLAND'S LOTION, and see M. E. VINCENT on the label of the genuine.

The following letters have been received, as confirmatory of the great effects of Mrs. VINCENT'S LOTION:—

"Mrs. ROBINSON, of Tritton, has no hesitation in recommending this lotion, as having cured her of all appearance of the small-pox and scrophula, with which she was much defaced."

TO MRS. VINCENT.

MADAM—Having, by the advice of my friend Lord GLENGALL, adopted the use of your LOTION, by means of which, as your advertisement justly says, my skin has become "clear, smooth, and transparent," I beg you will make any use of this letter in its recommendation, and I will certainly introduce it to the notice of all my friends. If you think the following epigram will be of advantage to any of your advertisements, it is much at your service. I am, Madam,

Your obliged servant,

30, George-street, Hanover-square. T. RAIKES.

Says COOKE to GLENGALL, "you'll be thought very rash,
"To use, my dear boy, such a parcel of trash
As this LOTION"—says DICK, "then I won't:"
"Yet," says RAIKES, "though its virtues you venture to scout,
"I think it's no longer a matter of doubt
"That he'll be very rash, if he don't.

THE AGE.

LONDON, JULY 2.

Accounts were yesterday morning received if an insurrection having taken place under the conduct of General PAEZ, in Valencia, the principal city in the department of Venezuela.

The intelligence was first communicated by Captain BROOKES, who came to England in the New York Packet, and subsequently confirmed by the arrival at the Foreign-office of H. B. HURY, Esq. the British Vice Consul at La Guayra, which place he left on the 10th of May.

We have not room for a very minute detail of all the circumstances connected with the event, but in subjoining the following extract, we shall furnish a correct account of all the principal transactions to which it gave rise:—

A revolution broke out at Valencia on the 29th April, the precise nature and object of which was not known, but it was reported that the troops and Cabildos of that city and Puerton Cabello had proclaimed General Paez their Chief, and President of Venezuela. This Officer, to whom the soldiers and people are said to be much attached, was some time previously recalled to Santa Fe de Bogota, to answer some charges preferred against him at the Congress, of undue exercise of his authority as Commandant of the Department, and General Escalona appointed to succeed him; but he did not comply with the order, and was with his staff in Valencia when the revolt took place. It was said, that some excesses had been committed and some lives lost in that city.

General Marino was marching on Caraccas at the head of a body of troops, and expected to arrive on the 5th of May, the day on which Capt. Brooks left that city. The authorities did not intend to offer any opposition to the Revolutionists, but were preparing to receive them. They had assembled to deliberate on the 3d and 4th, and on the latterday there was a meeting of the merchants, who are principally British and Americans. It was recommended, as a prudential measure, that they should furnish a sum for the supply of the troops on their arrival, there being none in the public chest, and they, in consequence, advanced five thousand dollars on Vales on the Custom-house at La Guayra, and it was apprehended this would only prove the fore-runner of larger demands. An embargo was laid on all vessels at La Guayra on the 4th, but taken off at night. On the evening of that day his Majesty's frigate Galatea, Sir Charles Sullivan, Commander, opportunely touched here, on her way to Carthagena, with Mr. Cockburn, the Minister to Colombia, on board. Previous to her arrival, Sir R. K. Porter had written to the officer commanding the naval forces in the Leeward Islands, to request he would send down a vessel for the protection of British subjects and their property; and it was, therefore, supposed that the frigate would not immediately proceed on her voyage, but remain till confidence should be, in some measure, restored, and the object of the revolutionists definitively known, which was generally believed to be the formation of Venezuela into a federal state.

By the last advices from Bogota, Bolivar was daily expected on his return from Peru, via Panama.

Capt. Brookes returned to England by way of St. Thomas's and North America. At the former place he conversed with the master of a sloop, who had arrived there from Puerto Cabello, who informed him, that, while he was in that Port, General Marino entered the town from Valencia, and that having assembled the troops, they, and the civil authorities, shouted vive Paez! but he could not learn the exact object of the movement. General Marino left it again on the 1st for Caraccas. While Captain B. was in New York, an American vessel arrived from Curaeoa, bringing the information, that the Government schooner of that island had arrived there from La Guayra, with letters from the Dutch Consul at that part to the Governor, informing him of the Revolution that had taken place, and requesting that vessels of war might be sent from that island for the protection of the merchants, and their property, and that, in consequence, two sloops of war were immediately despatched, one to La Guayra, and the other to Puerto Cabello.

When we look upon the result of many of the late contests, to which the dissolution of Parliament has given rise, both with reference to the pretensions of many of the elected, as well as the defeated, we feel a degree of serious apprehension for the intellect, dignity, and safety of the best part of our countrymen. The GENERAL ELECTION has let loose every stream of corruption, impudence, ignorance and vice—the canaille of the land has arisen en masse to destroy every purpose designed for its advantage, to confound its respectability, and to endeavour to render the intrigues of its lowest ambition ingloriously triumphant. But we will proceed from apostrophe to fact.

The struggle for the representation of Somersetshire has terminated (as it was expected, and ought,) in the ejection of that shining patriot, HUNT, between whose partizans, himself and his opponents, occurred a scene of no ordinary nature, even in matters of this description. A clergyman by the name of CRESSWELL, of Creech, in this county, after having signalized himself at Taunton in his brother's behalf, which we commented upon a fortnight since, arrived at Ilchester on the last day, for the purpose of interrogating Sir THOMAS LETHBRIDGE on the quality of the language stated to have been used by this refined BARONET towards the electors who had voted, or might vote, for HUNT, when the following scene took place:—

Sir T. LETHBRIDGE.—It is not by threats, from high or low, that I am to be prevented from pursuing steps which I am sure will lead to the good of my country. There is no fear in my nature. Will any one tell me I ought to recall one word of what I have uttered?

Mr. CRESSWELL.—Yes. Retract that base declaration reported in The Times.—(Cries of "Turn him out.") Who will turn me out? If any one of that base crew (looking at the attorneys) dare to lay his hands upon me, nothing shall protect him from chastisement upon the spot!!

The SHERIFF requested Mr. C. would allow Sir Thomas to proceed, and afterwards reply to him.

Mr. CRESSWELL.—No, he asks us whether there is a word which he is bound to recall? I'll have his answer now. I ask him whether he dares to repeat what The Times newspaper states he asserted. I have voted for Mr. Hunt, and I ask him whether he calls me or thinks me a rogue? (Great tumult.) If he replies in the affirmative, neither sheriff, nor magistrates, nor attornies, shall protect him, or prevent me coming in immediate contact with him in this Court!!

All the attornies rose and hissed and groaned, and cried "Turn him out, turn him out."

Mr. CRESSWELL.—No man shall dare to lay his hand on me!

An attorney, who had been very active in hissing Mr. Hunt, and applauding Sir Thomas Lethbridge, from the commencement of this contest, cried out, "Turn out that person."

Mr. OLIVER HAYWARD (to the attorney).—Why don't you turn him out yourself, you land-shark?

ATTORNEY (in a rage.)—I! not I, indeed: that would be a breach of the peace.

Mr. HAYWARD.—Why, you come here to incite others to break the peace, in order that you may fill your pockets. You wish to see others do what you are afraid to do yourself, you attorney! (Laughter.)

Mr. CRESSWELL.—I have Sir Thomas Lethbridge upon this point, and I'll pin him to it.

Sir THOMAS.—It would be as well if the Rev. gentleman would hold his tongue. If matters of this kind are to be carried by clamour, good bye to public liberty.

Mr. CRESSWELL.—Have you spoken as The Times reports you have? I'll not stand personal abuse from any man breathing, and certainly not from a candidate. I complain that 300 honest men of this county have been publicly insulted by a candidate.

A Lawyer.—Silence! Shame!

Mr. CRESSWELL.—Mr. High Sheriff, desire that lawyer not to dare to interfere. The Baronet says he can lay his hand upon his heart and state so and so. Now here are 300 as honest men as any in England, and 2,000 more are ready to come up to poll for Mr. Hunt. Does Sir Thomas Lethbridge mean that those are all dishonest—that I am a dishonest man? If he does, who is the man, what is the authority, what will keep me from his head!! (Great uproar. The Sheriff interfered, and, by his conciliating manner, abated the fury which appeared to threaten the assembly.)

Sir THOMAS LETHBRIDGE said he would not give up his right of addressing the freeholders. He found that he was once more their pure and disinterested representative, (laughter, hisses, and applause), and nothing should shackle his operations in Parliament. He concluded by expressing his gratitude to the freeholders who voted for him.

Mr. CRESSWELL.—I should not have interrupted this candidate, Mr. High Sheriff, if he had been as candid as the other persons who were questioned. This, I say, is the time for him to give an answer to the freeholders of the county. He has complimented those who voted for him, and insulted those who have not. I ask him, whether he considers us, who have voted for Mr. Hunt, rogues, or vagabonds, or deluded men?

Sir T. LETHBRIDGE.—I'll return the same answer I have already given—I shall not answer. (Loud uproar, and cries of "You're afraid.")

Mr. HAYWARD.—Then, Lethbridge, you have proved yourself a blackguard, a liar, and a coward!!! I repeat it!!

Here every one in Court rose, and nothing less than an engagement on the spot was expected; but Mr. Hunt and Mr. Dickinson stood between Sir Thomas and Mr. Hayward, the latter of whom seemed very anxious to come in contact with the Hon. Baronet.

It is essential for the morality of that community over whom this Reverend pugilist presides, and for the dignity of that sacred function to which he belongs, that the Bishop of the diocese, as we before remarked, take immediate cognizance of so flagitious an outrage on public decency. Of what description of personage the man OLIVER HAYWARD is, who has designated Sir THOMAS with the smart epithets contained in the above record, does not appear: it has been asserted that he is a fisherman, in one of the reports, but whether that, a chandler, tailor, or tinker, or what distinguished hovel in this civilized country gave birth to him, is not positively stated. The day's diversion wound up by the presentation, on HUNT'S part, of a bottle of blacking between his two opponents. It is hoped that every proceeding of this nature comes under the immediate eye of THE KING, or those advisers by whose councils he acts in matter of such debate; because an instantaneous dissolution of the new Parliament will at once relieve the country from the disgrace it now labours under, through the return of some of its present members—a disgrace that might have been "wrought to the extreme" by the success of HENRY HUNT. Let the reader imagine, for a moment, a man of this description being permitted, by the elective voice of any place, to occupy a seat in Parliament, and consequently being suffered to join a debate of any importance to the State's welfare, and on a defeat of his argument, or a difference of opinion with his arguers, presenting the Government officers or Councillors with a bottle of liquid-blacking in the great COUNCIL OF THE NATION—why, the eyes of all earth would look us into that contempt we should have so justly entailed upon our national character!

We cannot refrain from following up the argument adopted respecting PARSON CRESSWELL, by directing its application, though in very subdued tone, to another DIVINE, who has in our opinion, very unbecomingly rendered himself notorious in the late contest at Reading. Mr. MILMAN'S family respectability and consequence, his own avocations, his high intellectual attainments, and the protection his rank in life receives from itself, should all have conspired to prevent his interference in such a transaction as an electioneering contest—he must have abandoned holier devotions for such a degraded squabble; he took leave of that humility which is the grand prerogative of his office, and must have committed, in the excesses of feeling to which he was a party, an awful misdemeanor in the judgment of that POWER whose minister he has been chosen. We deliver this with every desire of a charitable impulse towards Mr. MILMAN, whose exalted talents no one can admire more than we do—upon a man like CRESWELL, such admonition would be thrown away—he is as unfit to receive it, as he is unable to appreciate it.

A tilting match has taken place this week between the Editors of the COURIER, TIMES, and MORNING CHRONICLE, on the misrepresentations of a part of Colonel LOWTHER'S speech on the hustings at Appleby. The charge brought against the former, by the two latter, amounts to an imputation of cowardice, said to have been cast on BROUGHAM by the Gallant COLONEL, and which is gainsaid by an alledged contradiction from the LOWTHER party. It is excessively amusing to watch the anxiety with which all those of His MAJESTY'S subjects, most acknowledged to be persons of a peaceful disposition, catch at any expression that at all goes to remind them of such a happy tendency in their general principles. If mankind did not well know that BROUGHAM was no belligerent, they would imagine, by the bluster he has made, that he was in possession of some prodigious military renown, which was liable to tarnish through such a degrading remark: but we, who are well aware of the WARLIKE CHARACTER of Mr. BROUGHAM'S words on all occasions, and of his extensive valour in the horse-whipping debut with poor GOURLAY, have no such fear on his account, and are disposed to view the thing altogether in a different light. It is merely an effort to instill into the minds of the Westmoreland boors an idea of the lawyer's valour, which, in our judgment, smacks a vast deal more of "the better part of it"—discretion; but the Chronicle of yesterday calls BROUGHAM "a brave man," and that paper knows more about him than we either do, or have the least ambition to do. It is certainly an odd circumstance, that no notice whatever was taken of the following paragraph, which appeared in the Carlisle Patriot of June 24, purporting to be a report of Colonel LOWTHER'S speech at Appleby on the 22d:

"Mr. WYBERGH has thought proper to sneer at my want of eloquence, and to compare me, in that respect, with Mr. BROUGHAM. Gentlemen, I do not pretend to eloquence. Every man to his trade, you know; and, perhaps, Mr. Brougham may want as much of my trade of fighting, as I do of his trade of talking." (Laughter and cheers.)

This passage is considerably stronger than the one complained of in the Courier, and was circulated throughout the county two days before the arrival of the London Journal, from which fact we are at liberty to draw this conclusion—that if it had not appeared in the Metropolitan paper, Mr. BROUGHAM would never have trouble his head either about the charge, or the officer making it.

Mr. BOBADIL BROUGHAM has published the following specimen of bombast, which is submitted to the reader, for the purpose of his treasuring so important a document; but at the same time, with an assurance to them, in spite of that prophetic opening—"YOUR CAUSE is safe"—that BOBADIL stands no more chance of coming in for Westmoreland, than he does for the LORD HIGH CHANCELLORSHIP of Great Britain.

"TO THE FREEHOLDERS OF WESTMORELAND.

"INDEPENDENT FREEHOLDERS—Your cause is safe if you will exert yourselves for it. Your friends have already polled, within seven votes, as many as they did on the same day of the last election, and much less exertion has been made to bring up the voters. Your adversaries have made the greatest exertions; and they cannot head you upon the poll any longer, unless you are inactive, and disregard your own interest, and the success of the cause. I am doing every thing in my power to win the day for you; but if you do not come to my assistance, it must be in vain. The cause is your own; let every man reflect that upon his own conduct, at this moment, depends whether the county shall be free for ever, or for ever dependant upon a single family. Each honest man has the welfare of Westmoreland in his keeping.

"I am, your faithful servant,
"H. BROUGHAM."

Since writing the above, Friend BOBADIL has resigned—he had been wiser if he had never offered.

TO THE WORTHY AND INDEPENDENT ELECTORS OF THE BOROUGH OF HERTFORD.

Of two things you all may rest fully assured,
For DUNCOMBE has plainly shewn,
That while he your Liberties now has secured,
He has also secured HIS OWN!

The termination of many of the elections has, of course, been followed by that constant attendant on all such public occurrences, without which, even party itself would lose half its charm—a good dinner.

The Southwark savages have feasted themselves at some pot-house in the Parish of Camberwell, to celebrate the purity of Election, as, of course, evinced during the contest between the returned members and Mr. POLHILL; and really, considering the gentlemanly language of the mob Candidates, and the innocent amusements the said mob indulged in, there cannot well be entertained a fairer idea of purity. There is not, to a certainty, a butcher or a pick-pocket in the whole Borough, who is not as pure as when he was in his cradle—bless their delicate souls! they are the very essence of humility and tenderness, and the gentle course of their late proceedings is so fully fraught with "purity," that we think it would have been a desperate slur on the whole affair, if that rare quality had not been immortalized by a public dinner.

In the City it is superfluous to say they have been gormandizing, and are again about to do so. Mr. WARD's supporters gave him a dinner on Wednesday last, Alderman THOMPSON's friends give him one on Wednesday next, and WAITHMAN's friends give him one on Thursday—but WOOD, we imagine, having suffered so signal a defeat, cannot possibly scrape up support enough to venture on an entertainment. It is an awkward dilemma for a man, once so popular, to be in, and if we were in WOOD's place, we certainly should, the instant the affair with the bill-sticker was settled, try to fudge up some kind of meeting, even if it were confined to porter and sandwiches. The most imposing (in every sense of the word) thing of the kind that has, however, come under our observation, is a dinner given at Coventry, in celebration, we suppose, of the defeat of those patriotic numskulls, PETER MOORE, and EDWARD ELLICE, in the late Election for that city. The pride of ELLICE is evidently deeply wounded, for nothing else, but that—or an unsoundness of mind—would have induced any man to issue the tirade delivered by this sublime statesman on this gluttonous event. By ELLICE's account, not only is the late election to be annulled, but the Mayor, as grand fugleman on the occasion, is to be sent to Newgate, and the very charter of the city is to be abolished. As far as Coventry itself is concerned, all these doings will certainly tend to make it more respectable—in every other point of view, this threatened castigation is entitled to little attention. With poor MOORE the case is far beyond wounded pride; for we have reason to believe that on his seat in the new Parliament depended, to a very great extent, his personal convenience, and on the emoluments derivable from the dignity of an M.P. depended a certain portion of his income. Be this as it may, all we have to go into is the quantity of nonsense talked on the present event, and the still greater quantity projected. Mr. MOORE is coming, with a head containing, by his own account, "more than all the lawyers in Westminster Hall," to petition the House of Commons against the return of the new Members; and has, moreover, promised to lay before the Committee of that House all the stones that were thrown at him during the election, whose worth he appears to estimate "at three times their weight in gold." Considering at what part of PETER's person these said stones were thrown, it ceases to be a matter of surprise that he has been enabled to preserve them all, particularly as he had previously asserted that "his head contained more than all the lawyers in Westminster." We cannot very readily believe it.

The situation of these two men, picked out from a vast heap of others, similarly circumstanced, should operate as a lesson—chiefly to their successors—but also to every partizan of that wild and undisciplined faction which has lately, too frequently, mistaken affected zeal for steady principle, and consequently, been unable to draw a true line of distinction between the popularity of a day, and the tried regard of years. At the time of the last election for this city, we mean the election of 1820, these very personages were as popular as men could be—they seemed to feed the very breath of their constituents, and the great defeat their antagonists underwent, only stamped their consequence greater—they have trifled with the people since, and the people have turned on them—they were equally worthy of each other.

While we are upon the subject of electioneering, we take leave to mention an amusing circumstance that occurred the early part of last week at Tipperary. We apprised our readers on Sunday last that Lady GLENGALL had set off for this celebrated county, in order to exercise her interest in behalf of Mr. G. DAWSON, and immediately on her arrival set to work in due form and order. The people had got an idea in their heads that her LADYSHIP had come over expressly to advocate the interest of her renowned son, RICHARD, and that this county was once again to be represented by the NOBLE EARL. How far such a visitation would have been acceptable, we cannot exactly determine; but our readers may form some conclusion, when we submit to them the following song, which several of the TIPPERARY ELECTORS were singing about the streets the day her LADYSHIP made her appearance among them:—

SONG.

AIR—Begone old Care.

Begone old CAHER, I pr'ythee begone from me,
Begone old CAHER, you and I shall never agree.
Long time you have been courting us,
Our favour fain to win;
But i' faith, old CAHER,
Your son will never get in.
Too much care most men have to deplore,
And too much CAHER we've had, to wish for more:
Though hither you dance, yet we will sing
As merrily as we may,
For we hold it all the wisest thing
To drive old CAHER away.

"Begone dull CAHER," OLIVIER said to your son;
"Begone dull CAHER, I pr'ythee from me begone;
Long time, old CAHER, you've courted us,
Our favour fain to win;
But, as OLIVIER said,
Your son will never get in!
Too much love will turn a young man's brains,
But a little love requites a young man's pains;
Yet KITTY STEPHENS dared to sing,
And fair Miss CARR to say,
That they held it, both, the wisest thing
To drive dull CAHER away!

"Begone dull CAHER," to DICK, Lord UXBRIDGE said,
"And tell Miss C——— she d——bly runs in my head:"
Away he went a-courting her,
Her favours fain to win;
But she told dull CAHER
The scrape he would get in!
When her friend to the house of dull CAHER came,
Poor dull CAHER pretended to be lame;
But the friend completely saw the thing,
And merely came to say,
Miss C—— will hold it the wisest thing
To drive dull CAHER away!

Begone, old CAHER, your son should never try
To sit, old CAHER, because he's apt to lie.
And though you've long been courting us,
Our favour fain to win,
Yet, i' faith, old CAHER,
Your son will never get in!

CHORUS.

Though hither you dance, yet we will sing,
As merrily as we may,
For we hold it, all, the wisest thing,
To drive old CAHER away!

THE BARON VON WEBER redivivus!

The following extract is from Friday's Courier:—

The "Melodists Club" held yesterday their seventh and last dinner this season, at the Freemason's Tavern. Among the vocalists present, were Messrs. Braham, Sinclair, and Pearman, who exerted their musical powers with the happiest effect. Several popular Dramatists and a number of Literary characters attended. A just tribute of reverential homage was offered to the memory of Von Weber, who was one of the members of the Club, and whose presence among them caused the event which has prematurely withdrawn him from the world to be more intensely felt. His memory was given from the Chair, and drunk in solemn silence, and the stanzas, written on the occasion by Mr. Planche, (who was present!) were admirably sung by Mr. Braham, who had adapted them with great taste to some of the most beautiful and popular strains of Weber's own music.

By this account it would seem a question difficult to be solved, whether the BARON be defunct or not—he is talked of as being dead, and yet asserted to be PRESENT—We are completely in the dark; but however, as we are assured that Mr. PLANCHE was present, the world must be satisfied with the knowledge of that important fact.

LORD GLENGALL was lolling in St. James's-street last Thursday with TOM RAIKES—thermometer 123!—when his LORDSHIP remarked, "upon my soul, TOM, it's really too hot to live!" to which the distinguished merchant replied, "Be that as it may, Dick, you'd find it hotter, IF YOU WERE TO DIE."

THEATRICALS.

The Thespian world has been up in arms this last week by the announcement that "Lucky BISH" had become lessee of Drury Lane Theatre—who had no sooner been returned M. P. for the choice borough of Leominster, than he became M. P. for this equally choice part of the great metropolis. My Lord HERTFORD, one of the Drury Lane Committee, whose wit at this particular time of the year is as sparkling as his LORDSHIP's champagne, has expressed his opinion that Mr. BISH, has, at last, DRAWN a blank! but the great liberality and wealth of the spirited lessee, added to a good selection of officers, will turn the wheel in a very different direction to that which his LORDSHIP's pleasant sally implies. We do not know how far it is the case, but we have heard that the following arrangements have been already entered upon by the new manager:—An engagement with Mr. YOUNG and MACREADY, and a subsequent coalition between these two tragedians—Miss STEPHENS is to take the lead in Opera, aided by Madame VESTRIS, to whom an express was sent off to Dublin—together with a novice, of whom report speaks in the highest terms. Miss WILSON, it is also said, will sing a certain number of nights. Mr. ELLISTON leads in Comedy, with Mr. DOWTON MUNDEN (who, it is rumoured, returns for a limited period), and Miss KELLY. An offer of considerable amount has been sent off to Milan, for the purpose of retaining Mr. BARRYMORE for the Pantomime, and an Easter piece is already in the theatre. A grand spectacle, founded on La Dame Blanche, is to be begun instantaneously (and also they say at the rival Theatre). Mr. STANFIELD is engaged on a superb front-drop, the scene of which lies in Asia Minor, and the different artists are actively employed in devising the new decorations of the Theatre. Amongst other novelties, we understand Mr. REYNOLDS has a five act play, KENNEY, a new farce called the Green Room, and KNOWLES, a new tragedy called Alfred; and to crown the whole, an overture has been forwarded to Madame CATALANI, with a view to coalesce her with Madame PASTA in a series of Oratorios, to be given on a very grand and extensive scale during the season. "Why, aye, this looks rebellion," says the great Bard, and so say we.

On the other hand, Covent Garden Theatre has been by no means inert, which was naturally to be supposed, because for activity and energy there is nothing like FAWCETT, and for real genius and research, nothing like SMART—and the consequence is, that after a great difficulty, and at an enormous price, Sir GEORGE has been enabled to secure the services of Mrs. AUSTIN.

The English Opera House opened last night with very considerable eclat—indeed, the company attached to this theatre is of great professional strength, and calculated to give every possible satisfaction. The leader of the band is Mr. WAGSTAFF—first fiddle, Miss KELLY.

The receipts of the Haymarket have suffered a very material diminution by the temporary secession of Mr LISTON, whose performance of Paul Pry has constituted thus far the exclusive attraction of the Theatre. The representations this week have been more varied than the previous mono-dramatic arrangements would with advantage admit; but it is with regret we state, that the thin appearance of each evening's house testifies the fact of the universal preference, by the public, of one individual to a whole company. Miss FORDE was to have made her debut some days since, but has been, we are sorry to find, alarmingly ill. Mr. LEE, from Dublin, is to appear with her, the moment she recovers, and a Mr. OSBALDISTON has also been about to come forth, for several weeks past, but no official announcement of the important fact has yet been made.

Whether the disastrous issue of the past seasons at both the Winter Theatres in London has had any effect on the resources of the Provincial playhouses, or on the dispositions of those who support them, we do not know—but the accounts received are of a very woeful nature in many respects. Mr. CHARLES KEMBLE (though so very attractive in London!) made "his first appearance this season" on the Liverpool stage last Monday, with Mr. WARDE and others, to the vast sum of 31*l.*—Miss PATON, who, vice versa, was attractive at Liverpool, has been enacting in Birmingham to the sums of 23*l.* and 26*l.*, and the receipts of each evening previous to her appearance had averaged about 7*l.*—then, odd enough, Mr. MACREADY filled the said theatre a few evenings since, and yet played to "very bad business" at Liverpool and Derby—we perceive he exhibits at Worcester to-morrow night—DOWTON, HARLEY, and Mrs. DAVISON are playing at the former place, and YATES is gone to exhibit his agreeable mummery in Edinburgh. It is, to be sure, to be opposed to the position we started upon, that the GENERAL ELECTION has very materially interfered with all places of public entertainment—and, indeed, it is not to be wondered at—the accounts we daily read of the proceedings in different parts of the country are far more diverting than all the acting in the Universe—where is your Mountebank like COBBETT, your Clown like HUNT, your "Knight of the Shire" like Sir THOMAS LETHBRIDGE—your pageant like that of Southwark, or your scenes like those at Reading and Galway? They are not to be found in any performers, or any theatres—and when unto this attraction of the eye, be added the more substantial one of the stomach, it ceases to be a matter of astonishment that people should prefer carrying the poll out-a-doors, to carrying their polls into the hot atmosphere of a dog-day theatre.

LITERATURE.

SIR JOHN CHIVERTON. A Romance. EBERS, OLD BOND-STREET.—We have just cast a hasty glance over Sir John Chiverton, and find it a story sufficiently pleasing, without any striking qualifications—we recommend it to the perusal of our readers. Who the Paragon is to whom the introductory lines are addressed, we do not know.

RIDING AND RUNNING.—A singular race for 100 sov. took place on the Colchester-road, four miles from Chelmsford, on Thursday—Captain Bushnel, of Ingatestone, Essex, having given Mr. G. Pearson, the runner, ten miles and a half out of twenty-one miles—the captain to ride one horse, and the pedestrian to go on foot four miles and turn, highly disadvantageous to the horse in turning. It was won by the pedestrian by half a mile.

THUNDER STORM.

About half-past two on Wednesday afternoon, a thunder storm passed over the northern suburbs of the metropopolis, and, we regret to say, did considerable damage. Judging from its effects, the storm (if we may use the expression) was about two miles and a half in breadth, extending at one time from the New-road to the crest of Hampstead-hill. At a quarter to three, the tempest was at its height. Two dense clouds were seen approaching each other "on different tacks," and midway, between Primrose-hill and Highgate, they came in contact. The effects of the collision were awful, vivid lightning, peals of thunder, and the heaviest shower of hail, ever witnessed in that neighbourhood, immediately succeeded. The hailstones were as large as pigeons' eggs. At the two mile stone on the Hampstead-road, the storm seems to have been at its height. In the gardens of Mr. Money, nearly opposite Chalk Farm, upwards of 200l. worth of glass was broken; in Mr. Browne's garden, a short distance higher up the hill, the destruction was more complete, almost every square of glass, many thousands in number, in his very fine and extensive greenhouses was destroyed, together with most of the valuable plants. The extent of Mr. Browne's loss is said to be at least 2000l. The storm continued its course in a North-easterly direction, crossing Highgate, and could be traced in its progress from Hampstead Heath for several hours, nearly realising to us Cocknies the description of an Alpine storm, as given by travellers; for from the Heath the lightning could be seen at the distance of several miles, and the rolling of the thunder heard, gradually becoming less distinct, until it imperceptibly died away. Very little rain fell in the town of Hampstead, and not a drop on the Heath.

At St. John's Wood, Mary-le-bone, the storm raged with the utmost violence, and in a short time, all the extensive gardens and nursery grounds in that vicinity presented a scene of frightful devastation. Every greenhouse, hothouse, and all the glass used in the gardens, were in an instant smashed to atoms. Nearly all the lamps in the above neighbourhood were broken. A Gentleman residing at the corner of Hall-place, Circus-road, had 2000 squares of glass broken; Mr. Anderson, Florist, Pine Apple-place, 30,000 squares; Mr. Bell, Grove End Road, 2000 squares; Mr. Atkinson, Grove End Road, 10,000 squares; Mr. Jenkins, Portman Nursery, upwards of 50,000 squares: Mrs. Hogg, Wellington Road, 36,000 squares, and nearly the whole of her most valuable fruits were destroyed. The Greenhouse of Mr. Faithful, which was filled with the choicest plants, had every square broken, and the plants beaten to pieces. The private houses are also much injured, the windows being broken, and the fruit in the gardens completely destroyed. Col. Berkeley, Mr. Hall, Mr. Simmonds, and many others, are considerable sufferers.

The towns of Windsor and Eton were also visited with one of the most tremendous storms of thunder and lightning ever remembered by the oldest inhabitant. About a quarter past two o'clock, an awfully vivid flash of lightning, illuminating the whole town, was succeeded by a report resembling a volley of the heaviest artillery. In a few moments it was ascertained that the electric fluid had descended upon the malt-house of Mr. Garraway, the Christopher Inn, Eton, with such force as to cause a wide fissure in the whole of the building, at the same time igniting the timbers, and threatening the safety of the adjacent buildings. Assistance was promptly rendered; the engines of the town and barracks hastened, with most praise-worthy alacrity, to the scene of danger, and, by great exertions, the ravaging element was confined to the spot where it first broke out. One of the attendants, who was in a stable at the Christopher, has been seriously hurt, and two of the trees in the Great Park were completely stripped of their foliage.

(From the Shrewsbury Chronicle.)

On Wednesday afternoon, about three o'clock, a sudden and awful clap of thunder was heard apparently near this town, and a heavy fall of rain succeeded. In the neighbourhood of Sutton, near here, dreadful consternation was occasioned. The houses of Mr. Jeffreys, Mr. Miles, and Mr. Benmand, all separate, by considerable distances, were shaken; and the electric fluid passing down the chimnies of Mr. Benmand, has rent the brickwork, and done much injury. In the parlour, three children were struck upon the arms and thighs, which have the appearance of red stripes down the skin: one of them lay senseless for several hours: two other children, sitting at the kitchen door, were scorched by the lightning as it passed through the house. A man servant was deprived of the faculty of hearing, and a girl in the cellar was struck down and severely scorched. A large salt-box was splintered, and the plaster of the wall forced down. A clock-case, and the wood work of a barometer, were broken, but the glass of both is uninjured.

In the neighbourhood of Westbury, the storm was furious. At the seat of Richard Top, Esq. heavy damage has been sustained; more than 700 sash squares of glass were broken by the hail stones, which in circumference measured from two to four inches, and some which conglomerated were much larger! these covered the ground two inches thick in many places. The hot-house, grapery, and cucumber-frames, are entirely diminished, the fruits destroyed, and the gardens laid waste: nearly one-third portion of a field of eight acres of wheat, very forward in the ear, is literally threshed out by the pelting of the hail-stones, some of which were on the ground yesterday in the shade, after having fallen 23 hours, measuring two inches round. In several places hares rushed from the covers, startled at the tempest. Until yesterday, scarcely any rain had fallen here for nearly three months: the crops of hay and clover are very indifferent all round. A field of eight acres, near here, was mowed this week, and a farmer passing laid a wager that he could load the whole crop upon one waggon, which he actually did. The usual produce of this field has generally been from eight to ten tons, and it this year about one ton and a half only.

THE ARMY.

GENERAL ORDER.

Horse Guards, 24th May, 1826.

The King is pleased to command that henceforth every Officer of the Army who wishes to be present at a Foreign Court, shall make his application for that purpose, through his Majesty's Ambassador, Minister, or Charge d'Affaires (as may be) resident at the said Court, and through no other Channel whatsoever.

By Command of his Royal Highness,
The Commander-in-Chief,
HENRY TORRENS, Adjutant-General.

MILITARY INSPECTION.

On Friday morning, soon after eight o'clock, the Royal Horse Guards (Blue), proceeded by their Band in full uniform, took their their station in Hyde Park, between the carriage road and the Serpentine River. At nine o'clock precisely his Grace the Duke of Wellington rode into the Park, attended by his Staff and several General Officers, and, after the salute, he proceeded to inspect the troops in front and rear. Having first past his Grace in half squadrons, the men divided into sections of threes, and then resu their position. They next wheeled into line, and advanced in parade, the band playing the Salute, and finally "God save the King." Owing to the extreme heat of the day, his Grace decined putting the men through any rapid movements. They were commanded by Lieut.-Colonel Hill. Every one noticed that the Duke of Wellington looked remarkably well. He was habited on the occasion in his Field Marshal's uniform.

The Depot of the 49th Regiment of Foot, embarked on the 25th inst., at Liverpool, on board the Majestic, for Glasgow.

The Depot of the 9th Regiment of Infantry, arrived yesterday, on board Canal-boats, at Uxbridge, on route to Winchester.

A Detachment belonging to the 4th Regiment of Light Dragoons, marched on Thursday, from Westminster, for the Cavalry Depot at Maidstone.

Detachments belonging to the 3d and 14th Regiments of Infantry, marched on Thursday morning, from Westminster, for Chatham.

A Detachment belonging to the 13th Regiment of Light Dragoons, under the command of Captains Grove and Lang; a Detachment belonging to the 30th Regiment of Infantry, under the command of Lieutenant Gregg; a Detachment belonging to the 48th Regiment of Foot, under the command of Ensign Donnellan; and a Detachment belonging to the 54th Regiment of Infantry, under the command of Lieutenant Trincourt, embarked at Chatham, on the 26th instant, on board the Cambridge Indiaman, for Madras.

Detachments belonging to the 5th, 8th, and 21st Regiments of Foot, have received orders to embark, on Thursday, on board a vessel in the River, for Leith, on route to Glasgow and Edinburgh.

COBBETT AND PRESTON.

When Mr. Hunt stood for Preston in 1820, he polled in eight days nearly 100 votes more than the Skeleton-man has done in fourteen. Mr. Hunt, too, was compelled to leave Preston on the fifth day, for the purpose of taking his trial at York; whereas Cobbett has continued to exhibit his "bull-dog face" at the window of his pot-house, and to vomit forth his "palavers" to the very last hour of the election.

Sir Thomas Beevor has, it would seem, left Preston, without making any apology to the inhabitants for bringing the impudent Mountebank into their town. Sir Thomas gives as a reason for countenancing the impostor, that he is under personal obligations to him. Gratitude is certainly a prime virtue; but we think the worthy Baronet might have found out a mode of repaying the obligation, which would not have been an insult to the electors of Preston.

But, if we cannot excuse Sir Thomas Beevor, still less can we excuse Lord Folkestone, who, it now comes out, actually subscribed 50 "golden sovereigns," as Cobbett calls them, towards the Mountebank-fund. If the Noble Lord really wished to see Cobbett sitting beside him in the House of Commons, why did he not lend him, like Sir Thomas Beevor, his personal countenance at Preston? Or rather, why did he not prevail on his venerable Sire to return the "Bone-grubber" for Dowton, instead of the Poet Laureat? All this, we confess, we do not understand.

Not so the conduct of Sir Francis Burdett! That was plain and open, and staight forward. On being asked by Colonel Johnstone to contribute to the begging-box, "Show me," replied the Hon. Baronet, "that you have a rotten borough into which you can cram Cobbett, and I will contribute a much larger sum than Lord Folkestone has done. But mind; I do this not as a dupe. I know the fellow to be an impostor, and that the best way of making every man in the country of my opinion, would be to exhibit him in the House of Commons; but I will never contribute a single farthing to enable such a man to present himself before any respectable body of electors."

By this time Lord Folkestone must, we think, wish that his 50 "golden sovereigns" were snug in his pocket. When the Mountebank ran away from Coventry, in 1820, the first intelligence we had of him was, that he has taken up his residence in St. George's Fields. Where he will now take refuge, we neither know nor care. We recollect, however, his horrid promise, that he would make Sir Francis Burdett "seek refuge from the scorn of mankind, in a cross-road's grave."

The degree of heat in Paris and London seems to be nearly the same. On Tuesday the thermometer in Paris stood at 26½ of Reaumur (83 Fahrenheit) in the shade.

CHESTER ELECTION.—After the election had continued several days, two gentlemen in the Grosvenor interest called upon a poor woman, living in Bridge-street, and purchased from her after certain inquiries, a canary bird, for the sum of ten sovereigns. The husband of the woman was not at home, but he was sent for, and, on arriving, his wife told him that she had sold the canary, and had obtained 10l. for it, and that she hoped he would go with the gentlemen and vote. The husband said that he would gladly have gone, but he had just pould for Egerton. The consternation of the canary-mongers may be easily conceived, and their vexation was not a little increased by the wife saying, that they should have a brown linnet for half the price they had given for the canary. "Oh! d—n the linnet," said the canvassers, and departed.—Manchester Mercury.

The Monster that has lately made his appearance at the Theatre de la Porte St. Martin, is now engrossing general conversation; and the hot weather does not prevent the interest this British novelty excites throughout Paris! The boxes are engaged for many representations, and the world of fashion assemble nightly at the Boulevards! Among the various successful efforts united in this extraordinary production, is the forcible and pathetic talent of Mr. T. P. Cooke, which ought and does take the lead. It is impossible to carry further the limits of pantomime, or to express in a manner more happy and true, the feeling produced by a crowd of situations as interesting as tragic. But what will unite to excite for a considerable time the enthusiasm of the public is a storm, represented with a theatrical effect perfectly new to the French stage, invented and produced under the immediate direction of Mr. T. P. Cooke. The music of the first act is by Mr. Herbert Rodwell, pupil of the celebrated H. R. Bishop, and the first English composer whose works have been heard in a French theatre—it possesses great merit, and he has happily combined the grand, the melodious, and the pathetic. The two remaining acts are by M. Alexandre.—La Quotidienne, June 15, 1826.

LAW INTELLIGENCE.

COURT OF KING'S BENCH, JUNE 28.

LOCKE V. BOSSE.

This action was brought by the plaintiff, an officer in the Custom-house, against the defendant, a surgeon and apothecary, residing in the New Kent-road, to recover damages for the publication of a libel injurious to the plaintiff, inasmuch as it held him up to public ridicule.

Mr. Scarlett stated the case. This was the first time he had ever known a person standing in his situation of a medical attendant, publish a libel on the person whom he has employed to attend. He could not see what right any man had to interfere with the domestic concerns of a family for the purpose of holding up to contempt any one of that family. The plaintiff at an advanced period of life had married a lady twenty-five years younger than himself, but that circumstance did not justify his medical adviser sending forth to the world a song in which the plaintiff was to be made the object of laughter.

Mr. Scarlett read the libel. Some passages were too gross for publication. The following were less objectionable:—

AN OLD MAN'S LAMENTATION.

Do come and help a poor old man,
A wanton wife to tame, Sirs,
For she is active, young, and gay,
While I am old and lame, Sirs.

She's lovely, handsome, fat, and fair,
Her age is twenty-three, Sirs;
But, ah! I fear, in spite of all,
She'll be the death of me, Sirs.

When I did go a wooing her,
She smil'd, and said Dada, Sirs,
But now, I'm disagreeable,
An ugly old Papa, Sirs.

The plaintiff having found out the Printer, traced the publication to the defendant, and when the Jury heard the evidence they would doubtless give such damages as the case required.

Charles Corry said, he knew the plaintiff, Mr. Peter Locke, who resided in Webb's County-terrace, Kent-road. The defendant carried on the business of a surgeon near the same place; the witness was an apprentice to the defendant's brother; he remembered the marriage of Mr. Locke with his present wife; the witness received instructions to write a copy of some verses which the defendant had written; he made the copy, and the defendant's brother directed him to take it to the Printer's; he took it to Mr. Birt, a printer, in Seven Dials, and the witness had 100 printed; Mr. John Bosse directed the witness to copy the manuscript, and the copy he made he gave to the printer. Two sets were printed by the same printer, to the order of Mr. John Bosse, the defendant; the second set of copies the witness was ordered to get printed; Mr. John Bosse did not attend Mr. Locke as his medical man; Mr. David Bosse was his medical attendant: the brothers carried on business together; some of the copies of the song were given away; he had seen one stuck on the gateway of the Terrace, where Mr. Locke lived; the copies were about the defendant's shop.

The publication being proved—

The Chief Justice said, it appeared that the brothers were so connected together that the act of one was the act of the other.

Mr. Locke, the son of the plaintiff, said his father was surveyor of the King's Warehouse at the Custom House. His father married Mademoiselle Euphrosyne Desangennies, a lady much younger than himself.

The Common Sergeant then addressed the Jury for the defendant.

The Lord Chief Justice left the Jury to say, whether they believed the testimony of Corry. If he was believed, the publication was brought home to the defendant.

The Jury found a verdict for the plaintiff—Damages, 50l.

THURSDAY, JUNE 29.

BREACH OF PROMISE OF MARRIAGE.

ELKINGTON V. COPELAND.

The plaintiff, a young lady, brought this action by her best friend, to recover a compensation in damages, for breach of promise of marriage.

Mr. Scarlett stated the case. Miss Elkington was the daughter of a respectable attorney in Birmingham. The defendant, a surgeon and chemist, having an establishment in London. The parties became acquainted in 1825, at an evening party, which met at the house of a mutual friend. The defendant was so much taken by the personal charms and accomplishments of Miss Elkington, that he used all the means in his power to obtain a regular introduction to her family. He became the friend of her brother, and was admitted as a familiar acquaintance by her father. After a short interval, the defendant declared his affection for the plaintiff by letter, and resorted to all those expressions which generally show a marked attachment. He described his prospects in life; stated his circumstances to be favourable, and that his business was increasing. His proposals having been sent to the plaintiff's father, Mr. Elkington said, he should give his daughter no money; but, if the addresses of the defendant were received by her, he should throw no obstacle in the way of their happiness. The match was then agreed on, and the marriage fixed by the defendant for April. To prove how the parties stood towards each other, Mr. Scarlett said he would give the Jury a specimen of their epistolary correspondence. He accordingly read a letter, expressing the warmest affection for the plaintiff. Several letters had been written in the same strain, and in one the defendant mentioned a scheme for settling in Mexico, under the patronage of some emigrant Spaniards with whom he was connected. A long silence then ensued between them, which led to his farewell, and the abandonment of his promise. What the circumstances were that occasioned the change he could not tell. The defendant's statement on the subject was ambiguous, and would be best explained by the letters which broke off the promise. It was, on the whole, a case for damages. The defendant, in a series of letters, held out the promise of marriage. He had finally deceived the plaintiff, whose mental and bodily suffering would be described to the Jury. They would then take care that the peace of young and virtuous females should not be invaded with impunity.

Charles Elkington, brother of the plaintiff, stated that, being in London in June 1824, the plaintiff, Caroline and her sister were sent to his house. He saw the defendant frequently. The latter talked about his sister, and expressed an attachment to her. [The first letter from the defendant declaring his attachment was then put in and read.] The witness's father was in town when the first letter was written, and the proposals of the defendant were submitted to him. The witness called upon the defendant, who carried on business as a chemist and druggist in the New-road, and Carshalton-street. He told the defendant his father was satisfied with his proposals. The Defendant said all he wanted was Caroline, and entered into some explanation about his circumstances. He was then living, he said, in a very good house not entirely furnished, and that he had another house in town. After that interview the defendant's visits were frequent; he walked out with the witness's sister, and on one occasion bought a carpet, which he told witness was purchased by Caroline. He mentioned to the witness, that in consequence of services he had rendered some Spanish emigrants he was invited to settle in Mexico, and that he should return in three years with an ample fortune. He went to the Panorama of Mexico, to explain it to witness's sister. He was asked when he meant to start, he said in May following, but he would not go without the plaintiff. The witness, after that conversation, went to Birmingham, and did not see the defendant again until about a week since. He had been under some embarrassments, but had nothing to reproach himself with as to those embarrassments, which were occasioned by the failure of other persons.

Several other letters from the defendant to the plaintiff, written in the same affectionate manner as the former letters, were put in and read. Lastly, that in which the Defendant stated the utter impossibility of their union. The defendant was induced to break off the match on the ground of his inability to maintain a wife in comfort. The letter also spoke of pecuniary aid having been obtained from his father.

William Elkington, also brother to the plaintiff, was present when she received the letter which broke off the match. His sister, when she received it, left the room, and was taken with violent hysterics. Her health has been bad since.

Mr. Gurney here observed that no case had been made out, as the first count stated that the defendant had premised marriage, which did not appear in evidence.

Mr. Chitty contended that the promise of marriage had been distinctly proved.

The Lord Chief Justice said, the effect of the letters read in evidence was a promise to marry within a reasonable time.

Mr. Gurney addressed the Jury for the defendant.

The Lord Chief Justice left the Jury to say what damages the plaintiff ought to receive.

The Jury found a verdict for the plaintiff—Damages, 250l.

HIGH COURT OF JUSTICIARY, EDINBURGH.

SPRING GUNS.

On Monday, James Craw, gamekeeper to the Earl of Home, was put to the bar, accused of wilful murder, having, on the 1st of February last, loaded a spring gun with powder and shot, which he placed in the Hersel plantations, and attached a wire or string to the trigger, whereby John Guthrie, son of the late James Guthrie, carrier in Coldstream, who having trespassed in the said plantation in quest of game, came in contact with the said string, which caused the gun to be discharged, and the contents lodged in the knee of the said John Guthrie—who died in consequence of the wound, on the 28th March last.

The prisoner pleaded not guilty.

Mr. Cockburn said, that upon the main facts of this case—that a spring-gun had been set within the Hersel plantation, and that a man had come by his death in consequence of trespassing, both parties were agreed. But there was still a grave, and hitherto untried, question in this country involved, whether it was illegal to set spring-guns without notice, and being illegal whether it justified so serious a charge as that preferred against the pannel. It was his opinion, and that of his Lerrned Friend (Mr. Jeffrey), who appeared with him, that no verbal argument could supersede that more grave mode of disposing of new questions which was usual in that Court.

The Lord Advocate admitted that it was of great importance to have a solemn decision of the Court on this question. He was not quite prepared to go into any lengthened verbal discussion, and should therefore agree to written pleadings, provided that they were seen and interchanged by an early day.

The Court then ordered informations to be lodged before the first and second box-days—and the diet was continued against Craw till the 14th of November.

MURDER.

Peter Moffatt, junior, was next put to the bar, on a charge with the wilful murder of his father, Peter Moffatt, late carter in Kilsyth, having, on the 2d day of April, 1822, assaulted and attacked the said Peter Moffatt with a knife, or other letral instrument, and inflicted several wounds in the belly of his father, whereof he died in four days thereafter.

The fact having been proved by two witnesses, the Lord Justice Clerk summed up, and the Jury, after an absence of a very few minutes, returned a verdict "finding the pannel guilty as libelled."

The Lord Justice Clerk then read the sentence of the Court, ordained the pannel to be executed at Stirling, on Friday, the 28th July next, and his body thereafter to be given to Dr. Munro for dissection.

The pannel is a very dull-looking young man, about 21 or 22 years of age. He seemed to feel his situation most acutely, never lifting his eyes from the floor, and often shedding tears during the course of the day. We hear that before the trial he anticipated the worst, and was thereby prepared, in some measure, for the sentence of condemnation, which he heard with apparent composure. His mother and sister were in attendance as witnesses, but neither were called; after the trial was over, the former had to be led from the Court-room, supported by two men, apparently suffering an indescribable agony of mind.

OLD BAILEY, June 27.

Henry Lloyd, clerk, aged 28, was indicted for receiving and uttering 1000 bank-notes, of the value of 1l. each, with intent to cheat and defraud Sir R. Carr Glynn and others. The prisoner pleaded guilty.

Mr. Andrews, the prisoner's counsel, stated to the Recorder that the prisoner had been tried upon the capital indictment, for stealing the said notes, and was then acquitted, and that he was detained to have another indictment preferred for the minor offence of receiving and uttering the notes in question, knowing them to have been stolen, and, as the court would observe, to this second charge the prisoner had pleaded guilty.

Recorder—Mr. Andrews, you do not advise him then, to abide his trial?

Mr. Andrews—No, my Lord.

Mr. Broderick, who appeared for the prosecution, said that he had no objection to the course which had been adopted.

The clerk of the arraigns then recorded the plea of Guilty.

[Our readers may recollect that the robbery connected with this charge took place on the North road, when the York Express was robbed of the property before specified.]

Manslaughter.—John Orchendon was indicted for killing and slaying William Dalton, on the 18th June; he was also indicted for assaulting him.

Thomas Muncaster stated that the deceased lived in Red Lion-court, in the Mineries. On the 15th of June, about 12 o'clock at night, he heard the wife of the deceased say, "Take this vagabond out of the house," upon which the prisoner (a watchman, who was crying the hour) came up, when she gave charge of the man of whom she was complaining to him. The prisoner removed the man, saying, "Come out, here." Several persons came out of the house, and followed them. The deceased and his wife were both there; they then got together in a body, and they all fell down; when they got up again, the prisoner took the thick end of his stick, and struck the deceased (who still remained on the ground) two violent blows. He could not see where he struck him.

The prisoner, in defence, said the deceased struck him first, and that he struck him again in his own defence.

Several witnesses gave him an excellent character.

The Recorder then summed up the evidence, and the jury returned a verdict of—Not Guilty.

The first Division consisting of 400 boys of the Royal Military Asylum, at Chelsea (by permission of the Duke of York), visited Marshall's Peristrephic Panorama of the Battle of Algiers; they appeared highly delighted, and testified their approbation by repeated shouts of applause. The movements of the Panorama were accompanied by appropriate Martial Music from their Mimic Band, consisting of 35 boys under 12 years of age, which increased the effect in a very great degree.

POLICE INTELLIGENCE.

MANSION-HOUSE.—Friday, Mr. Alderman Wood came to the Mansion-house for the purpose of contradicting a statement which appeared in the Courier newspaper, that he had persecuted a poor man, named Brown, and procured his discharge, for sticking up bills against him (Alderman Wood.) He thought it worth while not to let such a statement go unanswered; for he never exercised such an influence in the course of his life, and he never heard of such a man until the charge was made in the newspaper. He wished to know whether there really was such a man connected with the Mansion-house establishment.

The Lord Mayor said, he believed there was such a man, not belonging to the Mansion-house, but to the Mansion-house porter. The fact was, that their porter, like the porter to the Castle of Indolence, had become so exceedingly fat, that he had employed a valet to do the only work which there was for him to do—namely, to sweep the gateway. This valet was the aforesaid Brown, in whom the liberty of the subject, and the constitution, was alleged to have been violated. How, or why, he had quitted the Mansion-house the porter alone could tell.

The porter was then sent for, and he waddled into the Justice-room. In answer to his Lordship's inquiries, he stated that he had employed Brown at half-a-crown per week, to sweep the door, and do other work for him.

The Lord Mayor—When did he absent himself from his duty? The Porter replied, it was about three weeks ago.

The Lord Mayor.—Did you discharge him from his office on constitutional grounds, or for acting against Mr. Alderman Wood?

The Portor.—Bless your Worship, no: I can't tell why he went off.

Alderman Wood professed himself satified with this contradiction: he thought the affair unworthy of farther attention. He had been challenged to prove his statement respecting the bills, and he had proved it.

GUILDHALL.—A man applied for a summons against the churchwardens of St. Sepulchre's, calling on them to show cause why they should not cancel a bond, into which himself and two friends had entered, guaranteeing to the parish the payment of 5s. a week, for the support of a natural child. At the time this bond was entered into, he was in flourishing circumstances; but he was now in poverty, and his bondsmen had been paying the 5s. out of their own pockets. He wished the Alderman to diminish the allowance, so as to suit his reduced means. Mr. Alderman Birch assured the applicant he had no power over the stipulations of the bond. Nothing but the kindness of the churchwardens, in forbearing to press their legal demand, could be of any service to him.

A solemn looking little fellow, an attorney's clerk, was held to bail for annoying a respectable married female, whom he beset in the Poultry, and followed through Cheapside, using shameful language, and improper solicitations. Mr. G. Steele, of the Bank, observing the efforts of the lady to rid herself of the fellow's importunities, interfered, and on hearing the particulars, gave him into custody. The prisoner pleaded intoxication, and his being in a state of irritation from the heat of the weather; but this plea satisfied neither the Alderman nor the lady's husband.

GUILDHALL.—Mr. John Neville, a gentleman, who stated that he was residing in chambers at Furnival's Inn, was charged before Mr. Alderman Birch yesterday, with indecently assaulting Mrs. Elizabeth Thompson, the wife of an apparently respectable individual, living at Cobham-place, Finsbury, on the previous night.

The complainant, a well-dressed female, about 30 years of age, stated that she was returning home with her husband, between 10 and 11 o'clock, when at the part of Holborn-bridge, where the pavement becomes narrow, he let go her arm for a few moments. The defendant was approaching in an opposite direction along the curb-stone, but he stepped out of his way to meet her as she was walking down the middle of the footway, and aimed at her person indecently with one of his hands. She passed on without taking any notice of the circumstance to her husband, who was close behind her, in the hope of avoiding altercation, but the defendant had acted so broadly, that her husband saw the insult and ran up and seized him.

Mr. Neville, in reply, said the Alderman might be aware of the difficulty a defendant laboured under in disproving such a charge, and for him to offer to contradict upon oath the statement made against him, he knew was useless; but he would declare solemnly, that he neither spoke to, nor touched the lady in any way whatever. When he was first assailed by the husband, so unconscious was he of having offended, he concluded it was a charge made to collect a crowd for the purpose of picking pockets. As the lady, however, afterwards came up and confirmed the charge, he concluded his first idea of its being a pickpocket's scheme was erroneous; but he knew the lady was mistaken; and if it was the last word he had to speak, he would deny that he had ever felt disposed to assault or insult the complainant.

Mr. Thompson, the husband, was then sworn, and said, he had merely sent his wife on alone for a minute to suffer some females who were walking arm-in-arm to pass, and while he was making his way up to his wife's side again, the defendant came by, and swung his hand against her person.

Mr. Alderman Birch said, every body knew that an indelicacy of the nature alluded to by the lady, might be committed in the evening, in the most frequented streets, upon modest females, without being noticed by the passing crowd. It was an act that might be perpetrated to a shameful extent, quietly and unobserved, and, therefore, he should not think the evidence of the defendant's witnesses, if they should state that they were passing and saw no such assault, would weigh much against that of the lady herself and her husband, who swore to the contrary. If, indeed, she had complained of being knocked down, or pushed against the shutters, the evidence of passengers at the time would be worth something. If, however, the defendant chose to apologize, they might retire and settle the business.

Mr. Neville having called his two witnesses forward, one of them stated, that he saw the parties pass each other, and he observed nothing particular, until the husband ran after Mr. Neville and menaced him with his fist.

Mr. Neville then said, if he had touched the lady he ought to apologize, and he did apologize to her; but he must still deny that he had either spoken to her or touched her.

Mr. Thompson accepted the apology, and Mr. Neville was discharged.

Mr. Alderman Birch then said, the assult was a gross one, and he had made up his mind to send the defendant to the sessions if he had not made his peace with the complainant; and, by Heavens, he would punish to the uttermost every man who disgraced himself by insulting in such a way modest married females, in the streets.

Mr. Payne, the clerk, observed, that in the last instance of this sort that went to the sessions, the defendant was fined 20l.

BOW-STREET.—Wednesday James Wm. Leach, a man about thirty years of age, who had lost an arm, as it was said, in one of the Peninsular battles, was brought before Mr. Minshull, charged under Lord Ellenborough's Act, with cutting and maiming John Brookes, with intent to do him some grievous bodily harm.

The Surgeon who dressed the wound said it was certainly inflicted with a sharp instrument, and that if the blow had taken effect upon the part to which it appeared to have been directed, death must almost inevitably have ensued.

The prisoner did not attempt to deny the charge, and said he hoped the effect of it would be to send him out of the world, for he was sick of his life. "If," added he, "the law does not deprive me of life, I will end it myself, for longer in this world I am determined I will not exist."

Mr. Minshull ordered the prisoner to be committed, and directed the gaolers to keep a sharp watch upon his conduct so long as he should remain in their custody.

The prisoner was removed from the bar, declaring his intention to destroy himself, if possible. His wife was present, with a child in her arms, and seemed deeply affected.

HATTON-GARDEN.—Thursday a man named Edward Taylor, and Amelia, his wife, were charged with fraudulently obtaining 15l. from a benefit society. The male prisoner was a member of a benefit society at Hertford, where he and his wife resided. About a week ago the female prisoner called upon one of the stewards, and informed him that her dear husband had died in London after a few hours' illness. She also said that it was her intention to bury him in London, on account of the great expence of removing him to Hertford. The steward immediately paid her the sum of 15l. to which she would have been entitled on the death of her husband; but having discovered shortly after, that she had ordered her furniture, &c. to be conveyed to London, he followed, and watched her to a house in Fox's-court, Charter House-lane. Thither he repaired the following morning, accompanied by a constable, and found the supposed defunct member and his wife eating a hearty breakfast of coffee and eggs. They were committed for trial.

LAMBETH-STREET.—George Sinclair, a youth belonging to Maryport, in Devon, who came to London about three weeks since in the Dryad, of Whitehaven, was charged with attempting to drown himself in the City canal, on Wednesday night. The constable said, he understood the cause of his attempt was the coolness of his sweetheart, who refused to walk with him that evening. The prisoner himself ascribed it to his distress, at not having the means of returning to the country. He was sent to the workhouse for the present.

Balloon.—In order to give some relief to the monotonous idleness and uselessness of ballooning, it was announced on Wednesday that Mrs. (not Mr.) Graham and the imprudently adventurous Miss Stock, would ascend from Pentonville. It was found, however, that this heavy Stock had overloaded the balloon, and the latter lady was in consequence obliged to be unstowed and thrown out as forming too much lumber for so light a voyage. Mrs. Graham then ascended by herself, not however without imminent peril; for the balloon almost instantly descended in the neighbourhood; and though it afterwards made some slight progress, the utmost limit of the silly excursion was Ball's Pond, Newington, where we are happy to find Mrs. Graham was met by her husband, who returned with her on terra firma to Pentonville.

Death of two old Servants of the State.—The warrant for the demise of Saturday's Gazette has been executed, and by Act of Parliament, the Lottery, after existing 150 years, is doomed to die in a few days, and with it all hope to gain a fortune by risking a trifle must end for ever. A last effort may yet do wonders in gaining a share of the Six Thirty Thousand Pound Prizes, which must all be drawn on Tuesday the 18th of this month, when Lotteries end for ever.

It appears that the law passed in Queen Anne's reign, and confirmed by the act of 5 Geo. III. c. 27, with respect to the re-assembling of a dissolved Parliament on the decease of the reigning Sovereign, in case a new one, though returned and summoned, had not met and sat (that is, had passed an act), was repealed by an act of 37 Geo. III. c. 127. The law, as it now stands, is thus:—"In case of the King's demise after the dissolution of a Parliament, and previous to the day appointed for the assembling of a new one, the last preceding Parliament to meet and sit."—"And so in case of the demise of a successor to the Crown within six months after his succession, without his having dissolved the Parliament, or after the same shall have been dissolved, and before a new one shall have met. But in case the King dies on or after the very day appointed for the assembling the new Parliament, then such new Parliament to meet and sit."

The beautiful yacht, fitted up with every convenience, in which Lord Cochrane has sailed for Greece, was once the property of Mr. Perkins, the eminent brewer; that gentleman and his family visited in it most of the islands in the Mediterranean and the Adriatic Seas, as well as the coast of Spain.

The picturesque ruins of Brambletye House, standing upon the borders of Ashdown Forest, Sussex, have become an object of public curiosity, and have attracted many visiters since the publication of Mr. Horace Smith's Novel, in which are developed many extraordinary scenes which took place in that mansion during the protectorate of Oliver Cromwell. At that time Brambletye House was the residence of the Comptons, and it was within its walls that many of the plots of the cavaliers against the Commonwealth were hatched.

Murder by a Lunatic.—At the last Assizes at Rion, in France, a man, named James Mounin, was tried for the murder of three persons, one of them a near relation. It appeared in evidence that Mounin, who was subject to occasional fits of insanity, on the 15th of Feb. last, escaped from his house, and ran a considerable distance, assaulting violently every person whom he met, and killing three with large stones. The inhabitants of Carroux, where this happened, subsequently went in pursuit of him, and after chasing him for a long time, and wounding him twice by the discharge of a fowling-piece, succeeded in securing and lodging him in a prisan. After seme days this unhappy man recovered his reason, and on being interrogated as to the fatal consequences of his conduct, he replied that he had a perfect recollection of having killed three men, and said, that during his phrenzy he saw nothing but flames before him, and delighted to see blood flow. His interval of sanity was not of long duration, and shortly after this conversation he attacked the keeper of the prison, and but for prompt assistance would have killed him. The Court of Assize having heard the evidence, and entertaining no doubt of the insanity of the prisoner, acquitted him on the charge of wilful murder, but ordered that effective means should be taken to secure him against the possibility of his committing similar outrages.

Fire.—Memnon Coppice, the property of W. R. Mellish, Esq. was discovered to be on fire on Tuesday morning, and more than an acre of the thickest part of the wood was destroyed. It is situated between Heckfield Heath and Basingstoke, and it was first discovered by one of the Western stage coachmen. It was got under by a number of workmen cutting away the wood which had not ignited, and leaving that part on fire to consume itself. Some persons are suspected as the incendiaries, and a reward is offered for information.

The Fire at Bognor.—Besides the hotel, from twelve to twenty houses were destroyed by the fire on Monday last. The wines and most of the furniture of the hotel were saved. The proprietor was insured, but this unfortunately was not the case in regard to the owners of the adjoining houses, whose loss is consequently very severe.

Alarming Riot—Three Men Shot—Our Correspondent opens his letter to state that a gentleman who had just arrived in Armagh, informs him, that he had left the town of Monaghan in an alarming state of riot. It having been understood that Col. Leslie intended to enter the town that day, a mob of two thousand persons, calling themselves Mr. Western's friends, met Colonel Leslie's carriage, and committed a most violent assault on that gentleman and his servants, who escaped narrowly with their lives from the carriage, which was speedily demolished, and scattered in fragments. Eighteen of the horse police came to the spot, but could make no head against the fury of the mob; the foot police then arrived, and fired, when three persons were shot, and several were severely wounded. The riot had not terminated when our Correspondent's informant left the town.—Belfast Commercial Chronicle.

The sum expended at Maldon election is variously estimated at from 30 to 50,000l. Eighteen hundred freemen were newly admitted, and 3,100 polled.

Letters received from the manufacturing districts, state that the most eminent of the manufacturers are retiring from business. Turner's house, at Blackburn, have retired, which with the withdrawing of Birley and Co. throws about 5000 people out of employment in that place.

The Pope has published a bull, anathematising the freemasons; the thunders of the Vatican have, however, lost much of their force and terror.

Earthquake.—At the end of October, an earthquake was experienced at Shiraz, in Persia, which destroyed many buildings; and among other national monuments, overthrew the celebrated tombs of Hafiz and Saadi.

A new and splendid Wine and Refreshment Saloon has been opened in the Haymarket, under the title of The Cafe del Europe. The wines are of the first quality, and the Proprictors deserve every success for their liberality and attention.

According to the intelligence from Brazil, through the French Papers, it appears that the Emperor of Brazil has completed the separation between that country and Portugal, by renouncing the Portuguese Throne in favour of his daughter, who is to be married to the Prince Miguel. While Don Pedro has taken this decisive step, confirming the separation between Europe and America, a revolution is again said to be threatened in Brazil. A letter from Para, the most northern province of Brazil, of the 10th of May, shows that at one of the towns of the province the Authorities had declared against the Imperial Government. It appears from the repeated attempts made throughout Brazil, that a strong attachment to republicanism, from passion, probably rather than from judgment, prevails among the Creoles; and the war, carried on with no great brilliancy or spirit on the southern extremity of the empire, may encourage the attempts of the Republicans in an opposite direction.

To the Free and Independent Electors of Great Britain, who have not already given, or promised their Votes, are very respectably solicited to vote for John Ingram and Son, to supply them with cheap and good Chairs, Bedsteads, Tables, Basonstands, Drawers, Flower-stands, Garden and Rustic Seats, &c. &c. where every article will be found cheaper than can be got any where else, as for instance: Japanned rush seat Chairs, all Patterns, all Colours, and all the same low prices of 3s. 6d. per Chair. Impregnated Rose Wood Windows, and all other kinds equally low.—N.B. Observe the sign of the Rustic House, No. 29, City-road, near Finsbury-square.

ORANGE PROCESSIONS.

Legal Opinion.—We have read a statement of different processions which have taken place within the last two years, including processions such as stated in the case now laid before us. They appear to have been in many cases attended with loss of life, and in all with danger to the public peace. We therefore conceive it to be the duty of the Magistrates to use every legal means to repress so great an evil; and we are of opinion that every Justice of Peace, on receiving information of any such intended procession, and being satisfied on such information that it is likely to endanger the public peace, will be warranted in taking the necessary steps for the prevention thereof, and may arrest the persons who shall be found so assembled, or about to assemble, and hold them to security to keep the peace. And we do humbly submit to his Excellency the expediency of notifying to the Magistrates in the several places where such meetings are likely to take place, the state of the law on the subject, and the necessity of acting under it.

IMPOSTURE UNMASKED.—The progress of Merit although frequently assailed, is not impeded by Envy and Detraction The aggression of ambuscade terminates in defeat; and conscious rectitude ultimately triumphs in the attainment of the grand object—public approbation The test of experience is the guarantee of favour, and has established WARREN's BLACKING in general estimation; of which there exists not a stronger proof than the tacit acknowledgment of a host of servile imitators, who surreptitiously obtrude on the unwary a spurious preparation as the genuine article, to the great disappointment of the unguarded purchaser, and manifest injury of WARREN, whose character and interest by this iniquitous system are equally subject to detriment. It becomes therefore an indispensable duty to CAUTION THE PUBLIC against the manœuvres of Unprincipled Venders, who having no character to lose, and stimulated by avarice in their nefarious pursuits, aim at the acquisition of money through any medium than that of honour! The original and matchless BLACKING bears on each bottle a short direction, with the signature

ROBERT WARREN

All others are counterfeits; and in many instances the imposition labels are artfully interlined with a different address, in very small characters, between the more conspicuous ones of "No. 30," and "STRAND." It is earnestly recommended to Shopkeepers and others who are deceived by base fabrications of WARREN's BLACKING, to return the detected trash to the source whence it came, and expose the machinations of rascality to merited obloquy.

WARREN's BLACKING is surpassingly brilliant;—it excludes damp; gives pliancy to the leather; retains its pristine virtue in all climates; and, combining elegance with comfort, is an article equally of indispensable fashion and utility. Sold by every respectable Vender in Town and Country, in bottles, at 6d. 10d. 12d. and 18d. each.

On Wednesday, the 12th of July, and following day, the Elegant Household Furniture, brilliant pier and chimney glasses, grand piano forte, cabinet articles, cut glass chandeliers; services of Dresden, Sevre, Angouleme, and Venetian Porcelain; rare old India jars and beakers, Sevre vases, &c. Parisian ormolu clock, richly chased; bronze and ormolu candelabras, cassolets, &c.

On Friday, the 14th of July, the Third Day's Sale, the magnificent services of Gilt and Silver Plate, useful as well as ornamental, richly chased and engraved in various subjects and devices.

On Saturday, the 15th of July, the Fourth Day's Sale, the choice Library of Books, in which there are many valuable works on various subjects.

On Monday the 17th, and Tuesday the 18th July, the Fifth and Sixth Day's Sale, the extensive Collection of Valuable Paintings, comprising admirable specimens of the most esteemed Masters, and the assemblage of numerous costly, rare, and valuable antique and Italian Bronzes, embracing many bold and exquisitely fine specimens of the choicest workmanship, selected with superior judgment.

On Wednesday the 19th of July, the Seventh Day's Sale. The valuable cellar of choice fine-flavoured old wines, consisting of about six hundred dozen, of various kinds and vintages, choicely selected at a very great expense.

On Thursday, the 20th July, the Last Day's Sale, the remainder of the fashionable furniture, &c.

A full description is set forth in the catalogue.

To be viewed on Monday, the 3d of July, to the time of sale (Sunday excepted): catalogues 5s. each, without which none can be admitted, may then be had on the premises, and of Mr. Robins, No. 170, Regent-street.

N.B. The wines to be tasted on the morning of sale.

THE BRITISH SPECIFIC, for re-producing and promoting the GROWTH of HAIR.—The principle of its operation is to cool and contract the pores which are opened by a redundancy of heat, occasioning a relaxation of the roots, and render them incapable of retaining the hair; to counteract which nothing is better calculated than the British Specific, as, from its invigorating and oleaginous properties, it almost immediately arrests the falling off, and affords such effectual nourishment to the roots, that persons giving it a fair trial may assure themselves of its speedily restoring it even where it has become completely bald, however long it may have been so, and, if grey, gradually to restore it to its natural colour. The superiority of this preparation (the invention of a medical man) derives additional recommendation from its being, unlike other compositions for the hair, so extremely clean and agreeable, that its application is a real pleasure, and is only requisite to be generally known to receive the preference of every article in use for similar purposes. To be had only of D. Peden, 15, Burlington Arcade, Piccadilly, in bottles 6s. each, or cases of four bottles for 1l., forwarded to order on receiving the amount, post paid.

New Edition, the Fifth, revised and enlarged, price 3s.

PRACTICAL OBSERVATIONS on STRICTURES of the URETHRA and RECTUM, recommending an improved system for their Treatment and Cure; illustrating its efficacy by numerous remarkable and highly important cases, in some of which, Strictures of from ten to twenty years duration have been totally removed in a few weeks, and its superiority thereby fully established over every other method hitherto practised. By C. B. COURTENAY, M.D. To which are added, Observations and Practical Comments on Gleet, Seminal Weakness, and the miseries occasioned by Self Abuse, for the cure of which a mode of treatment, the result of long and successful practice, and at once safe, speedy, and effectual, is adopted by the Author.

Printed for the Author, Robert-street, Adelphi; and sold by William Marsh, 145, Oxford-street, next to Fladong's Hotel; Jones and Sherwood, Paternoster-row; Onwhyn, 4, Catherine-street; Walker, 90, High Holborn; and may be had of all Booksellers.

"We earnestly recommend the cases related by Dr. Courtenay to the perusal of such of our readers as are afflicted with the complaints which the Author has made the subject of these Observations. Several instances are adduced of the recovery of perfect health from states which were considered hopeless by Practitioners of eminent talents, and very extensive experience. We entertain the highest opinion of Dr. Courtenay's professional skill, and congratulate him on his successful and judicious application to these severe and often fatal diseases."—European Magazine.

A PLEASING APPEARANCE.—The Grand Characteristic of Mrs. VINCENT'S CELEBRATED LOTION is—that it is no repellant, but gently and kindly opens the Pores of the Skin, extracting and dulcifying the Morbid Virus lurking in it. The most tender Lady or Child may at all times make use of it with the greatest safety. It removes every kind of Coarseness, Eruption, and unpleasant Appearance, and renders the Skin clear smooth, and transparent. Nothing has ever yet been found to compare to its effects and excellence; but its unexampled reputation having excited various Imitations, it is particularly recommended to ask for Mrs. Vincent's Gowland's Lotion, and see M. E. Vincent on the label of the genuine. —The following is a letter from Lady Catherine Lennox to Mrs. Vincent, the Proprietor:—

"Lady Catherine Lennox has the pleasure of stating that, by the use of two quart bottles of Mrs. Vincent's Gowland's Lotion, she is perfectly cured of a violent eruption upon her face and arms. She was recommended by her Physician to make use of the Lotion, which has exceeded her most sanguine expectations. Mrs. V. is at liberty to make use of her Name as having experienced its healing virtues; and Lady Lennox will also recommend it as much as possible within the sphere of her acquaintance."

Sold, by appointment of Mrs. Vincent, at Bacon's, 150, Oxford-street; Butler's, 4, Cheapside; Newbery and Edwards's, St. Paul's; Sutton's, Bow Church Yard; Barclay's, Fleet Market, and by all the most respectable Perfumers and Dealers in Genuine Medicines in every Town in Europe, in Quarts, 8s. 6d.; Pints, 5s. 6d.; Half-pints, 2s. 9d —, To prevent Counterfeits, see M. E. VINCENT on the label of the genuine

BURGESS' ESSENCE of ANCHOVIES, Warehouse, 107, STRAND, corner of Savoy Steps, London.—JOHN BURGESS and SON, being apprised of the numerous endeavours made by many persons to impose a spurious article for their make, feel it incumbent upon them to request the attention of the public, in purchasing what they conceive to be the ORIGINAL, to observe the Name and Address correspond with the above. The general appearance of the spurious descriptions will deceive the unguarded, and for their detection J. B. and Son submit the following caution:—Some are in appearance at first sight "Burgess' Essence of Anchovies;" others, "Burgis's," and many more without address.—JOHN BURGESS and SON having been many years honoured with such distinguished approbation, feel every sentiment of respect towards the public, and earnestly solicit them to inspect the labels previous to purchasing what they conceive to be of their make, which they hope will prevent many disappointments.

Burgess' New Sauce for general purposes having given such great satisfaction, continues to be prepared by them, and is recommended as a most useful and convenient sauce; will keep good in all climates.

EAST INDIES.

We give the official documents connected with the renewal of hostilities in India, and with the first military operations consequent upon that event.

(OFFICIAL.)

FORT WILLIAM, FEB. 6, 1826.

The following copies of despatches received, from the Commissioners in Ava and Pegu, and from Major General Sir Archibald Campbell, K.C.B. and K.C.T.S. Commander of the British Forces in Ava, are, herewith published for general information.

TO THE RIGHT HON. LORD AMHERST, GOVERNOR-GENERAL IN INDIA, &c.

My Lord,—It is with extreme regret that we have to report for the information of your Lordship in Council, that the Treaty concluded with the Burmese Ministers on the 3d instant, not having been ratified by their Sovereign, and none of the conditions having, within the stipulated period, been fulfilled, all amicable intercourse with the authorities at Melloon was immediately broken off, and hostilities recommenced on the morning of the 19th inst. with the attack and capture of the enemy's position at that place.

The particulars of this action will be communicated in the military despatches, and we shall take an early opportunity of submitting our sentiments upon the ulterior policy which it may, in consequence, be expedient to pursue.

In our present address we conceive it sufficient to refer your Lordship in Council to the detailed account of our proceedings given in the documents transmitted by this opportunity to the Secretary to Government in the Political Department for the most clear and convincing evidence, that every admissible effort has, on our part, been made to avert an event which, however, deeply to be regretted, will, we feel confident, be admitted by the Government to have been, under the peculiar circumstances of our situation, altogether unavoidable. We have the honour to be, my Lord, your Lordship's most obedient and most humble servant,

(Signed) ARCHD. CAMPBELL,
Major-Gen. and Sen. Commissioner.

Civil Commissioner.

PROVINCIAL INTELLIGENCE.

THE WEATHER.

CHELTENHAM, JULY 6.—Cheltenham was visited on Tuesday night by one of the most terrific thunder storms remembered for many years. The seeming warfare of the elements was indeed awful; the peals of thunder, which were long, loud, and frequent, shook the houses to their very foundations; and the flashes of lightning were vivid and continual, and could not fail to impress the most hardened atheist with a deep sense of the nothingness of man, and of the power of the Great Being who bade the thunder roar and lightning blaze. He who could not, during such a scene, confidently throw himself for protection on the mercy of the King of Kings, must, if possessed of any feeling, be wretched indeed. We are happy to state that we have not heard of any damages resulting from the storm, but that, on the contrary, it appears to have done us material benefit, by cooling the air, which had been for several days exceedingly oppressive.

[From the Salopian Journal of July 5.]

On Saturday last, one of the greatest storms of hail and rain, attended with thunder and lightning, fell at Bridgnorth and neighbourhood, ever remembered there, which continued more than an hour. We have not heard of any serious damage done by it.

[From the Warwickshire Chronicle of Wednesday.]

We have this morning received the following from Coventry:—"This morning the city of Coventry was visited by a most tremendous thunder storm, accompanied with a deluging shower of rain. It commenced about one o'clock, and, for upwards of an hour, the vivid flashes of the lightning, and the deafening peals of the thunder, were alarming beyond description. About a quarter past two, the electric fluid descended against the house of a Mr. Careless, in Much Park-street, and struck the iron hinge of a window shutter on the ground floor, on the east side of the building; it entered the premises, dashing to splinters the window and window-frame; and taking a perpendicular direction, forced its way through the ceiling into the chamber above, where part of the family were at rest; the window and frame there shared a similar fate with those below; several splinters being thrown on the bed of the terrified inmates. The fluid proceeded across the chamber, forcing large pieces of wood and brick from the wall, and entered the shop above, which contained several engine looms filled with silk. From the appearance of this place, the electric matter had lost none of its power. In several places bricks were torn from the wall with tremendous violence, and considerable damage done to the looms. The destructive fluid afterwards made its egress through a window on the west side of the house, tearing out the window frame. A young man, son to Mr. Careless, who slept in the shop, terrified by the violence of the storm, rose for the purpose of closing the window as the electric fluid entered. He was immediately struck to the ground, but, we are happy to state, received no further personal injury than being for a short time stunned. He describes the sensation he experienced as similar to that of a person whose head was surrounded by a flame of fire. No other member of the family was injured."

MELANCHOLY EVENT ON MALVERN HILL.

On Monday, a party of friends, among whom were the eldest son and three daughters of Joseph Hill, Esq. of Lindridge, on the borders of Gloucestershire, and several other young Ladies who were on a visit to them, had agreed to form a gipsy party, to perambulate the beautiful range of Malvern Hills, which commence about two miles from Mr. Hill's residence, and extend beyond Great Malvern, in Worcestershire. They were accompanied by a servant man, with a light cart, furnished with provisions, &c., for their use during their anticipated agreeable excursion. About three o'clock in the evening they had reached the Worcestershire Beacon, on which is a building erected by Lady Harcourt, intended for the use of persons walking on the hills, and to shelter them from the "pitiless pelting storm." But alas! it was no protection to them. The air looked tempestuous, a storm came on suddenly, the young ladies were very much alarmed at the vivid flashes of lightning which so rapidly succeeded each other, and the daring peals of thunder which seemed to shake the foundation of the rocks on which they stood. The building is of stone, and the roof covered with iron; there was a stone table in the middle of the room, and seats on each side, with a window opposite the door-way; the party were inside it; Miss Eliza Hill, her sister Johannah, and a Miss Woodward, from Hereford, were seated at the table; the others walking about. Miss Margaret Hill, a young lady about fifteen years of age, being much alarmed, was looking out at the door-way to see if the storm had passed, when she observed the electric fluid (which no doubt was attracted by the iron roof) appearing as a mass of fire rolling along the hill and approaching their retreat, she attempted to run out, but was instantly thrown with violence to the ground; her shoes, and part of her dress much burnt, her brother, who was near, shared much the same.

The electric fluid entered at the door, shivered the stone table to atoms, and many large stones in the wall, and passed through the window, removing the window frame and stone work about it. Two of the unfortunate young ladies, Miss Eliza Hill and Miss Woodward, were instantly struck dead. Miss Johannah Hill was in the same state; medical aid being procured, and some signs of life appearing, she was bled, and removed to the Unicorn Inn, at Malvern; she has not spoken since, and the medical gentlemen think there is but little chance of her recovery. The three were all burnt on the face, neck, and breast, their hair burnt off on one side of the head, and part of their clothes destroyed. The dead bodies were removed to a house at St. Anne's Well, where a Coroner's Inquest is expected to be held to-morrow—all the other ladies were, in a slight degree, injured by the electric fluid, and are much distressed in mind, and keep their beds.

There was a labouring man at work a short distance from the place, who was attracted to the spot by the screams proceeding from the man servant. He rendered what aid he could, till other assistance arrived—the two men are both very unwell, from the agitation of witnessing so awful and distressing a scene.

A messenger was dispatched to Mr. Hill, who, with his wife, went to Malvern immediately, in a state of mind not to be described, to witness the appalling scene of destruction with which it had pleased God to visit their heretofore united and happy family.

PORTSMOUTH, JULY 5.—Last evening, about eight o'clock, as Sir Godfrey Webster, Bart. and Mr. Cuffe, were sailing, in a small hired yacht, off the Royal Clarence-rooms, Southsea, a very sudden squall of wind came on, when, from the unskilfulness of the two seamen on board, the vessel was thrown on her beam-ends, and sunk in sight of many hundred persons, who watched with intense anxiety the exertions made from different vessels and boats to reach the spot. We are happy to say, Sir Godfrey was safely taken from the shrouds, with the loss of his hat only. His friend, Mr. Cuffe, after sinking, caught hold of the boat, which luckily did not go down. The men were also picked up by some of the officers of the 53d Regiment, who were near the spot in their yacht. It was very fortunate that the accident happened where so many parties are constantly pleasuring. Had it not been for the very prompt and praiseworthy exertions of those who witnessed the accident from other yachts, Sir Godfrey must have shared the fate of Mr. Baring, two or three years since, at Lulworth, where no assistance was at hand. Sir Godfrey and his friend joined at the Royal Clarence-rooms within an hour after the accident, and were congratulated by all present on their escape from danger.

THE LATE MURDER NEAR MANCHESTER.—Our readers will recollect that about six weeks ago, an atrocious murder was committed on the person of a young woman, a servant to Mr. Blears, at a place called Winton, by two men of the name of M'Keand, and that a letter was sent by them to a person in Smithy-door, whom Mr. Lavender traced to be Mrs. Sarah Stuart, a dealer in cutlery, and from whom the knife was purchased that was stabbed in Mrs. Blear's cheek bone, requesting her to perform some little offices for them. This Mrs. Stuart is now under recognizances to appear on their trial at the ensuing Assizes; but it appears she is endeavouring to evade the ends of justice, as far as her evidence goes, for she was seen by a person who knows her very well, to arrive by the Telegraph coach, on Monday evening last, in Fetter-lane, and in the course of the next day procured a passport for France, where she stated her husband was working as a machine fitter-up (he goes by the name of Ward, she says). On Wednesday she set off on one of the coaches from the Bell and Crown Inn, Holborn, for Dover. These M'Keands were very intimate with Mrs. Stuart, and one of them used to act as clerk for her sometimes. She took out her passport in the name of Stuart.

THE DROUGHT.

PEMBROKE, JULY 1.—Pembrokeshire and the adjoining counties, have not witnessed such an extent of dry weather during the recollection of the oldest inhabitants now living. Since the 4th March last but two showers of rain have fallen, neither of which have lasted more than three hours. The thermometer, during the last week, has been ranging from 78 to 83 degrees in the shade. The excessive heat and drought has completely suspended vegetation; the grass-lands are burnt brown, the hay, on many farms, will not pay for mowing, and the corn has but a very middling appearance. To-day it lowers, and makes for rain, and, indeed, unless it pleases Providence shortly to favour the land with showers, it is impossible that the cattle can live. Several beasts in the neighbourhood of Milfordhaven have actually died in the fields from the heat, and more must follow if the weather does not alter. Hay has risen 7l. per ton; it will be 10l. before Christmas.

The effects of the long-continued drought are seriously felt in this neighbourhood. We never recollect so light a swarth of grass as this season. The sidelands, with a south aspect, in many places, are quite destitute of vegetation, being entirely burnt up by the scorching rays of the sun. The corn in similar situations is also withering, and the whole face of the country in this neighbourhood presents a very unpromising appearance.—Carmarthen Journal.

The effects of the drought in Cornwall are becoming serious; not only has the hay suffered materially, but the ears of all descriptions of grain are evidently deteriorated from the want of rain. —Dorchester Paper.

The parching drought still continues, and the crops have suffered greatly by it, particularly the hay and pastures. On Wednesday there were several peals of thunder in the neighbourhood, and a considerable quantity of rain fell at the same time. The heat during the last fortnight has been very intense, nay, more so than we ever experienced it for so many days in succession.—Berwick Advertiser.

ABERDEEN, JULY 1.—The weather continues dry and sultry to a degree very unusual in this part of the country, and most unpropitious to the progress of the growing crops. The face of the country is parched; and corns, which till now had preserved a tolerably healthy appearance, are becoming brown, and shooting into the ear, although but a few inches above ground. The heat for the last few days has been most oppressive, the thermometer in the shade ranging from 75 to 82. Many wells, ponds, and some of the smaller streams of water, are entirely dried up; and cattle are suffering no less from the drought than from the scarcity of pasture. In the upper parts of the county, the effects of the heat have been of a most extraordinary and alarming description.—On Saturday, the furze on the Hill of Lochnagar was observed to be on fire: and the most plausible conjecture as to its origin, ascribes it to the influence of the sun acting upon and reflected from some of the cairngorums and other gems which are to be found in that picturesque spot—the thermometer upon the side of the hill having risen to above 90. But the fire, we have since learned, is not confined to Lochnagar. Several other hills in the neighbourhood have also caught fire; among which Benaboard, Benaven, and the Hill of Glenfanner are mentioned, and have been burning for some days.

SINGULAR SUICIDE.—On Wednesday last a poor fellow named William Hyde, of Hasfield, Gloucestershire, who had for some time been subject to fits of insanity, climbed up into a pear tree, and making his way along the limb, extending in a lateral direction, fixed his neck firmly in a forked branch, and then threw his body over, in which position he was found quite dead. An inquest was held upon the body on Thursday, before John Cooke, Esq. Coroner when a verdict of insanity was returned.

A wood between Heckfield and Basingstoke, belonging to W. R. Mellish, Esq. was last week set on fire by some incendiaries, and was not got under till a number of workmen had cut down a sufficient part to check further communication. It was discovered by one of the western stage coachmen.

In Waterford some Attorneys of the contending Candidates have been fighting. This is a part of their business which even Lord Ronsdale could not object to their transacting by delegation—it must form curious items in a bill of costs; but even in Ireland there has been less than usual of these excesses.

WESTMORELAND.

SATURDAY, JULY 1.—NINTH AND LAST DAY.

The polling re-commenced this morning, and went on very languidly on the part of Mr. Brougham, until 12 o'clock, when, by agreement, it was put a stop to, and, at one o'clock, the under-sheriff announced, that if no freeholder appeared to tender his vote within one half hour, he would close the poll.

At half-past one o'clock, accordingly, he again appeared on the hustings, and declared the state of the poll to be, for

	Ninth day's poll.	Final close.
Lord Lowther	172	2,097
Colonel Lowther	173	2,024
Mr. Brougham	25	1,367
Majority for Colonel Lowther over Mr. Brougham on the day's poll		148
On the gross poll		657

The Under-Sheriff then declared the election to have fallen on Lord Viscount Lowther and the Hon. Henry Cecil Lowther, amidst loud cheering.

Lord Lowther thanked his friends for the cordial support which he had received at their hands—a support which he did not attribute so much to their personal regard for him, although, of that, they had given too many proofs for him to doubt it, as to their approval of the principles upon which he grounded his claim to their favour. He had now been returned a fourth time to parliament as their representative. It was an honour of which he was justly proud, and he could only say, that when he next presented himself to their notice, he hoped that his conduct would entitle him to a renewal of their approbation. The Noble Lord was loudly cheered as he concluded.

Colonel Lowther returned his cordial thanks to those who had, by such a glorious majority over the third candidate, placed him second on the poll. While he received such marks of their kindness he should not hesitate to present himself again and again to their notice.

Mr. Brougham addressed the electors at great length. He commenced by saying that he had never sought to represent the county of Westmoreland; he had, on the contrary, been dragged into the contest. He declared, that in consenting to be put in nomination, he had no object of interest or ambition to gratify, and should have, if he consulted his own feelings, rested equally well satisfied with sitting in parliament for his former seat. He then entered into a long explanation of the manner in which the declaration of those who opposed him on account of the Catholic question had been got up; and concluded by expressing his determination not to forsake the contest while he obtained the support of the independent freeholders of Westmoreland.

Dr. Adamthwaite, one of the seceders, who signed the declaration alluded to by Mr. Brougham, then attempted to address the people, who appeared, however, very unwilling to hear him.

About five o'clock, two handsome chairs, covered with yellow silk and adorned with sprigs of laurel, were brought out, and Lord Lowther and the Colonel were chaired through the town. All the flags which had been paraded during the contest, were now borne in triumph before the successful candidates, while their respective bands played "Hearts of Oak," "See the Conquering Hero comes," and other appropriate tunes. After having passed in procession round the crosses at the top and bottom of the main street, they were chaired over the bridge as far as the county gaol, and from thence back again to the King's Head; nothing was to be seen but yellow; the blues seemed to have vanished to a man. It was extremely gratifying to perceive that, after so severe a contest, the chairing was suffered to proceed without the slightest molestation; and during the evening, though all was joy and exhilaration, not the slightest symptom of disturbance presented itself.

Thus has terminated this the third contest for the county of Westmoreland, and it is now tolerably apparent, although Mr. Brougham did not near exhaust his strength, he has little chance against the wealth and extensive influence of his opponents. Of this, we rather imagine, he is himself convinced, but he and his supporters seem resolved, if possible, to wear them out by the enormous expenses of each contest, vowing their determination to persevere, until Lord Lonsdale gives way as regards the return of one of the representatives of the county.

NORTHUMBERLAND.

ALNWICK, Wednesday Night, July 5.

Liddell.....1537
Bell.....1,367
Beaumont.....1,306

Mr. Liddell, in returning thanks, repeated that he would, when honoured with the trust of being their representative, discharge his duty towards them with diligence and fidelity.

Mr. Bell returned thanks in nearly the same words.

Mr. Beaumont said, that a bad beginning sometimes made a good ending; however, he hardly thought they could reckon upon a good ending in the present stage of the contest. He was satisfied, however, that he had gained a victory over an insolent and overbearing party which could never more rear its head in that county. Never had such arts been used to crush any individual as the Whig faction had used against him. Such scenes might pass in a despotic country, but in a land of freedom, governed by equal laws, they had never before been committed. A corrupt and venal press had been marshalled against him. He did not allude to the local press alone, where the state of parties might be supposed to warp it with particular prejudices; but he meant the London press, than which there was none more venal than that part of it which called itself the leading journal of Europe,—The Times,—but which was its disgrace. The baseness and venality of the London press had been directed against him, and he regretted that in a free country the press could have been so degraded. Every body who had seen the malicious and perverted statements which it had sent forth, knew that instead of representing the good sense and feelings of the country, it had lent itself to corrupt and detestable purposes. He cared not whether he roused its indignation, for to be held up to its reprobation for any conduct of his, he deemed an honour; and he cared not for its abuse, even with its utmost malignity. Against an honest man its shafts would lose their points, and its venom its sting. The weapons which it used would be turned against itself; but he had already done it too much honour. In conclusion, he said that he expected more votes up to-morrow, and though not so confident as before, he was still not without hopes. (Applause.)

The High Sheriff then dissolved the hustings.

LAST DAY.

Mr. Liddell.....1,562
Mr. Bell.....1,380
Mr. Beaumont.....1,335

The two former elected.

DUEL BETWEEN MR. LAMBTON AND MR. BEAUMONT.

This town was thrown into the utmost anxiety and alarm, in consequence of what transpired on the hustings. Mr. Beaumont accused Mr. Lambton of prompting Lord Howick in his address to the freeholders on the subject of Catholic Emancipation. Mr. Lambton denied the accusation. On which Mr. Beaumont came forward and said, "Mr. Lambton says it is not the fact—I say it is false." Mr. Lambton then presented himself, amidst the cheers of one party and the clamours of another. After some time spent in procuring silence, Mr. Lambton addressed the Meeting. He stated that they had all witnessed the violent and intentional attack made upon one who was well content to be a silent spectator of what was passing. The noise continuing, Mr. Lambton asked if it was their intention that he should be heard or not, because he was perfectly ready to give Mr. Beaumont a very different answer, an answer which he most assuredly should have. He hoped that the freeholders of Northumberland were not to be assured at this day, that his Noble Relative (Lord Howick) had talents which did not require prompting from any man. It was true, he (Mr. L.) had made some observations on what was passing to his friends, and he had yet to learn that it was not an Englishman's perogative to do so. If it was Mr. Beaumont's intention to resolve this into a private quarrel, he should not, as far as he (Mr. L.) was concerned, be baulked in his inclination. Lord Howick had been sacrificed to a base and odious coalition; but he would retire from the contest with an honour which would always belong to the name of Grey in its native county. Mr. L. then assured the freeholders, in the name of Lord Howick and in his own, that he (Lord H.) would stand whilst one man remained to vote for him, and alluded to the means taken to induce the county to believe that his Lordship would not stand. Even letters had been daily sent off, stating that he had actually resigned. How could he (Lord H.) ensure his success in a future election better than by giving every freeholder an opportunity of voting in this? He (Mr. L.) had always considered his Noble Relative fully equal to answer any attacks that might be made upon him—a consideration which had hitherto withheld him (Mr. L.) from indulging in the nearest and dearest feelings of his heart—those of addressing his fellow-countrymen on the question of great public interest. (Great applause.)

The candidates then left the hustings, and a meeting was appointed to take place on Saturday between Mr. Beaumont and Mr. Lambton. Intimation, however, having been given to Sir D. Smith, a Magistrate, he assembled a number of police, and dispersed them in different directions to prevent the duel; and on Saturday at five o'clock, both Gentlemen were arrested on the ground, and bound over to keep the peace.

Alnwick, throughout the following day, although visited by a very severe thunder-storm, which deluged the streets with rain, was the scene of considerable excitement. Crowds were collected in the different avenues, and the most anxious enquiries were made among the electioneering committees for any intelligence respecting Mr. Lambton or Mr. Beaumont. As we mentioned above, the principals were followed on the moor, a short distance from this town, in their carriages, as they were going to the four mile stone, the place of meeting, by Sir David Smith, a magistrate. Sir David had failed in tracing any of the principals, who had succeeded in effectually concealing themselves in this town and its vicinity, and the arrangement was, that they should meet on the moor at four o'clock in the morning; but the magistrate had placed the police at all the different turnpikes, and scouts were thrown out a short distance upon all the roads, to intercept passengers, Sir David Smith being ready in a chaise and four, so as to act at the instant upon whatever intelligence he received from his agents. Mr. Lambton, accompanied by General Grey and the Hon. Capt. Charles Grey, with Colonel Grey, proceeded in their carriage, and succeeded in passing unnoticed some way upon the moor road. Mr. Beaumont was equally successful with his friend, Captain Plunkett, and another friend, Captain or Mr. Somers. The carriages were, however, followed by Sir David Smith, who stopped Mr. Beaumont's, from which Mr. Somers alighted, and a communication took place with Mr. Lambton's friend, and also with the magistrate, to whom he declared that the matter was settled, but declined to give any specific pledge. The carriages, at a rapid pace, then took different directions immediately, General Grey returning with Captain Bacon Grey, in a barouche or landau, and four, in which Lord Howick followed the parties to the moor, to the Swan-inn, at Alnwick, at five o'clock in the morning, the surgeons also returning in a post-chaise; but Mr. Beaumont's and Mr. Lambton's carriages took different directions across the moor, and the former was seen at an early hour, near Belfort, North Durham, (the nearest county out of Northumberland) travelling at a rapid rate in that direction. There is every reason to believe that this route was, on the emergency of the interruption, fixed upon by the parties, as affording the most convenient chance of getting soon out of the local jurisdiction of the magistracy, who were now alive to the pursuit. Earl Grey, who had rode on horseback at three o'clock in the morning into Alnwick from his seat, and taken, in company with his son-in-law, Captain Bulteel, the road to the moor, unattended by a single groom, was soon informed of the interruption. The Earl instantly repaired to his daughter, who had spent the night alone at Cattenach's lodgings, in that distress of mind which was natural to a lady in her situation. His lordship's presence composed and comforted her, and he immediately took her home to Howick, leaving in Alnwick Lord Howick, General Grey, Captain Bacon Grey, Captain Charles Grey, and the Colonel, having continued with Mr. Lambton on his route; the other personages above-named, in the early part of the morning, leaving town also, separately, and in the manner least likely to attract attention.

Every report was in circulation throughout the day which the ingenuity or apprehensions of individuals were calculated to furnish. The streets were thronged throughout the night, and the torrents of rain hardly cleared them during the day; every horse or chaise which passed was stopped, and the enquiry was—"Did you meet Mr. Lambton?" The fears of the timid, and of the ignorant, were aroused by vague and vulgar tales of Mr. Beaumont's skill in the use of fire arms, and of the apprehended effect upon Mr. Lambton's debilitated health, which has for some time been a source of serious disquietude to his family and friends, by the excitement of this affair, the travelling, and stopping, and total want of rest, Mr. Lambton having sat up the whole of the previous night.

As evening advanced, the Edinburgh mail, and a few other travelling vehicles, were eagerly watched, in the hope of ascertaining whether the passengers had heard any thing of Mr. Lambton or Mr. Beaumont. The guard said, that he had heard at Belford, on the Berwick-road, that Mr. Lambton's friends had been stopped and very ill-treated by the populace, who were all in Mr. Beaumont's interest. A few moments after the arrival of the mail some of Mr. Lambton's friends arrived express at the Swan Inn, Alnwick, and it was then communicated that the crowd had detained them three hours at Belford, and they were only enabled to pursue their route by the interference of Mr. Alder, a neighbouring magistrate. They passed from Belford to a field adjoining the strand at Bamborough: where, about three o'clock, and during heavy rain, Mr. Lambton and Mr. Beaumont were placed on the ground, at a distance of twelve paces, and immediately exchanged shots, without effect. It was then considered that enough had been done for the use of a hasty expression upon the hustings, and the principals were taken from the ground by their seconds. They behaved with great composure.

Mr. Lambton proceeded to Howick, and Mr. Beaumont shortly after returned to Alnwick. Captain Kerr informed the crowd in front of the Swan-inn, from the window of Lord Howick's committee-room, that the affair had terminated without bloodshed. This intimation was received with great enthusiasm.

Mr. Beaumont, in person, from the residence of his solicitor, thanked the people who had assembled in front, for their kindness towards him, and merely remarked, that in such an unfortunate affair as that in which he had been just engaged, the less which was said the better.

IRELAND.

DUBLIN, TUESDAY NIGHT.—The election has at last terminated. Although Mr. Hamilton has not actually, yet he has virtually resigned. He polled but four this day; and, in obedience to the statute, the book is closed. As Mr. Hamilton did not give in his resignation, the Sheriff declined proclaiming the members until to-morrow morning, when Mr. White and Mr. Talbot will be announced as duly elected. The only novelty that occurred to day was a speech from Mr. O'Connell, of no political consequence. I am unable to furnish you with a correct account of the gross poll, as the Sheriff's books are not made up.

[From the Dublin Morning Post.]

This long-protracted contest has been at length decided; and the return of Messrs. Talbot and White will be announced by the usual proclamation this day. Mr. Hamilton was able only to poll ten votes yesterday, two of which were objected to, and a third, a 50l. vote, rejected. The voter, a respectable-looking man, apprehensive of consequences, made his exit through a window.

Messrs. Talbot and White tendered no votes, in the anticipation of their opponent being unable to keep the poll open.

The state of the poll, on its termination at six o'clock, was

White.....1,295
Talbot.....1,270
Hamilton.....1,235

(From the Freeman's Journal.)

TUESDAY, July 4.—The struggle is over. Colonel Talbot and White will be formally declared the representatives for the county of Dublin, this day.

During the day many false alarms were given of the approach of reinforcements, and many an anxious eye was directed towards the several approaches leading to the scene of contest; clouds of dust occasionally rose on the different roads, when the whisper would run through the gazing throng, "They are coming, they are coming!" But it was the western breeze acting upon the parched soil, that gave rise to these false alarms. Hour after hour passed away, and still no voters made their appearance; at four o'clock only four voters had polled; two or three more had been offered on the part of Mr. Hamilton, but they were rejected, and one of them, a Mr. Rogers, was committed for perjury. He managed, however, to make his escape, and warrants were issued for his apprehension.

By five o'clock it was generally known that Mr. Hamilton could no longer maintain his ground. A steam-vessel which had been despatched to the north-east fisheries was hourly expected, but she had not arrived, she was not even in sight; it was understood by all that the contest was over. The court-keeper, concluding that it was unnecessary to keep the Court-house open when they were no longer voters to occupy it, began to close all the doors, when he was observed, and stopped by one of the agents. Had he done this, the entire proceedings of the last ten years would have been invalid, and the election must have commenced de novo. At six o'clock only six votes had been polled, which of course clothed all the booths. The Sheriff then adjourned the court to eight o'clock this morning, when the successful candidates, Colonels White and Talbot, will be formally announced as the representatives elected for this county. There remain over, as we understand about eighty disputed votes, which the assessor will come to a decision on to-morrow morning. Mr. Luke Plunkett was, as usual, on the alert through the day, and addressed the people for some time in favour of the popular candidates. Mr. Lawless likewise spoke at some length in the Court-house after the proceedings had terminated.

Dame-street was comparatively tranquil last night, to what it has been for some nights previously; a few stones were thrown, and some panes of glass broken, but no material injury done. At eleven o'clock the greater part of the crowd dispersed, giving three cheers for the police; and by midnight, Mr. Goodison, who was in charge of the police, had succeeded in clearing the street, and restoring tranquillity. In Pill-lane a bonfire was lighted to celebrate the triumph of liberality.

GALWAY.

HORRIBLE OCCURRENCE.

About eight o'clock on the evening of Wednesday, the Hon. Denis A. Bingham, Mr. Thomas D. Lambert (Cregclare,) the Messrs. O'Connor (Conlu,) Mr. D. Wilson (of Clare,) Mr. J. W. Browne (of Dublin,) and Mr. William Persse (of Galway,) J.P. in coming down the street, fell in contact with some of the populace; and being armed with pistols, bayonets, &c. fired amongst the crowd—when, melancholy to relate, an unfortunate man, named Jeremiah Sullivan, received a ball, which in a few minutes terminated his existence. He had not, since the commencement of our riotous election, taken any part in the proceedings: was extremely well conducted, an excellent father and husband, and was endeavouring to go home peaceably when he was sent to his account. His must, indeed, be a bad heart, who could without grief this day behold the murdered corpse of poor Sullivan stretched upon his cheerless hearth, and his afflicted wife and three innocent little children looking anxiously over the body of their only friend under heaven. The youngest of his poor children is but five days old, and the eldest no more than four years; and the poor orphans have to sojourn through this world, for the rest of their lives, without any visible means of support. We trust, therefore, that the public will take up the case of these poor children—and that they will not be suffered to wear out a miserable existence in ignorance, vice, and starvation.

Eight o'clock, p.m.—The coroner's jury have adjourned to-morrow. The town is in the utmost confusion; and we have just learned that in the sortie made by the seven gentlemen last evening, two or three have been severely wounded. How long is this state of things to continue?

At the close of the poll for the day the numbers stood thus:—

Daly.....5613 | Martin.....3010
Lambert.....3633 |

Friday.—This morning the town was alarmed by a report that a large army of Martinites were coming in to carry every thing before them, and the inhabitants immediately shut up their shops, in expectation of the fine event; but, luckily for the craniums of some part of the celebrated "six millions," that fine display of patriotism did not take place. The fact is, the hot-ism of Mr. Lambert's kommyttee men, in pistolling poor Jerry Sullivan, has quite entirely spoiled his election; for so fearful were his would-be voters of the consequences probably consequent thereon, that not one of them dared to come forward, and he did not poll a single vote this day. Consequently "Squar Martin," by dint of great exertion and much muddy three-days'-old-beer, with a little excise whiskey, was enabled to reduce his minority from six hundred and twenty-three to four hundred and eighty-two.

[From the Dublin Freeman's Journal of Thursday.]

The following is an extract of a private letter:—

State of the poll at Galway on the evening of Monday the 3d of July:—

Mr. Daly - - - 6023
Mr. Lambert - - - 3645
Mr. Martin - - - 3459

Leaving Mr. Lambert then a majority of 195

In the course of that day (Monday) 280 freeholders qualified in order to vote for Mr. Martin, which must have placed him a head of Mr. Lambert on Tuesday evening; and there does not now remain a doubt but Colonel Martin will have a large majority at the final close of the poll.

Mr. Michael Bellew, of Mount Bellew, has greatly distinguished himself by his support of Mr. Martin.

KERRY COUNTY ELECTION—FIRST DAY.

TRALEE, MONDAY NIGHT, JULY 3.—In consequence of the disastrous events which occurred here last Sunday week—the details of which you are already acquainted with—the election was postponed to this day. In the mean time there was no further breach of the peace, or slaughter of the people. The minds of the people seem reconciled to the alleged outrage against them by the terms of the coroner's verdict, which has thrown so awful a responsibility on the High Sheriff and Mr. Rowan. Government are informed that the Jury have declared that lives of innocent men have been lost by the unjustifiable and unnecessary orders given to the military to fire; and their instructions are hourly expected as to the nature of the proceedings against the persons towards whom that verdict is directed. It was hoped that some officer would have been sent down from the Castle to superintend the election, as the High Sheriff was so immediately connected with the late proceedings; and as that gentleman left this town under an escort of police, immediately after the fatal events, it was supposed that he had gone to Dublin for the purpose of surrendering his powers; but, on the opening of the poll this morning, he presided in his place, and asserted the usual degree of authority.

You are aware that the two former members, the Knight of Kerry and Col. Crosbie, are sincere advocates of Catholic emancipation. They have been for a long time associated with the county, and have the most intimate friendly relations with it. The Hon. Mr. Hare, the new candidate, is a son of Lord Ennismore, and though his father is an avowed enemy to emancipation, the son, seeing no other chance of gaining this contest, has declared himself, in the most unqualified manner, in favour of it, and by that means neutralized the great interests of the priests and the O'Connellites, before whom late events in this country have shown no hostile candidate can stand. Therefore, there is no political principle of which either party can take advantage, and the election was intended to proceed on the old Irish system, of the strongest heads and the warmest hearts. The Knight of Kerry walks over the course, and the battle is to be between Col. Crosbie and Mr. Hare. Now, Mr. Hare is youdg, not more than two-and-twenty, and is scarcely known in the county—he has no claims upon it, but his father's interest is so strong that there is little doubt of success, unless Colonel Crosbie, who appears to possess the love and attachment of the people, is able, or rather his friends for him, are able to strike a dread in the enemy's ranks, and prevent them coming to the poll. From some attempt of that kind the dreadful business of Sunday week originated.

The poll was opened this morning with perfect tranquillity, and the business proceeded with a reasonable share of good temper on all sides, until the numbers were announced as follows:—

For the Knight of Kerry....242 | Colonel Crosbie....137
The Hon. Mr. Hare.....189 |

The Knight of Kerry, who has it is said coalesced with Mr. Hare, then returned thanks in a few words, and said, as a proof of the voluntary support which he expected from the county, he would neither employ Counsel nor Agent.

Colonel Crosbie ascribed his inferiority on this day's poll to other circumstances, than any weakness of his absolute force. He complained of the coalition which had been formed against him by the Knight of Kerry and Mr. Hare, and concluded by assuring his friends, that he would still be at the top of the poll, notwithstanding all their unhandsome efforts to supplant him.

The Hon. Mr. Hare merely said a few words of acknowledgment to the freeholders.

All the candidates abstained from any allusion to the riots on Sunday week, or the Coroner's verdict.

At ten o'clock to-night, 500 of Mr. Hare's freeholders were paraded in here in jaunting cars and on horseback. The people are groaning and hissing, and one man is beaten by the mob. The police are out, horse and foot, repressing the people, and two or three dirty-looking men, with greasy fur caps on their heads, who seemed to command the troops, are bawling the exordium of the Riot Act, and trying to disperse them. The quiet inhabitants of the town are thrown into a state of alarm, they are shutting up their shops, and expecting another slaughter scene. It appears to me that the vulgar arrogance of these peace-officers irritates the people much more than their entreaties induce them to keep the peace. I am sure Englishmen would not bear their insolence. From my window I heard a fellow of that class ordering a gentlemanly-looking man to leave the streets and go home—another is showing his authority to a parcel of ragged boys, and a third is putting his raw levies through some ridiculous manœuvres, by way of impressing the people with an idea of his consequence. Fortunately, the people have more sense than the peace-keepers, and they are retiring quietly. The 500 freeholders are stowed away in a large inclosed yard, there to spend the night on the cold ground, as they are afraid to appear in the town.

NOTICES TO CORRESPONDENTS.

We have to acknowledge the receipts of "Particulars of the Life of Mrs. JEFFEREYS," and are highly obliged by it—the murder of one man, with poison in a saffron cake, and the smothering of another in the Asylum near Dublin, will be fully commented upon hereafter. We remember the circumstance of "Young Jefferys" bringing an action against his own mother on these charges, and the issue thereof—but as we are a little concerned in an action ourselves at this present moment, we shall reserve the disclosure of all these circumstances till that moment arrives. We well know that nothing but the interest of the late Lord CLARE could ever have hushed up the indictment—but nothing, this side of the grave, can ever hush up the horrible disgrace.

HOMO has come to hand, and for the contents of his epistle we have to express many obligations.

THE HOAX shall have a corner in our next publication.

A MEMBER OF WHITE'S will find himself, and as often as he sends such agreeable matter, he will find that distinction repeated—"better late than never," is a proverb he will understand now, if he never experienced its applicability before.

CALIBAN has arrived, and he shall hear from us privately forthwith.

THE CONFIDENT STATEMENT that "—— G——, Esq. will in a few weeks lead to the Hymeneal Altar Miss M. L., youngest sister of the celebrated Irish beauty" may be very edifying to the hopeful lovers, but is a thing about which any other person in Christendom, we should imagine, does not care one farthing.

A CONSTANT READER has a very proper right to complain of the paucity of "General Post Receiving Houses" in his immediate neighbourhood—and his remedy will be found in Mr. FREELING, (one of the best and most obliging Officers under the Crown,) a line to whom will produce the desired effect.

The incubrations of SHAKSPEARE TOMKINS are not quite pithy enough, but the idea on which he founds them is really very good.

We have been expecting to hear from CHARLES, in reply to our two last letters, and again press on his attention the necessity of an answer—he must know that we will stick by him as long as he will return the compliment.

SLY is a forgery. We should not be fit for our station if our correspondents could deceive us.

THE AGE.

LONDON, JULY 9.

The termination of the Northumberland election, in favour of Messrs. LIDDELL and BELL, has concluded the General Election in England and Wales—the Irish and Scotch returns will be complete in the course of the ensuing week, and we shall then be enabled to form a general view of the pretensions, talent, and principles of the NEW PARLIAMENT.

We cannot, however, at the present writing, withold a smile at the ridiculous figure which my Lord HOWICK and Mr. BROUGHAM cut, when we suddenly see their names withdrawn from the pompous contest of two such counties as Westmoreland and Northumberland, and both sneakingly returned to represent the independent inhabitants of the borough of Winchelsea. These GREYS are a nice set altogether!

The official returns of the Quarter's Revenue will be found, in a complete shape, in another part of our paper, from an examination of which, our Readers will perceive, there is deficiency on the present, over the preceding quarter, of 493,295*l*. It is unnecessary to stop here for the purpose of laying down the reasons which are to be assigned for this defalcation in our national resources—it requires very little financial skill to ascertain them—and the only wonder among men, who seriously think, and are no bigots, is, that the deficiency is not greater, when the income of the Country, during that period, has had to struggle with the difficulties of its people in recovering from the most disastrous mercantile shock that ever visited any empire, and which would have prostrated in the dust any empire but GREAT BRITAIN. There may be other causes very justly cited for this deficiency, as also for the whole deficiency on the year, among which, and perhaps the most proper ones of all, may be mentioned the reduction of several duties during the year, and the absence from the quarter's returns of several others, which the forbearance of Government in collecting, under present circumstances, has deprived them of the power of inserting therein.

The foregoing abstract will enable the reader to take a general view of the REVENUE, both on the year and the quarter just terminated.

It was natural enough to suppose that the said deficiency would call forth the howlings of that portion of the community, the pleasure of whose existence would cease with the power they at present enjoy, of censuring every action of Government—but it never could have been supposed by the most capacious blockhead that ever started as an imitator of JOSEPH HUME, that such a glorious financial display should have been submitted to the world as the Times of Friday exhibited in its comments on the Treasury return. With the idea and expectation of convincing its partizans that the predictions it had issued of the alarming deficiency on the quarter return were true, it starts off (after inspecting official documents) by saying that 700,000l. had been paid by the East India Company, IN ADVANCE, in order to blind the public as to the actual deficiency, not a word of which is correct, it having been stated BY AUTHORITY that the COMPANY had made no payment to GOVERNMENT, but what was strictly due. However, the Times, no doubt, considers its own opinion in these matters infinitely of more weight than either that of GOVERNMENT or the EAST INDIA COMPANY, for on the strength of its statement relative to the 700,000l. we find the following summary, in which are included other calculations equally brilliant, with a view to set the question as to its financial infallibility quite at rest for ever:—

"Taking a review, then, of the whole document of the quarter's return, so as to distinguish fairly that which is permanent from what may be termed accidental or temporary revenue, the account would stand thus:—

Allowed decrease on the Quarter by the Treasury return	£493,295
Paid in advance by the East India Company	700,000
Irish silver	130,000
Surplus in Excise, Post-horse duty, and Post-office, caused by the election	200,000
Bonded corn duty	100,000
The real deficiency in the quarter's account would then appear to be	1,623,295

The first assumption, viz., the advance by the EAST INDIA COMPANY is, we before observed, fudge—and relative to the next most important sum, viz., 200,000l. as the stipulated "surplus in Excise, Post-horse duty, and Post Office, caused by the election," it is only necessary to observe, that there is a decrease in the Excise of 50,930l. on the quarter now ended compared with the quarter of July 1825, and a still greater decrease when compared with the two subsequent quarters; and that though the Post-office, in the year, shews an increase of 21,000l. yet on the quarter now passed, between the 5th April and the 5th July 1826, there is an ACTUAL DECREASE in this branch of Revenue to the amount of 9,000l.! It really is melancholy to see any man taking such extraordinary pains to publish his own stupidity; but it is worse, when every one must know that the circulation of that paper draws into the vortex of its folly, the folly of so many of its adherents. The duty of a journal possessing the influence which it is as impossible as ridiculous to deny that this journal possesses, should be to undeceive the opinions of those childish blockheads, who are too often influenced by any thing that is told them—if it will not do this, it should preserve the truth in whatever promulgation it may, in the plenitude of its wisdom, submit to the world—but it is neither a splenetic nor personal feeling, which makes us fearlessly pronounce, that there is seldom a word in all its assertions respecting the movements or conduct of government, on which the slightest reliance can be placed—and what then becomes of the respectability it vaunted so much of in its columns of Friday, we must leave to its own vain boaster to determine.

We can entertain no difficulty in placing these accounts before the country, whose good sense is never apt to suffer the misrepresentations of party, or even the fears of its own understanding, to produce any false operation. To those who carefully and calmly examine the returns now under consideration, there will be presented a sufficient reason rather for rejoicing than otherwise—not, of course, because there is a deficiency, but very proudly and justly, considering the circumstances which have lately passed, that the deficiency is not at least double what it is shown to be.

A MODERN MUNCHAUSEN.

We subjoin a curious account from a Paris Paper, which at this particular time of the year, and during the present state of the atmosphere, is sure to be most acceptable to our readers:—

"Dr. Jas. Hotham, of Morpeth, in Northumberland, returning from Switzerland, is stated to have reported that a most extraordinary event had lately passed at the foot of Mount St. Gothard, a league from Aizoli, in the valley of Levantina. At the bottom of a kind of cavern, the body of a man, about 30 years of age, was perceived under a heap of ice, proceeding from an avalanche. As the body seemed to be fresh as if it had been stifled only half an hour before, Dr. Hotham caused it to be taken out, and having had the clothes pulled off, ordered it to be plunged into cold water. It was then so frozen that it was covered with a crust of ice. It was then placed in lukewarm water. Afterwards it was put in a warm bed, and treated as usual in cases of suffocation, by which means animation was restored. What was the astonishment of every body, when the individual, having recovered the use of his faculties, declared that he was Roger Dodsworth, son of the Antiquary of the same name, born in 1629, who, returning from Italy in 1660, a year after the death of his father, was buried under an avalanche.

"Dr. Hotham, according to the same account, is stated to have added that Mr. Dodsworth feels a great stiffness in all his joints, but that by degrees they will become as flexible as before the accident. If Mr. Dodsworth fully recovers, and should pass through Lyons to return to his country after 166 years absence, it may be predicted that he will attract in the highest degree the public curiosity."

We should imagine that public opinion will not be much divided upon the point, for if Mr. DODSWORTH has been 166 years iced, it is not at all improbable that his joints may by this time be rather stiff, and it is not the more improbable that on his return to his country, after such an absence, and at the advanced age of 197 years, "he will attract in the highest degree public curiosity." It is not for us to determine what effect an icing of 166 years may have on the human frame; but if we could only undergo the operation just now for as many minutes, we should hardly object, even if it were to be buried for the time under a Switzerland avalanche.

We are no strangers to the outcry raised by certain parties against THE AGE—on the contrary, we know the interest made in so many quarters to quash its circulation, the paltry means and bribery resorted to, for the sole purpose of depriving it of that support and appreciation it meets with in the first circles of the country, and that general system of espionage which has been adopted towards the movements of any parties in the most remote manner suspected of extending to it more than ordinary countenance. We know all this, and should be surprised if the case were otherwise, for the enormities that are now committed in society could only be proceeded in, under the hope of concealment; and the alarm consequent on exposure must ever be proportionate to the extent of the circumstance exposed. To persons acting as those parties do, on whom it has been our duty to comment throughout the progress of this undertaking, we can very readily believe that the fearless and open manner in which our opinions have always been expressed must be particularly disagreeable—and, indeed, we have no wish that it should be otherwise—and otherwise it cannot well be—until a man respects himself and his character, it is quite hopeless to think any one else will do it for him. We do believe this to be the most immoral æra in English history, and certainly so, if its advanced state of civilization and refinement be contrasted with that of other periods to the excesses of which its own may be compared—at what other epoch were the secret "liaisons" of unhallowed love triumphantly bandied about as they now are by the parties concerned in them?—When before, did people in society (as they are called) in arranging their dinner, supper, or ball lists, as naturally exclaim as they now do, "Oh, you must not ask Lady SO-AND-SO, without Mr. SO-AND-SO,—or the Honourable Mrs. THINGOMEE without Colonel THINGUMBOB, you know—that's "a regular case"?—NEVER!

We are inclined to join issue with all parties, and inveigh against every inroad of morality, wherever it may be found, with a view to the purification of the days we live in—and, mark ye now! If any of that unfortunate class of beings (whose existence is a blot upon the very ground they walk to support that existence) become the subject of converse in any society, and more especially in that of a higher order, not a soul of these fine persons, who constitute it, but is prepared to heap every human calumny on their ill-fated life—any course would be adopted by them for the expulsion of such personages from the streets these censors live in, and any means resorted to, to immerse them in a common jail, or dislocate them on the tread-mill. Perhaps it should be so—but to our simple faculties, the pampered adultress, who sins for the sole gratifications of abandoned appetite, and who for such gratification consents to sacrifice her rank, her fame, her husband, name, and, dearer even than all these, her children, is as much beneath the fallen wanton her power or affected prudery would crush, as crime is beneath misfortune. The one is the victim of treachery, most probably, against which the deficiencies of education have not been able to stand up—as our great Poet expresses it—

"Betrayed too early, and beguiled too long—"

she is hurried, by designing seduction, into error, and beguiled in it by the gaunt claims of that absolute poverty in which she is, nineteen cases out of twenty, abandoned. The other has no such palliation to plead for her misdoings—she is, in most instances, the betrayer of her own bad heart, or a yielder to the influence of that of other people—she is under the dictates of the best education, and above the necessities which fate imposes upon her inferiors: and therefore cannot produce, in extenuation of guilt, any predominance to which an opposite character might lay claim, of the other class—viz. these titled wantons—we could adduce the names of hundreds now basking in the very sunshine of noble and popular association, whose conduct, together with that of their masculine confederates, is a disgrace to the circles which they are called on to adorn.

We have been led into this train of reflection by a consideration of some proceedings in FASHIONABLE LIFE, to which our remarks have given rise, and are induced on this account to give them publicity: we are further led to a present examination of the subject by an account which came under our eye of the examination of several noblemen and gentlemen at Marlborough-street, for an affray with some watchmen in St. James's-street, the particulars of which we have heard thus detailed:—My Lord BINGHAM, who has lately become particularly anxious to prove he is fond of fighting (chiefly because, with reference to duelling, THE AGE had ventured to say he WAS NOT, and which, if it is true, does him GREAT CREDIT), having discovered an antiquated watchman, commenced a violent attack upon him—some other "guardians of the midnight watch" came up to his assistance, and the rescue having been cried for by the valiant member for Mayo, the hot-beds of WHITE'S, GUARDS, CROCKFORD'S, BROOKE'S, and BOODLE'S, vomited up their spawn, and a serious affray commenced: when the Noble and Honourable Gentlemen, after an hour's diversion, finding the night-watch collecting in force, being contented with disturbing all the neighbourhood, and having failed in getting some watchmen in and pummelling them in the Clubs, retreated to their dens, and "sported their outern doors." Finding, when their courage was a little cooled and their breath drawn, that some of their numbers were missing, they marched off to the watch-house, and found these legislators in "durance vile." Among the most distinguished and conspicuous in this disgraceful riot we witnessed—

The Marquis of TITCHFIELD,	Capt. TALBOT,
Lord G. BENTINCK,	Capt. SMYTHE,
Lord TULLAMORE,	Capt. BARNARD,
Colonel RUSSELL,	Poodle BYNG,
JOHN LYSTER,	Hon. H. LEESON,

with many others, too numerous to mention. We perceive by the police report, that "fighting Bob" swore the watchman was drunk, and began the affray by beating a woman of the town; and that BOB'S heart being as warm as brave, he could not see the "cretur" ill used. Supposing such to be the case, Lord BINGHAM would better have consulted the dignity of a Peer's son, and an M. P., by lodging a complaint before the proper officers of the law, than by taking the law into his own hands—and when we come to consider that his LORDSHIP has lately been bound in the sum of 10,000l. to keep the peace, we cannot but congratulate him on the truly Hibernian way he has set about it. We think such things ought not to be—they may pass off as very valiant and moral deeds with those classes of life in which these persons are the principal figurants, but in the eye of respectable and noble-minded people, they are only considered as the effect of abandonment and blackguardism. It is a very usual cry in the clubs, when THE AGE has been read, and does not happen to contain any matter of a calumnious, or rather a satirical character, to exclaim, "Oh, THE AGE is dull to-day—it is not abusive!" To this we reply, that we never wish to be so, unnecessarily; and though anxious to adorn our pages with any sally of genuine wit, we always feel a regret when, in such humourous display, we are compelled by a sense of duty to exhibit these exalted offenders in their true lights. Our object in bringing such people before the public, is not with any view of our own exaltation or advancement, but to point out to such parties how much they debase themselves—for when men, who, from their rank and situation in life, ought to set every good example, instead of following every bad one, forget the respect due to themselves, they must never be surprised if the rest of the world remember it no better than they do.

We shall, however, fearlessly continue as we have begun—there is no proceeding, remonstrance, or interference, can check that spirit which is within us, of speaking at all times, and upon all persons and things, precisely as we feel—the remedy to these inflictions on feeling, which we are accused of having caused, lies solely in the power of those offenders whose offences we have registered as "rank to Heaven;" and with their extinction will for ever subside that scourge of severity with which we have been compelled on principle to visit them. With this, and an apology to readers, who take little interest in these matters, for any appearance of egotism, which is always as disagreeable to the parties adopting it, as to the parties perusing, we wind up such argument for the present moment.

So great has been the demand for the "Life and Times of FREDERICK REYNOLDS," that a second edition has been printed, the principal part of which has already passed from the hands of its spirited publisher. We are sorry, by the way, to hear that Lord NUGENT is offended at our directing the attention of Lord ARTHUR HILL, vice himself, to the mention of an anecdote which REYNOLDS tells of a curious mistake that occurred in displaying on a standard the INITIALS of the motto of the HOUSE OF Savoy, "Beneficia Ultra Mortem." If this corporeal jealousy still exist, these stout Lords had much better resort to the vulgar mode of settling disputes, and toss up for it—but even then, IF IT WERE TO COME tails, it would be a nice point for the Judges to decide, which of the parties had won.

[We shall be very glad to hear again from this amusing correspondent.—Edit.]

COBBETT'S Register of yesterday contains, in an Address to the Electors of Preston, the following remarks:—

"The truth is, my friends, I, in November last, could pretty clearly see that the King of Spain would act thus, and that the result would be much about what it has been; and, being able thus to look into the effects of time—being able thus to foresee and foretel that which will happen, and not being able even to guess at it; this, my friends, it is which constitutes one of the striking differences between a man like me and a man like Mr. Wood, who had the justice to tell you, as soon as the Mayor had declared him to be elected, that he did not think that one man could do any great good in Parliament. He, doubtless, meant a man like himself; and then, contrary to his usual practice at Preston, he spoke truly enough; but you will believe, and the country will believe, that the man who could, in November last, foresee so precisely what was about to happen as to this great department of the nation's affairs (South American); you will believe that such a man would have done something in Parliament.

"Aye; and this the Government, the Boroughmongers, the whole body of Tax-eaters know right well. They know that that man would have done something; and they know that that something would have affected them most most deeply. Vain, however, are their efforts to keep me out of Parliament; in that Parliament I must be, OR THERE MUST BE A DREADFUL CONVULSION. Now mark, this I predict with as much confidence as I ever predicted any thing in my life. Every day has added a thickening to the mess from the time that I last embarked for America to the present day. I have proposed the remedy; that is to say, I have proposed the principles of the remedy; and there is no other remedy under heaven, whereby this nation is to be saved from a dreadful convulsion. I have the details of that remedy down to the minutest provisions, drawn up in the shape of an Act of Parliament. That remedy adopted, that Act once passed, all would soon become harmony in the country, safety to the State, competence amongst the now half-bankrupt tradesmen, and plenty of food and raiment amongst the more than half-starved working classes; but this remedy, these details, shall never be seen by any eyes other than those of my own family as long as these abominable conspiracies, these foul and unnatural combinations and coalitions, continue to exclude me from my proper place in the Government. In Parliament I will be, or this remedy shall never be communicated to the public."

It is not for us to say one word respecting either the pretensions of Mr. WOOD, or the expectations entertained of his parliamentary inclination—it is enough for us to know what we have lost by the rejection of Mr. COBBETT at Preston. As far as human conceit and self-sufficiency can go, we imagine this fellow COBBETT to have gone; but where he means to stop does not appear—yet, when a man is so degraded and despised, as to be kicked out of every place he shews his face in, and be laughed at by every one before whom he shows it, we really think it is high time for him to take the circumstances into consideration.

THEATRICALS.

The affairs of Drury Lane having been placed in several positions before the town, during the last week, we shall naturally be looked forward to this day, for an opinion by which to a great measure our reader's opinion will be guided. The meeting of proprietors on Monday, enabled our friend KING ROBERT, the quondam Lessee, to indulge, for the last time we presume, in that delight of his soul, if it is not of his hearers—A SPEECH; and while we perfectly agree with a considerable part of the one he delivered on this momentous occasion, we most essentially differ with him on many other points. There is no doubt about the money which has been expended on Drury Lane Theatre,—the doubt is, as to the mode of expenditure; and now that his struggle is over, and opinion cannot "harm him more," it is but just, to the future interests of this theatre, to say that Mr. ELLISTON was never in any one respect calculated to manage such a concern. He ruined it, previous to the alterations, by meanness—he ruined it, and himself, after they were effected, by prodigality — he has been alone to blame for the outrageous demands now made by performers, to obtain whose talent, he gave, in many instances, even double what they demanded. Though one of the first actors that ever lived, he has so degraded himself by excess as to become one of the worst—and aspiring to be the first manager, he levelled himself to the lowest, by the dictates of a false ambition, by an inattention to the interests of his theatre, and by involving it in the pettiest and most ridiculous squabbles. Yet, under all these disadvantages, it is impossible to say that even ELLISTON has not been able to turn Drury Lane Theatre to account, during his seven years of administration: for we collect from the public papers, that in that time Mr. ELLISTON has expended 50,000l. on the theatre—he has, moreover, in the same period, built a spacious mansion, that must have cost half this sum, at Leamington—he is understood to have built the Coventry and other provincial theatres, and his debts do not exceed 25,000l.—putting down, therefore, this gentleman's fortune, when he became the lessee, at another 25,000l. we should have no hesitation in saying, that in the seven years, Mr. ELLISTON has netted a profit of about 30,000l. even by a bad administration of this said concern. We only mention these things, that the people may not run away with the idea of Drury Lane Theatre being such a very bad concern. We deeply feel for ELLISTON, whose greatest enemy has been himself; but we should not be afraid to pronounce, that if he become "an exile from his native country," about which he was so rhapsodical on this present occasion, that he has this enemy, and this enemy alone, to blame for the event.

The management of this Theatre, for the ensuing season, appears to have devolved on STEPHEN PRICE, as the advertisements apprise us, the Yankee Manager, against whose assumption of the controul of an ENGLISH NATIONAL THEATRE we thought proper to inveigh a week or two back. Our opinions, on a general principle, remain unaltered—but with reference to Mr. PRICE, whose managerial talent we had, in the article alluded to, ventured to question, we find ourselves quite mistaken, and hasten to rectify such mistake—we hear Master STEPHEN has been particularly active, and the very first day he was installed in office, he engaged the principal tragedian, Mr. MACREADY, and the principal comedian Mr. ELLISTON, for—HIS OWN THEATRE IN America, for which place, HE HIMSELF STARTS ON THE 24th OF THIS MONTH!! All this bids well for the ensuing season at Drury Lane!

We cannot devote the space we could wish to the production of the Last Guerilla, at the English Opera House, but we cannot omit bestowing every praise on the manner in which the piece, in itself highly interesting, has been prepared. It is creditable both to author and manager, and next to these, it is particularly creditable to Mr. BENNETT, whose acting throughout was extremely effective.

There has been considerable variation in the performances at the Haymarket, but not much, we fear, in the accounts of the treasury—nor will there be, until the return of Mr. LISTON and Paul Pry. The farce of the Scape Goat, (originally written for this theatre), has been well enacted here—FARREN'S Ignatius being diverting in the extreme, and Mrs. WAYLETT'S dialect in Molly Mags, the best sample of "real Somerset" we ever heard on the stage. We must not forget to mention, (because the play-bills stated the fact,) that this farce was represented "by permission of J. POOLE, Esq." THE AUTHOR!

The Courier of last night has the following paragraph:—

"Mr. Bish served a notice on the Committee of Drury-lane Theatre late last night, that he did not intend to become the lessee of that theatre."

What can be the meaning of Mr. BISH not intending to become the lessee of Drury-lane Theatre, and Mr. BUNN resigning the management, we have not the remotest idea.

COUNTY DUBLIN.

WEDNESDAY—ELEVENTH AND LAST DAY.

The result of this long, and at one time doubtful contest, was made known officially this morning. The poll-clerks, agents, assessors, &c. were busily engaged from an early hour in the morning. At ten o'clock the High Sheriff arrived, when the Court-house doors were thrown open, and the first proclamation was made hy the crier of the courts.

Proclamation being made three times, at intervals of thirty minutes, the Sheriff took his seat on the bench, and was immediately followed by the two popular candidates, who were greeted with loud and long continued cheers. Mr. Hamilton appeared a few minutes afterwards, and was likewise received with cheers.—The High Sheriff then announced the result of the poll as follows:—

Colonel White - - -	1357
Colonel Talbot - - -	1313
Mr. Hamilton - - - -	1249
Mr. Johnson - - -	60

He therefore declared Col. Henry White and Col. R. Wogan Talbot to be duly elected.

COUNTY OF WATERFORD.

WATERFORD, JULY 3.—All has passed off here as if no cause had ever been given for excitement. The city is perfectly tranquil and, comparatively speaking, deserted. The party who opposed the people can scarcely reconcile themselves to the awful change which the short space of a few days has brought round. The hope of succeeding by means of petition has ceased to encourage or afford them any consolation, whilst, in looking forward to the future, they see nothing to brighten the prospect.

I have already stated, that on the moment when "the writ" was issued, the Beresfords had a majority on the books of the county of 558 votes. They had made great sacrifices; they had reduced their rents from 3,000l. to 4,000l. per annum; they had remitted arrears to nearly 10,000l. Every dependant whom they could bring forward, even to their huntsmen and other servants, had been registered; a mighty host had been prepared, nor was money wanting where its influence could be available; 50l. was an ordinary sum to offer for a "freeholder's house" not worth 5l. In one particular instance, when this sum was tendered, it was referred by the party (to whom it was proposed) to the parish priest, who, not sanctioning the bargain, it was immediately rejected! On another occasion, 2,000l. had been offered to a gentleman, a resident of Cappoquin, for 23 40s. votes, which he had brought into the market, and the bargain struck between the parties; but when the votes were called for, they had already fled, and before they could be made sensible of the "cherished relationship" subsisting between landlord and tenant, they had polled for Messrs. Power and Stuart.

If ever the Beresfords had entertained a hope of success, it was at the moment of the issuing of the writ when they were enabled to bring their congregated forces into the field. The last man of the party had been registered. Under other circumstances, their majority would have caused their success, but the indignant feeling of the county had been raised. "The misdeeds of many a past year appeared in judgment against them, and their fall was as sudden as it was unexpected."

Mr. Stuart is now in quiet possession of the representation of this county: I say quiet possession, for no matter what may be the politics espoused by any future opponent, so long as Mr. Stuart entertains his own, he is sure of always being returned, as the number of his freeholders, and those of his friends who are pledged to support him on any future occasion, already exceed those that could be brought against him by 300 votes.

But the 40s. freeholders! what is to become of them: are they to be forgotten? There has been much said here about "a protecting committee;" such, no doubt, will be established. Mr. O'Connell has, it is said, subscribed 100l. from the 600l. which he has received for his services here. (Quere—how many weeks is it since this disinterested patriot declared, "that the future liberties of Ireland would depend on the issue of the county Waterford contest—that he would take up his residence there, and that he would never accept of any remuneration for his services." He may now smile at the credulity of the good people here who relied on this great patriot's professions, whi'st he may again offer this stale excuse, "that, indeed, the dignity of his profession required that he should not leave their good city with empty pockets."

Alderman Cox died without any will; an administration was granted by the Prerogative Court to F. C. Cox, the widow, the relict, under 600l.

MACCLESFIELD, JULY 5.—The town was this evening thrown into no small consternation, by the rumour of a dreadful murder having been committed in one of the small openings leading out of Mill-street. On making enquiries, I find the following to be the leading facts of the case:—it appears that a Mrs. Albison, her husband, and his brother, had been drinking pretty freely in the course of the afternoon, at a small public-house in the neighbourhood; indeed, to such an excess, that by five o'clock she was so drunk, that a neighbour took from her arms a small child, and assisted in putting her to bed. Soon after this, the brother of Albison was observed lying on the bed, where she was reposing; and subsequently a little girl saw her on the floor, her husband standing over her, kicking her and beating her with a heavy wooden clog. One of the neighbours then rushed in, but at this time the wretched woman was quite insensible—her throat dreadfully swelled—her features completely disfigured—and the whole body, as well as the head, presenting a frightful spectacle! The floor was covered with blood; and, when the constable arrived, Albison was observed wiping off the coagulated blood from his clog, with his wife's cap. He was immediately taken into custody, together with his brother. The miserable woman was carried to bed, and medical assistance was promptly had; but it is feared the case is quite hopeless, the surgeon being in great doubts of her recovery. Jealousy is supposed to have been the principal cause of this brutal attack: Albison, who is about sixty years of age, suspecting his wife (upwards of fifty, of being too intimate with his brother, who is also about fifty years old, and a cripple!

William Goldsbrough, a collier, was ascending a coal-pit, at Rawden, about a quarter past two o'clock on Monday afternoon, when the rope by which he was being drawn up slipped off the drum of the gin, and he was thrown out of the corfe, and fell to a depth of 50 yards. He alighted on his feet, and his legs were literally broken to shivers, so much so, that the bones of his feet were actually driven through his shoes. He lingered in the most dreadful tortures for about five hours, when he expired.—Leeds Intelligencer.

MR. FARQUHAR OF FONTHILL.—This Gentleman died on Thursday at his residence, called the Church House, in the New Road. His servants finding that he had not come down stairs for some hours after his usual time, one of them entered his bedchamber, and found him completely lifeless. He must have expired some time previously, as his body was then perfectly cold. He had for some time been afflicted with an asthmatic complaint, a severe fit of which douhtlessly produced his death. Mr. Farquhar seems to have died unexpectedly, as for several months past he had enjoyed (it is said) very improved health. On Tuesday last he was very well, and remained several hours at Mr. Phillips's, in Bond-street, transacting business with him, and paid him a considerable sum of money, and appointed to be with him on the following day, Wednesday, to select some pictures. It is incorrect, as stated in a Morning Paper, that Mr. Farquhar has left one nephew. He has three and a more immediate relative in America.

The order that was issued for the march of the 1st Battalion of the 3d Regiment of the Foot Guards to London has been countermanded. The Battalion is directed to remain in the neighbourhood of Manchester.

The right wing of the 32d (Cornwall) Regiment of Infantry left Plymouth on Friday last, and is ordered to follow the route of the left wing of the same Corps, for the Northern District.

The Depot of the 1st Battalion of the Royals is ordered to Perth.

The Depot of the 49th Regiment of Infantry has arrived at Glasgow, from Liverpool, and is ordered to proceed to Stirling.

Detachments of Recruits arrived in town on Friday morning, from Norwich and Coventry, on their route to join their respective Corps and Depots.

NAVAL INTELLIGENCE.

From the Plymouth Journal of July 6.

COURT MARTIAL ON THE MASTER OF THE NORTH STAR.

A court-martial assembled on Friday, on board the Britannia, to inquire into the cause and circumstances of the North Star running on the east end of the Breakwater, on her way into Plymouth Sound, on the 24th of June, and to try Mr. George Hannaford, the master, who had charge of the ship at the time, tor his conduct on the occasion.

Members.—Captain Pipon, Britannia, President; Captains Jeremiah Coghlan, C.B. Nicholas Lockyer, C.B. John Wilson; Commander William Hamley.

The prosecution closed on that day, and the Court adjourned, for the prisoner to enter on his defence, which he delivered on Saturday.

Sentence.—The Court having heard his (the prisoner's) narrative of the circumstances, and examined several officers belonging to the North Star, touching the occasion before mentioned, and having maturely and deliberately weighed and considered the same, is of opinion, that his Majesty's ship North Star was run upon the Breakwater, on the 24th of June, through the gross neligence of the prisoner, the said Mr. George Hannaford, in conducting the ship into Plymouth Sound; and the Court doth therefore adjudge the said Mr. George Hannaford to be dismissed his Majesty's service, and the said Mr. George Hannaford is dismissed his Majesty's service accordingly.

The Board of Admiralty, with that zealous desire which they have manifested for some years for the advancement of hydrographical and scientific knowledge, have determined on fitting out another expedition to the Arctic Seas.

MR. GLADSTONE.—[From the Berwick Advertiser of June 30.]—"We are not a little surprised, says the Editor of the Berwick Advertiser, to see it stated in the Liverpool Courier, of the 28th instant, that our report of Mr. Gladstone's speech at the commencement of the late election is incorrect, particularly in what relates to the Corn and Navigation Laws. The Editor of the Berwick paper did not make up the report from recollection, and without the assistance of notes. The truth is, that he did not write one word of the speech in question, but was favoured with it by a Gentleman who carefully took notes. The Editor heard the speech delivered, and can with the greatest confidence assert, that the sentiments relating to the Corn and Navigation Laws are almost, if not altogether, expressed in the ipsissima verba of Mr. Gladstone. The Editor, and many others, who understood that Mr. G. was the personal friend of Mr. Canning, and the warm supporter of that Gentleman's liberal measures, were astonished to hear from his own mouth, that his opinions did not accord with those of that able Statesman on these two great national questions. Mr. Gladstone had several interviews with the Editor after the report of his speech was published, and never gave the slightest hint that it was in the smallest degree incorrect. The Editor has this moment been informed by the foreman in the office that he sent a proof of Mr. Gladstone's speech to one of his principal agents, who returned it without any observations."

[We copy from the Berwick Advertiser the above paragraph, which, as it arises from a statement that first appeared in a Liverpool paper, looks very like as if it proceeded from the Honourable Gentleman himself, who is the subject of it, and intended either to prepare his new Constituents in Berwick for any contradiction that his future conduct in Parliament may give to the principles he avowed previous to their electing him as one of their Representatives; or to persuade his ministerial friends that the report of his speech, which appeared in the Berwick paper, and which makes him to differ widely from them on such weighty questions as the Corn and Navigation Laws, was not a faithful representation of his sentiments.]

DREADFUL FIRE AT LIVERPOOL.

From Gore's Liverpool Advertiser.

This morning, shortly after 12 o'clock, the neighbourhood of the Salthouse-dock experienced great alarm by the appearance of fire in the extensive warehouse of Mr. John Aspinall, Orford-street. The fire commenced in a cotton-room on the second floor, and in a few minutes threatened destruction to the neighbourhood, which consisted chiefly of warehouses. The alarm-bells were rung, and in a short time all the engines in town hastened to the scene of conflagration, by which time the fire had extended to other premises. Mr. Aspinall's warehouse is situated at the corner of Orford-street; and under the warehouse were several offices, into which it was found impossible to enter with a view of saving the books, &c.; among them, we understand, were Mr. Cyrus Morral's office, and also that of Mr. John Gillies. The fire, notwithstanding the exertions of the firemen and others, reached several other warehouses, amongst which were those of Mr. Joseph Leigh, Mr. Riley, sailmaker, Messrs. Rankin and Co. Mr. C. Fletcher, and others whose names it was impossible, from the confusion which existed, for us to collect; suffice it to say, that at one period were presented to the gaze of the thousands collected to the spot, Mr. Aspinall's warehouse, at one corner of Orford-street, the warehouse of Mr. Gibbons, at the opposite corner, the other warehouses for 40 yards up Orford-street, and a warehouse, the back of which was in Fixton-lane. The appearance of the fire for several hours was awfully grand. The engines of the different fire-offices did all in their power to prevent its further progress, but it was impossible to stop the rage of the fire, situated as those buildings were, and the general fear seemed to be for the safety of the private dwellings of the neighbourhood. The police officers were quickly on the spot, and rendered the most effectual services by their well-timed arrangements. The Mayor in a short time arrived at the scene of destruction, and by his decisive measures a great deal of the property in the adjacent warehouses was conveyed beyond the reach of the fire. Soon after his Worship arrived on the spot, a great part of the crew, and all the marines of the Bittern sloop of war, landed, and owing to the efficient arrangements of Captain Price (the acting naval officer of this port), and Lieut. Rochford, R.N. (commander of the Bittern), a great deal of property was saved from the destructive element. Mr. Harrison, the quarter-master, stationed at the rendezvous, was called out an early hour, and rendered a most essential service in this dreadful calamity.

At this moment (three o'clock) the fire is still raging to a most alarming extent, and threatening destruction to the whole neighbourhood.

THURSDAY EVENING.—The fire continued to rage, with undiminished fury, until near six o'clock, when it began to abate, not so much from the labours of the firemen, as from all the timber and combustible matter in the buildings having been destroyed. We have not heard of a single individual being hurt during the fire. The warehouses are not more than 20 yards from the Salt-house-dock, the vessels in which could scarcely have escaped destruction, had not the wind fortunately blown from the south-west. As it was, they were in imminent peril; but the dock not being very full af vessels, they were drove to the opposite or west side, out of the reach of the danger. Various statements have been given of the value of the property destroyed by this calamity; but it cannot be less than 150,000l.; of which nearly 100,000l., it is said, is insured in the different fire-offices. The present is the most extensive fire that has taken place in Liverpool since the year 1801, when the Goree warehouses were destroyed.

On Friday last Lord Forbes, accompanied by a friend, went to dine at Lord Westmeath's, and was waylaid by a mob of several hundred persons on his return home, who commenced a furious attack, by throwing stones and other missiles at his Lordship, who was driving in an open gig. He was ultimately compelled to seek protection in the demesne of Richard Levinge, the wall of which he was obliged to scale, and from thence find his way across the country to his own home, as it was impossible for him again to venture on the road, which was narrow and literally lined with his savage assassins. The only cause which can be assigned for this brutal and ungrateful outrage is, the fact of his having given some of his second votes to a Protestant candidate! Emancipate these fine fellows, my Lord Forbes—by all means emancipate them. They deserve to have a participation in all the privileges of the Protestant Constitution!—Dublin Mail.

An original portrait of Milton has been recently discovered by Mr. Robert Lemon, of the State Paper Office. The portrait is enclosed in an oval border, and represents Milton apparently about twenty-eight or thirty years of age; the hair parted on the forehead, and hanging down over the shoulders a little curled or wavy, hut not enough to warrant the epithet of ringlets; the forehead rather high, and peculiarly formed, and the nose straight and well proportioned; but the mouth and chin are beautiful; not the beauty of fancy, or the beauty of taste; but what every person, even the most unenlightened, immediately pronounces beautiful. The costume is strictly that of the period, a plain falling collar or band, with a cloak or mantle thrown round the shoulders. This portrait remarkably answers to the description or cognomen bestowed upon Milton, that of The Lady of his College. There is a softness of expression in the countenance, and an intensity of thought, with a mildness of character, utterly at variance with the sturdy politician and unbending theologician of his eventful period; a difference so peculiar, as might well cause that singular designation to be given to him.

At the Assizes of Nismes, three noted malefactors, have met with the reward of their crimes. The principal, named Brun, commonly called L'Enfer, was accused of two murders, one in 1815, and the other in 1825. He also stood charged with various robberies committed by a band of which he was chief, and of which his fellow prisoners, Valle and Vergne, formed part. More than a hundred witnesses were examined on this trial. Burn was the proprietor of an auberge, situated in a wild and isolated part of the country. This house, according to several of the winesses was a den of crime. One witness stated, that while drinking in it, he felt with his feet the dead body of a man under the table. Another witness stated, that on turning up the earth in the neighbourhood of the house, he found the body of a man. The most frightful stories of this man and his auberge were circulated in the country. He was, it appears, of a race of robbers and murderers, several of his family had been broken on the wheel, or hanged, before the Revolution. Amongst others, his father and one of his uncles. With regard to the two murders laid to his charge, there was only presumptive proof. The jury, however, found him guilty of the first, by a majority of eleven to one; and of the second, by seven to five. He was found guilty, also, together with Valle and Vergne, his fellow prisoners, of several highway robberies. Valle and Vergne were condemned to hard labour for life; and Brun to be decapitated in the village nearest to his dreadful habitation.

MANSLAUGHTER.—An inquest was yesterday held at Bethnal-green, on the body of Mrs. Fairbridge, whose death was occasioned by a one-horse chaise, in which she was riding with her husband, having been overturned by the Liverpool mail coach, the whole of which went over her body. She lingered for three weeks, when she died of her wounds. After a lengthened explanation on the part of the coroner, and some consideration on the part of the jury, a verdict of "Manslaughter" was recorded against Richard Wells, driver of the Liverpool mail, and a warrant was immediately issued for his apprehension.

SUMMER ASSIZES.

MIDLAND CIRCUIT.—NORTHAMPTON, July 5.

VIOLENT OUTRAGE.

James Catherall and Wm. Robertson were capitally indicted for having violently assaulted, and with a view to do grievous bodily harm on the person of James Henley, on the 20th June last, in the parish of Boughton Green, in this county; and also for having taken from his person, eleven half-crowns, and other small articles.

It appeared from the evidence, that on the night in question, the prosecutor, who is a waiter, had been attending in that capacity at one of the booths at Boughton fair. In the course of the evening he had occasion to leave the booth, and just as he left it he received a tremendous blow from Catherall, which immediately knocked him down. While on the ground, the other prisoner, Robertson, tore off one of his pockets, and emptied the others of the silver and other articles. Whilst this was going on, Catherall pressed with his foot upon prosecutor's neck, which prevented his calling for assistance, and he was so violently attacked, that the blood gushed from his ears in considerable quantities. As soon as the prosecutor had recovered a little, he gave information to the constables of the parish, and the prisoners being known as desperate characters, were apprehended, and identified by the prosecutor, as the persons who had so violently robbed him.

The prisoners asserted their innocence; but the jury instantly found them Guilty.

Catherall was again put to the bar, charged with having been guilty of a similar assault and robbery, on the body of James Hanwell, on the same night, and at the same fair, at Boughton.

The evidence was equally conclusive in this as in the former case, and the jury brought in their verdict Guilty—Death.

Catherall is an old offender, and has long been known by the nick-name of "Captain Slash." His conduct during the trial evinced effrontery mingled with indifference as to the probable result which might await him. He declared the witnesses against him to be all perjurers, for "they had not described his apparel right." All he wanted was "honour."

NORFOLK CIRCUIT.—BUCKINGHAM, July 5.

Henry Collins, a young lad in a smock-frock, of a sullen and heavy expression of countenance, was put to the bar, charged with having, on the 11th of June, assaulted Anne, the wife of Thomas Welling, of Bledlow, with intent to commit a grievous crime.

Mr. Dover conducted the prosecution—the prisoner had no counsel.

Anne Wellin deposed, that she lives at Sanderton. Is a married woman, and has seven children. The eldest is about 14 years of age. On the 11th of June she was going to Bledlow-ridge chapel, about 12 o'clock in the day. She overtook a woman named Harman, and walked in company with her. They met the prisoner. He came up, and pushed witness as he passed by her. He came back, and caught hold of Mrs. Harman. She halloed out, and got away. He then seized hold of witness—threw her down, and said if she halloed, it would be the worse for her. He tore her gown. While she was lying on her back, he held her down—gave her some blows on the face, in consequence of which her nose bled all over her clothes, and she received a black eye. A man named Pearce came up; she was then almost exhausted. She struggled as long as she could. When Pearce came up the prisoner ran away. Pearce went after him. She went to Harman, the constable, and told him what had happened.

On cross-examination by the Judge, she said that she had given him no encouragement whatever.

Thomas Pearce stated, that he heard the cry of "Murder," in a field, on the 11th of June, two or three times. He went towards the place whence it came, and he there saw the prisoner and Mrs. Welling. She was lying on her back on the ground, and the prisoner had one hand on her neck, and was on his knees. As soon as he saw witness, he got up and ran away. He got behind a hedge; he lost sight of him for a moment, but he came up to him again, and said to him, "What have you been doing with the woman?" He said, "What woman?" Witness replied, "You must come back along with me?" At that moment the constable came up, and he gave him into custody.

John Harman—Is a constable. On the 11th of June, Ann Welling came to him all over blood, and with a black eye. In consequence of the information which she gave him, he went and took the prisoner into custody. She said, when she came to him, that a drunken fellow had been ill-using her. The prisoner did appear a little tipsy when he took him into custody.

The Judge called the prosecutrix again, and closely cross-examined her as to the liberties which the prisoner had attempted.

The Judge then summed up, and stated to the Jury that one part of the charge—namely, the intention with which the prisoner had committed the assault was not sufficiently made out—that he had committeda cruel and barbarous assault on a defenceless woman, there was no doubt, but the facts which the prosecutrix had disposed to were not, in his mind, full and satisfactory evidence of a further and more atrocious crime being contemplated. It was, however, for the Jury, on a dispassionate consideration of the circumstances, to say whether he was guilty of the greater offence, or only of the violent assault which was laid in the same indictment.

The Jury, after some deliberation, returned a verdict of Guilty of the violent assault.

The Judge, after an impressive admonition on the unmanly and brutal conduct of the prisoner, sentenced him to two years imprisonment and hard labour.

Lord Folkestone subscribed 50l. towards the fund for returning Hobhouse to Parliament.

On Thursday, Lord G. Hill, of the 8th Hussars, and Lieutenant Bush, of the infantry, were held to bail to appear at the Sessions, where some privates of the 8th Hussars, who were identified as being concerned in the riots. Mr. Suttie was also held to bail to keep the peace towards Major Badcock, of the 8th.—Herald.

EXECUTION AT DUBLIN.—On Saturday, pursuant to the awful sentence of the law, Dennis Haynes and George Stanley, who robbed Mr. Bell, near Donnybrook, and who, upon the same night, murdered the Rev. Mr. Wogan, were executed in the front of Newgate. An execution being happily a rare occurence in this country, the crowd in attendance to witness this one was very numerous. We understand that since sentence was passed on these unfortunate men they had lived gaily, considering their circumstances; that they partook of all the enjoyments allowed to them, and that Haynes expressed his regret that more were not allowed to partake. While in their cells they acknowledged to a fellow prisoner, who had been appointed to read to them during the day, their participation in the murder of Mr. Wogan. According to their statement, the robbery, from which ensued this horrid transaction, was planned by St. Leger, the informer, who instigated them to it. While playing at cards with St. Leger on the night of the fatal deed, Stanley remarked, that there was a winding sheet in the candle! St. Leger laughed at him and reproached him with cowardice. They afterwards proceeded to Mr. Wogan's house. Wogan, they relate, made a desperate resistance. He knocked Stanley down with the but end of a gun; Stanley rushed on him, and Haynes having got up, hit him several blows on the head, and at length the unfortunate gentleman was deprived of life. They stated, that in going to the robbery they had no intention at all to commit murder.—Irishman.

POLICE INTELLIGENCE.

BOW-STREET.—John Wood alias Thompson, the young lad who, on last Monday fortnight, was charged at this office with a very atrocious assault upon Mr. Conrad Meyer, a Swiss gentleman living in Essex-street, Strand, while in Kensington-gardens, was brought up for a final examination.

The prisoner, in the first instance, was remanded from Monday until Thursday, as there was some reason to suspect that another person was concerned in the outrage, whom it would be easy to apprehend in that time. This suspicion proved to be incorrect, but when Thursday came, a Gentleman waited on Mr. Halls, to inform him that Mr. Meyer was too ill to attend. The wounds, which the Surgeon pronounced not to be dangerous, though very severe, had produced fever, and Mr. Meyer being naturally nervous and of weak health, he was in such a state as to prevent him from leaving his bed. This message, however, was accompanied by an intimation that Mr. Meyer was very reluctant to prosecute, and wished the prisoner to be discharged, expressing a hope that his narrow escape from punishment would operate as a warning, and that he would abstain from crime in future.

Mr. Halls said he was much surprised at such an intimation. Here was an outrage of a most atrocious description, the object of which was evidently to plunder, committed in open day, in a place of public resort, and yet the perpetrator was to escape punishment. He should certainly require from Mr. Meyer the performance of that which was no more than a public duty.

The prisoner was then remanded for a week, and upon his being again brought up, Mr. C. Phillips attended in his behalf. Mr. Meyer was again absent, and Mr. Balls sent a summons for him to attend immediately, with a note in the margin, that in default of compliance, a warrant would be issued. Mr. Meyer replied to this summons, that he was not well enough to come, but that he would attend on any future day, and the prisoner was again remanded till Thursday.

In the interim, however, (Tuesday evening) Mr. Halls received a letter from Mr. Meyer, in which he again begged to be allowed to withdraw from a prosecution, stating, as his reasons for the request, that he came to this country for a special purpose (we understand to endeavour to negociate a loan of some kind;) that he had failed in the object of his mission, and that he was poor, and wished to return as speedily as possible to his own country.

Mr. Halls said he could not give his sanction to such a request. The feeling, whatever it was, which induced Mr. Meyer to decline a prosecution, would be respected, and properly appreciated; but he must attend at all events, and publicly state his reasons.

The prisoner was on Thursday brought up, and Mr. Meyer attended. His head was still bound up, but he had no appearance of indisposition.

The only question for the consideration of the Magistrate being, whether there was any sufficient evidence to commit the prisoner for the assault, with intent to rob, which is a felony, Mr. Halls interrogated the witnesses very minutely as to the precise expressions used by the prisoner when taken, and they concured in stating that he said, "I have done wrong, but I was induced to do it through want—it is my first crime, and I hope the Gentleman will forgive me."

Mr. Halls said, he could put but one construction upon such a declaration, and ordered the prisoner to be fully committed to Newgate for the felony, and the witness to be bound over to prosecute.

The prisoner, who is a very fine young man, has a remarkably mild and intelligent expression of countenance. He seemed quite unmoved, however, and declined saying any thing. His mother, and his brother and sister, all of whom are very respectable persons, were present. The mother was deeply affected.

Yesterday Mr. Anderson, a gentleman of fortune, residing in Portland-place, came to this Office, and stated to Sir R. Birnie, that a very ingenious robbery had been committed upon him by a person who, from his appearance, and the skill he had shewn in his system of depredation, was likely, unless his career was speedily stopped, to be very successful in plundering the public. On Tuesday (we understood) he (Mr. Anderson) having gone out alone early, Mrs. Anderson and the children went in their carriage for an airing round the Regent's Park. Not long after the carriage had left the door, a man, about forty years of age, wearing a brown coat, with a velvet collar, light waistcoat, and white trowsers, with boots and military spurs, knocked at the door, and asked if Mr. Anderson was at home. Being answered in the negative, he said it was unlucky, for he wanted to have got from him the address of his brother, Colonel Anderson, with whom he had urgent business. Perhaps, however (continued he), Mrs. Anderson is at home, and she can inform me? The servant told him she also was out, and he then expressed a wish to write a note to leave for Mr. Anderson, and was shewn into a room for that purpose, and the servant left him for a few moments to procure writing materials. On her return he said he had altered his mind—that it was hardly worth while to write, and that he would call again. After his departure it was discovered that he had taken with him a chain and seals, and other jewellery, to the value of about 30l., which Mrs. Anderson had left lying in a table in the room into which the stranger was ushered. A short time before this, a man, who, by the description must be the same, called at the house of complainant's clerk, and having no doubt watched the latter out, desired to write a letter on business of importance. Having written a note, containing some statement which the person to whom it was addressed was totally at a loss to understand, he went away, and a gold watch and appendages were missed soon after from the room. Mr. Anderson added, that the head of the thief was a little inclined to baldness in front, and that his manner and general appearance were well calculated to impose upon the best trained servant. He (Mr. Anderson) knew there was no chance of his recovering his property, and his only object was to guard the public against the depredations of the fellow, and to put the police upon the scent for him.

The same fellow went a few days since to the house of Mr. Cranbourne, an artist, in Percy-street, Rathborne-place, soon after the family had gone out for an airing in the morning, and making use of the same kind of pretences, contrived to possess himself of an ebony flute, and a lady's reticule, containing a few articles of jewellery, of small value, with which he got off.

Sir R. Birnie, in answer to the communication of Mr. Anderson, assured him that no exertions should be wanting on the part of the Police to bring the depredator to justice; and observed, that in all probability his career would be very short after this public application.

One hundred pounds damages were given in the Sheriff's Court, on Saturday se'nnight, against Dugdale, Russel-court, for pirating Moore's Irish and National Melodies, the property of Mr. Power—damages laid at 2,000l.

It is said that arrangements are making at the Post-office to convey letters twice a day to all places within twenty miles of the Royal Exchange; a regulation which will embrace Windsor, Staines, Leatherhead, Epsom, Hertford, St. Albans, Reigate, Romford, Gravesend, &c.

IRISH REPRESENTATIVE PEER.—Mr. Bourchier, Deputy Clerk of the Crown, has given notice in the Dublin Gazette of Saturday, that the Right Honourable Stephen Earl of Mount Cashel had been chosen (by a majority of votes) to be the Peer to sit and vote on the part of Ireland, in the House of Lords of the United Kingdom, in the room of Hugh, Viscount Carlton, deceased.

CORONER'S INQUEST.

HORRIBLE DEATH OF A FEMALE.

On Thursday an inquest was held at the Coach and Horses, in Bruton-street, Grosvenor-square, on the body of Mrs. Sarah Coates, the wife of Mr. George Coates, a livery-stable-keeper, of Barlow-mews, Bruton-street.

Mr. George Fenwick examined—I am a veterinary surgeon. This morning I was in my counting-house, when Mr. Coates came to me, with a phial in his hand, and asked me to let him have some mixture to take a splint out of one of his horse's legs. I said that I had none by me at that time; that my friend Shepherd was making up some, and as soon as it was ready I would send some in the phial which he had left. Soon after I filled the phial and sent it by my son to Mr. Coates's house. My son returned, saying he had left it with the man in the stable, desiring him to say that it came from Mr. Fenwick, for Mr. Coates. Soon after Mr. Coates came to my house, in a great fright, and said that the preparation which I had sent had been given to his wife by mistake. I said, "Good God! have you administered the white of an egg? It is an antidote against it." Mr. Coates made no answer, and I hurried off with him to his house; but on our arrival the deceased lady had ceased to exist.

Master George Fenwick examined—I am son to the last witness. This morning I went into my father's drug-room. My father was there; he said, "This bottle is to be taken to Mr. Coates." I took it accordingly, and the first person I saw was a little girl on the stairs, the daughter of the deceased. I asked her if her father was at home. She said she thought he was in the mews. I went into the stable, and the little girl followed me and asked one of the men if her father was about the premises. He said "No," and asked what I wanted with him. I said I had brought this phial for him. The man said, "I will take it;" and give to him. I gave it to him, and desired him to give it to Mr. Coates. In going down the yard I read the label on the phial—it said, "This draught to be taken directly." My father did not tell me what the phial contained, nor did I know. The phial had been used, I believe, for human medicine before, and had been supplied by Mrs. Coates' medical attendant, and the label had not been torn off or obliterated.

Henry Hunt examined—I work for Mr. Coates, as hostler. I was aware that Mrs. Coates was indisposed. This morning the last witness came to the stable door and inquired for Mr. Coates. I said he was not at home; but I would go and find him. I accordingly sought him, but he was not about the premises. then asked the lad what he had got for my master;—he showed me a phial. I read the label; and said, "Oh, this is a draught for Mistress." I gave the phial, on reading the label, to my master's daughter, a little girl about fourteen, saying it was medicine for my mistress, and the little girl took it up stairs directly.

Mr. John Barrow examined—The deceased was my patient, and had been unwell two days. The phial was sent from my shop a day or two ago, and contained a draught for the deceased. On the phial was written "The draught to be taken directly." Yesterday she was considerably better, and did not require my attendance; but this morning I was sent for in a very great hurry to attend upon her, and before I could get ready to go, a second messenger came. I lost no time in going; and on reaching the house I beheld one of the most appalling spectacles the human mind can imagine. The unfortunate Mrs. Coates was lying stretched on the bed a corpse, and her husband, seven children, and several other members of the family surrounding and clinging to her in the agonies of despair. The baneful decoction was handed to him by the husband, and there could be no doubt but had caused her dissolution.

Miss E. Coates, a little girl about thirteen years of age, was next examined. She said that on receiving the phial from the hostler, she took it up stairs and gave it to her eldest sister, who is about twelve months older than herself. Her sister showed it to her mother, and reading the label, she said, "Oh; mother, here's something to do you good—you must take it immediately." Her mother, on seeing the bottle, said, "Oh dear, why will the doctor keep sending so much stuff when I am getting well?" Her sister urged her to take it, saying, "I am sure, mother, it will do you good, now do take it;" and, so saying, she poured out two spoonfuls of the draught, and putting it into a wine glass, handed it to her mother, who swallowed it; and the next moment she exclaimed, "Oh! my dear girl, I am poisoned, I am poisoned."

The Jury returned a verdict—"That the deceased Mrs. Sarah Coates came by her death by being accidentally poisoned."

MURDER NO CRIME!

The following letters were received on Saturday, by a gentleman in Washington, from his correspondent in Lexington, Kentucky:—

"LEXINGTON MAY 22.—An event of the greatest moment has just occurred at Frankfort: Beauchamp, charged with the murder of Sharp, was found guilty on the 19th inst., and, on being brought to receive the sentence of the Court, his lawyers offered an act of the Legislature of the 12th January 1825, which contains a clause repealing punishment for murder in this State, by a construction which our best Judges consider proper. Under this clause, Beauchamp must be discharged; and, what is more to be regretted the construction goes to declare that no person can be punished for murder subsequent to the said 12th January 1825. The call of the Legislature immediately will be the result.

"LEXINGTON, MAY 23.—I had the pleasure of addressing you yesterday on the subject of Beauchamp's trial, and the unprecedented state which this country was likely to be placed in on the eve of a great election contest. Judge Davidge, who presided in the above trial, has thought proper to pass sentence and order Beauchamp to be hanged on the 7th July; but, still, all men of high legal attainments pronounce the law punishment for murder to have been repealed, and that no person can be legally convicted for that crime. There is no appeal from the opinion of Judge Davidge, therefore the man will be hanged, and the country, in some degree, tranquillized, by this construction of the law. I am glad to state, that the excitement in the State has greatly diminished compared with last year.

"P. S. I do not believe the Legislature will be called, as was expected yesterday."

It is rumoured that an attempt will be made in the next Session of Parliament to obtain permission for disposing of Waterloo Bridge by way of lottery, upon the principle of its being thrown open to the public in a much shorter time than can now be expected.

On Wednesday last, one of our Worthy Representatives (for such we cannot but consider him), R. A. Dundas, Esq., unexpectedly arrived in Ipswich. He was immediately after his arrival met by several of his Friends and Committee, to whom he communicated the pleasing intelligence that Mr. Mackinnon and himself had taken the opinions of several of the most eminent lawyers respecting the validity of the votes that had been rejected from their poll, and that such opinions were decidedly in their favour. He also mentioned, that during the late contests at Weymouth, Berwick-upon-Tweed, Maldon, and several other places, freemen holding similar situations with the preventive service and extra glutmen who were disfranchised here, were allowed to vote, and considered by the assessors to be good votes. Mr. Dundas assured his friends of the fixed determination of Mr. Mackinnon and himself to persevere in their endeavour to obtain justice in the House of Commons, and that they entertained not the smallest doubt of their being finally seated as the representatives for Ipswich.—Ipswich Journal.

VAN DIEMAN'S LAND.

The Hobart Town papers to the 17th February have arrived: the following account of the apprehension of Jeffries the notorious bush-ranger, is the only interesting feature:—

"I shall now conclude the history of the monster Jeffries. A few days ago, the wretch, with one companion, came up to a bark-hut, where a party that was in pursuit of him, consisting of two soldiers, a stockman, and three volunteers (two of them currency lads) were resting themselves. Jeffries fired into the hut, and wounded a soldier slightly. Soon after, one of the soldiers came upon Hopkins (an accomplice of Jeffries), and found him asleep and without arms; he surrendered, and was brought in.

"Yesterday morning a party of 12 men were resting in a hut, when a man was observed by a black aboriginal native boy, at a short distance, behind a gum-tree. The alarm was given, and he was instantly surrounded; it proved to be Jeffries. He begged for quarter, threw down his arms (a musket and pistol), and was taken prisoner. He was seized by a prisoner for life, named William Parsons, who will of course receive the promised rewards. He was brought into town about seven o'clock last night. It is quite impossible for me to express in adequate terms, or to do common justice to the feelings that were shown by all descriptions of people, on the approach of the monster to the town. No one, I believe, ever witnessed such a scene. It clearly shows that Jeffries stands alone, unequalled, unparalleled, among the human race. Men, women, and children, free and prisoners, joined in their personal execrations against this monster. The town was literally gutted of its inhabitants; there must have been upwards of 500 persons crowding round the cart that brought this inhuman wretch to the gaol. Their shouting reached the remotest parts of the town. It was with the greatest difficulty imaginable the people were prevented from tearing him to pieces. Prisoners of all descriptions joined in the execration expressed by others.

"I should tell you, that when Hopkins was escorted through the streets on Saturday, Mrs. Feutril, the grandmother of the murdered infant, mistook a constable that was with him for Jeffries, and rushing from her house in a paroxysm of rage, stabbed him with a fork, but, fortunately for her, he was only slightly wounded.

"Since Jeffries has been taken he has coolly confessed all the murders laid to his charge, with many horribly aggravating circumstances; the worst of which is (with the exception of the infanticide) that being rather pressed for food, lots were cast which of his two companions should die—it fell upon Russell—but as the man was armed, he could not effect his purpose till the poor wretch fell asleep from fatigue, when he was murdered, and his flesh served the survivors for food for a few days, until they stole a sheep. On being asked what he then did with the remainder of Russell's corpse, he replied, that it was cut into steaks, and fried up with the mutton.

"The list of the monster's murders stands thus:—1st. Tibb's man. 2d. The infant. 3d. Mr. Sutherland's man. 4th. One of his companions. 5th. Baker, a constable. 6th. Russell. 7th. Wounded Tibbs. 8th. Ditto a soldier—all within 21 days!

Rio Janeiro Papers to the 9th May were received yesterday. They contain the following dispatch:—

"RIO JANEIRO, APRIL 25.

"Yesterday, the 24th, the Portuguese brig of war the Providence, in forty-two days from Lisbon, arrived in this port, and brought the melancholy news of the death of Don John VI. King of Portugal and Algarves, father of our beloved sovereign, on the 10th of March, after three days illness, having previously appointed a Regency to govern the kingdom during his illness."

The following is an extract of a private letter from Brussels dated the 4th instant:—"The most important news, and the only intelligence I have to communicate, is, that the King has at last granted to his Catholic subjects, permission to enjoy the jubilee proclaimed by the Pope in his Bull on this subject, with the reservation of his royal rights, as well as those of the Netherland church, and without approving those expressions in the Bull, which might be interpreted as contrary to the laws of this country This permission is looked upon as an approximation towards a reconciliation with the Holy See. It comes rather unexpectedly as the Catholics, particularly those of the two Flanders, who are less enlightened than the inhabitants of the other southern provincse, though they wished ardently for it, scarcely hoped to see their wish realized. It will certainty contribute much towards rendering the King more and more popular. To-morrow the whole of Royal Family will be again assembled at the Hague. The depreciation in the funds of the Society of Commerce continues: it is the same with most of the Dutch funds. Some bankers say they were too high, and must, consequenlly, be reduced to a lower rate."

THE ARMY.—The Depot of the 37th (West Middlesex) Regiment of Infantry is ordered to march from Windsor, to-day, on route to Burnley.—Detachments of recruits arrived in town, this morning, from Bristol, on route to join their respective Corps and Depots.—The 7th (Royal Fusileers) Regiment has completed its augmentation establishment.

A small piece of ground in Lincoln was sold last week, by Mr. Widdowson, after the rate of more than 12,000l. an acre.—Boston Gazette.

It is estimated that 25,000l. will not more than pay the whole expenses incurred by the several Candidates for the representation of Worcester. The bills for ribands only, already sent in to one party, amount, we understand, to 2,000l. This is being dearly favoured.—Birmingham Chronicle.

To enquiries made last night at Brompton Park respecting the Duke of York, we are happy to state the report was highly satisfactory. His Royal Highness is much better.

THE QUEEN DOWAGER OF WIRTEMBERG.—"The following morning we continued to ascend the Neckar, passed through a country abounding in corn and pasture, and about mid-day reached Lonisburg, in the kingdom of Wirtemberg. The view becomes richer as the town is approached. The streets are broad, and the houses are regularly and neatly built. It is the Windsor of Wirtemberg. The palace is extensive and magnificently furnished. It is the residence of the Queen Dowager, late Princess Royal of England, and sister to George IV. We were politely shown through the apartments by one of the attendants, and passed through a brilliant succession of halls and galleries, every one of them more richly ornamented than another. We were at length ushered into a plain room, where we saw two domestics, in plain liveries, arranging a small covered table, one of them in the act of placing two glass bottles, apparently containing the wine of the country upon it. The table was intended for the Queen, who, we were informed, dined at an early hour. Her mode of living is simple—her fare apparently very frugal. The room, too, was plainly and neatly furnished. This simplicity contrasted strangely with all the gorgeous magnificence of the adjoining apartments. The dining-room was ornamented with portraits of the late King and Queen of England, and there was placed on the mantle-piece a handsome marble bust of his present Majesty."

BRADBERRY's PATENT SPECTACLES, upon unerring principles, to preserve the sight to extreme old age. It is necessary to caution the public against the use of improper Spectacles, as their effects prove injurious, instead of beneficial to the eye. The unremitted and anxious study Mr. BRADBERRY has paid to his glasses for upwards of 30 years, has called forth the most distinguished approbation of their merit from the medical profession, and from many thousands of persons of the highest rank and respectability.—To be had only at 28, Holles-street, the first door out of Oxford-street, next to the large Fruiterer's at the corner, facing Hanover-square, and at no other place in the United Kingdom.—Orders from the country immediately attended to. Removed from 332, Oxford-street.

DISTRESS in SPITALFIELDS.—At a MEETING of the COMMITTEE, held in the Vestry-rooms, Spitalfields, July 8, 1826.

Rev. RICHARD HARVEY, in the Chair.

The Committee regret to state that there has been as yet no diminution in the distress of the Spitalfields' Weavers. Their resources, however, are almost dried up, and if the Public do not continue their liberality, the pittance which the Committee have hitherto been enable to afford to these suffering fellow-creatures must be stopped. There are now thousands wholly dependant for their maintenance on the money which the liberality of the Public enables them to afford, but they have only sufficient for their support during another week.

The Committee are now personally visiting the cases of this distressed, but respectable Class, and as far as they have gone, they can bear witness to the severe pressure under which they are suffering, and the exemplary patience with which they bear it. Under these circumstances, they are sure this fresh appeal to the charity of the British Public will not be in vain.

THE BRITISH SPECIFIC, for re-producing and promoting the GROWTH of HAIR.—The principle of its operation is to cool and contract the pores which are opened by a redundancy of heat, occasioning a relaxation of the roots, and render them incapable of retaining the hair; to counteract which nothing is better calculated than the British Specific, as, from its invigorating and oleaginous properties, it almost immediately arrests the falling off, and affords such effectual nourishment to the roots, that persons giving it a fair trial may assure themselves of its speedily restoring it even where it has become completely bald, however long it may have been so, and, if grey, gradually to restore it to its natural colour. The superiority of this preparation (the invention of a medical man) derives additional recommendation from its being, unlike other compositions for the hair, so extremely clean and agreeable, that its application is a real pleasure, and is only requisite to be generally known to receive the preference of every article in use for similar purposes. To be had only of D. Peden, 15, Burlington Arcade, Piccadilly, in bottles 6s. each, or cases of four bottles for 1l., forwarded to order on receiving the amount, post paid.

NEW EDITION, THE TENTH, ENLARGED,
With Observations on the Danger of trusting to Nostrums, as an Internal Remedy for the Cure of Strictures. Illustrated by Cases. Price 3s.

PRACTICAL OBSERVATIONS on STRICTURES of the URETHRA and RECTUM, recommending an improved system for their Treatment and Cure; illustrating its efficacy by numerous remarkable and highly important cases, in some of which, Strictures of from ten to twenty years duration have been totally removed in a few weeks, and its superiority thereby fully established over every other method hitherto practised. By C. B. COURTENAY, M.D. To which are added, Observations and Practical Comments on Gleet, Seminal Weakness, and the miseries occasioned by Self Abuse, for the cure of which a mode of treatment, the result of long and successful practice, and at once safe, speedy, and effectual, is adopted by the Author.

Printed for the Author, Robert-street, Adelphi; and published and sold by Jones and Sherwood, Paternoster-row; Onwhyn, 4, Catherine-street, Strand; Chapell, Royal Exchange; Marsh, 145, Oxford-street; Walker, 90, High Holborn; Chappell, 94, Pall Mall; Sutherland, 9, Carlton-street, Edinburgh; and may be had of all Booksellers.

"We earnestly recommend the cases related by Dr. Courtenay to the perusal of such of our readers as are afflicted with the complaints which the Author has made the subject of these Observations. Several instances are adduced of the recovery of perfect health from states which were considered hopeless by Practitioners of eminent talents, and very extensive experience. We entertain the highest opinion of Dr. Courtenay's professional skill, and congratulate him on his successful and judicious application to these severe and often fatal diseases."—European Magazine.

IMPOSTURE UNMASKED.—The progress of Merit although frequently assailed, is not impeded by Envy and Detraction The aggression of ambuscade terminates in defeat; and conscious rectitude ultimately triumphs in the attainment of the grand object—public approbation. The test of experience is the guarantee of favour, and has established WARREN's BLACKING in general estimation; of which there exists not a stronger proof than the tacit acknowledgment of a host of servile imitators, who surreptitiously obtrude on the unwary a spurious preparation as the genuine article, to the great disappointment of the unguarded purchaser, and manifest injury of WARREN, whose character and interest by this iniquitous system are equally subject to detriment. It becomes therefore an indispensable duty to CAUTION THE PUBLIC against the manœuvres of Unprincipled Venders, who having no character to lose, and stimulated by avarice in their nefarious pursuits, aim at the acquisition of money through any medium than that of honour! The original and matchless BLACKING bears on each bottle a short direction, with the signature

ROBERT WARREN

All others are counterfeits; and in many instances the imposition labels are artfully interlined with a different address, in very small characters, between the more conspicuous ones of "No. 30," and "STRAND." It is earnestly recommended to Shopkeepers and others who are deceived by base fabrications of WARREN's BLACKING, to return the detected trash to the source whence it came, and expose the machinations of rascality to merited obloquy.

WARREN's BLACKING is surpassingly brilliant;—it excludes damp; gives pliancy to the leather; retains its pristine virtue in all climates: and, combining elegance with comfort, is an article equally of indispensable fashion and utility. Sold by every respectable Vender in Town and Country, in bottles, at 6d. 10d. 12d. and 18d. each.

The most prominent trait of BEAUTY is a fine HEAD of HAIR, which is effectually produced by

ROWLAND'S Macassar Oil, the original and genuine, a vegetable production, which has for many years been universally admired; also acknowledged pre-eminent for nourishing the Hair, preventing it from being injured by illness, change of climate, study, travelling, accouchement, &c. removes scurf, harshness, and dryness—renders it soft and glossy; prevents its falling off or turning grey; creates a thick growth on the baldest places; producing beautiful curls, adding a most incomparable, transcendent, and beautiful lustre, rendering the head-dress truly enchanting. Ask for "ROWLAND's" Macassar Oil, at 3s. 6d.; 7s.; 10s. 6d.; and 21s. per bottle.

ROWLAND's KALYDOR, for the complexion, which immediately diffuses on the skin a delectable and pleasing coolness, truly refreshing; renders the skin peculiarly soft and pleasant; removes freckles, pimples, and all cutaneous eruptions; imparts luxuriant and matchless beauty to the complexion.

ROWLAND's ESSENCE OF TYRE for changing red and grey whiskers to black or brown.

ROWLAND's ALSANA EXTRACT for the tooth-ach, and preserving and beautifying the teeth and gums.

CAUTION.—In consequence of the high popularity of the above articles, base impostors have imitated the labels, bills, and bottles. To guard against such imposition, it is necessary on purchasing to ask for "ROWLAND's," strictly observing their signatures in red on each bottle of the genuine articles,

Two entirely novel attractions at the ROYAL GARDENS, VAUXHALL, in addition to the usual entertainments.—A grand Gala will take place on Monday, Wednesday, and Friday—23d, 25th, and 27th of July.

The Proprietors respectfully announce, that anxious to merit by the most strenuous exertions the very distinguished patronage with which they have been honoured, they have availed themselves of the talents of that celebrated artist, Mr. Stanfield, who has designed and executed an entirely novel species of Exhibition, which will be thrown open to the Public on the above nights. An avenue of lofty elm trees, which has never yet formed part of the pleasure grounds of the establishment, has been appropriated, under the direction of the above artist, to the construction of a Building upwards of 80 feet high, forming an exact representation of

THE RUINS OF AN ITALIAN ABBEY, BY MOONLIGHT!

The combination of the natural beauties of the spot with the illusions of art, gives a reality to the scene which has never been equalled. It will be exhibited after the First Act of the Concert, with the effect of light and shade, and remain open till twelve o'clock.

Adjoining these Ruins is the Chinese Entrance, which has been completely fitted up with a Dioramic Exhibition called the

CAMBIA VEDUTA,

Consisting of the Six following changeable Views:—Teignmouth, in which Picture the effect of Lightning is shewn. White Abbey, Lake of Killarney, illumined occasionally by the setting sun. Mont St. Bernard, during which is seen the beautiful effect of a snow storm. Pont yr Eden, Wales, with the appearance of a rainbow. Vesuvius, first, the View of the Eruption during the Day, succeeded by the Night View, with the fiery lava rolling down the mountain. Ross'yn Castle, Scotland, a picturesque day scene, changing afterwards to a moonlight scene.

The Italian Ruins, as well as the Camhia Veduta, will all be open for the gratification of the Visitors, without extra charge.

The other Attractions of the Evening will consist of A Grand Concert in Two Acts. A new Ballet, "The Village Doctor." Mr. Blackmore on the Slack Rope.

Mr. Wilson, whose Performances have been received with such universal delight, will perform his astonishing Evolutions on the Tight Rope, varied each Evening. The Entertainments will conclude with Magnificent Fire-Works and Terrific Ascent.

Doors open at Seven.---Concert commences at Half-past Eight.---Admission 4s.

DIORAMA, REGENT'S PARK.—The two new Views now exhibiting, viz. The Interior of Rosslyn Chapel, painted by Mons. Daguere, and a View of the City of Rouen, taken from Mount St. Catheriue's, painted by Mons. DISTRESS in SPITALFIELDS.—At a MEETING of the COMMITTEE, held in the Vestry-room of Christ Church, Spitalfields, July 20, 1826.

WM. HALE, Esq., in the Chair.

The Committee have the pleasing office of communicating to the public, that HIS MAJESTY has been graciously pleased to bestow a THIRD DONATION of ONE THOUSAND POUNDS towards the support of the weavers in distress. Had it not been for this fresh act of Royal beneficence, they would have no further funds at their disposal, and all relief must have been discontinued after this day. The Committee intreat the public to bear in mind, that more than 9,000 persons are wholly dependent for support on the relief which they receive at the Church; and, but for that, must perish for lack of food. The small pittance which has been hitherto afforded is now of necessity reduced, and yet the expenditure of the Committee exceeds 500l. weekly. Under these circumstances it is obvious, that without an immediate addition to their funds, the distressed weavers in Spitalfields can receive no assistance beyond the next fortnight. The Committee have now nearly concluded the task of personally visiting the cases; and they can assure the public, that in almost every case the distress is great beyond conception. The last appeal to the public has met with very little success. The Committee trust that this will have a better reception, and that they shall be enabled, at least for the present, to continue their assistance to this suffering, but quiet and respectable, class.

J. D. KINCAID, Sec.

THE Public are respectfully informed, that Messrs. SAVORY, MOORE, and DAVIDSON, Chemists to the Royal Family, continue to prepare the following approved Medicines, which may be had at their Warehouses, 136, New Bond-street, and 220, Regent-street; and of their agents, Mr. Charles Butler, 4, Cheapside; Messrs. Newberry's, 45, and Edwards, 66, St. Paul's Church-yard; Mr. Sutton, Bow Church-yard, and Messrs. Barclay, 97, Fleet-market, surrounded with a Stamp, on which their Names are egraved, by order of His Majesty's Commissioners; without this Stamp, the Medicine cannot be genuine.

ABSORBENT LOZENGES, for Heartburn and Acidity in the Stomach. Acidity and Heartburn are amongst the most common symptoms of Stomach complaints; persons of weak and nervous constitutions, and those who have been intemperate in their living, suffer more particularly from these affections, which cause restlessness, lowness of spirits, debility, and irregular state of bowels, giddiness, gout, &c. &c.

It is now thirty years since Dr. Jenner prescribed these Lozenges, which afford in the above cases a speedy relief; and while the ingredients are agreeable to the taste, they are fully adequate to the purpose for which they are intended.

The PATENT SEIDLITZ POWDERS These Powders, when used according to the Directions, form an effervescing Aperient Draught, as agreeable as Soda Water, yet possessing all the Medicinal Properties of the much-esteemed Seidlitz Spring in Germany.

CHELTENHAM SALTS. The Chalybeate Aperient, or Improved Cheltenham Salts, when dissolved in Water, after the manner directed, forms a correct Cheltenham Water. They have been used in most parts of the World uniformly producing the same effect as the Water when drank at the Spa.

ACIDULATED KALI. A tea-spoonful of this Powder, mixed with four large spoonfuls of Water, instantly forms a perfect Saline Draught.

This is one of the most useful Family Medicines yet offered to the Public.

AROMATIC SALT of VINEGAR. This Preparation is particularly recommended on account of its crystalline form, which renders it more pugent than any other preparation of Vinegar.

Likewise COMPOUND TINCTURE of the SULPHATE of QUININE, which possesses all the tonic and febrifuge Qualities of the Peruvian Bark, in an agreeable and concentrated state; Tincture of Cubebs; Wine of Colchicum Seed, used for Rheumatic Affections; Essence of Camphor, for making Camphor Julep; Harrogate and Leamington Salts.

The following Articles are also sold, by appointment of the Proprietors, viz. The LANCASTER BLACK DROP, which many of the most eminent Physicians and Surgeons prescribe and employ in preference, to any other preparation of Opium.

RUSSIA AND TURKEY.

OFFICIAL NOTE OF THE OTTOMAN PORTE, ADDRESSED TO M. MINZIAKI, CHARGE D'AFFAIRES OF RUSSIA.

Dated the 7th of the Moon Lezival, the Year 1241 (13th May, 1826.)

"The Sublime Porte has considered the contents of the official note dated the 24th of March, which the Charge d'Affaires, our very enlightened friend M. Minziaki, delivered in the last conference. The translation of this note bears in substance, that his Majesty the Emperor of Russia actuated by his pure and benevolent intentions, requires and desires that the mode of nomination and the powers of the Bechlis Agas, as well as the numbers of the Bechlis soldiers in the provinces, should be re-established on the same footing as before the commencement of the disturbances—that the Servian Deputies, who are now at Constantinople, under the care of the Bostanghi Pacha should be set at liberty, and that there should be appointed on both sides Plenipotentiaries to repair to the frontiers to conduct and terminate, by the aid of mutual arrangements equally satisfactory, the negociations previously entered upon at Constantinople between the delegates of the Sublime Porte and the ci-devant Ministers of the Court of Russia, M. de Strogonoff, which had been suspended by intervening events.

"It is manifest, and generally known, that at all times the Sublime Porte, in labouring to execute fully the stipulations and the engagements which it had contracted with all friendly and neighbouring Powers, has constantly endeavoured to maintain with them the relations of a good understanding. In consequence of this principle, equally animated with a desire of regulating, in a manner conformable to the clear stipulation of treaties, the objects on which the respective delegates had previously begun to negociate, and wishing to set aside and destroy every ground of similar discussions between the two Courts, the Sublime Porte will not permit itself at any time to refuse its consent to such an arrangement, according to the basis and the principles then adopted. Besides, his Majesty the Emperor of Russia, moved by a sentiment of integrity and good faith, having now testified to the benevolence of his heart, the desire of employing the most proper means to cement the bonds of a sincere friendship between the two empires, and having proposed to negociate according to treaties in all right and justice, and without mixing with them other questions, the Sublime Porte finds in this step a proof of the eminent equity and moderation which characterises that Monarch. Thus wishing on his side, to testify to his said Majesty a high deference and particular regard, the Sublime Porte hastens promptly to execute the demands above-mentioned, considering the sincere and cordial adherence which it gives them as a happy presage of the approaching re-establishment of harmony between the two Courts.

"In the first place, the intention of the Sublime Porte was to preserve, along with the established privileges which the two principalities of Moldavia and Wallachia enjoy, peace and public tranquillity in the provinces, and without any interested view; the Sublime Porte considered the existence of the Bechlis Agas, and of their people, as necessary to the maintenance of harmony. Nevertheless, as this was not a thing which ought to be preferred to the desire of a great friend, an order dispatched separately to the Governor of Silistra enjoins him to withdraw from this side of the Danube the Bash Bechlis Agas with their people; and another order, dispatched separately to Waywode, enjoins them to nominate themselves the Bechlis Agas, destined to replace their predecessors. At the same time with regard to the number and employment of simple Bechlis every thing is to be arranged exactly as before the insurrection. In this manner the status quo is re-established in the two principalities. In like manner the Servian nation, participating in all the favours which the great mercy of his Highness affords to all her nations subject to the Sublime Porte, there has been shown on his part towards the same nation an excess of benevolence and protection. If, then, for some time past the Deputies at Constantinople have been retained as hostages in a situation apart, this measure has only been dictated by a sentiment of solicitude for the well-being and tranquillity of their nation. At the same time, as it is notorious that up to the present moment the said Servian nation has kept aloof from uniting itself with other malcontents, and as the term of the stay of the said deputies has been prolonged, therefore, to regulate henceforward with them demands which might not be contrary to the condition of their Rajah, on the request of the said deputies, who are now at Constantinople, we have caused them to leave their abode, and to lodge in a house, which they formerly occupied at the Fanal. On the other hand, as according to information recently received from the Pacha, who is Governor of Belgrade, it has been proposed to replace the old deputies by new ones: this intention coinciding otherwise with that of his Highness, and out of regard for the good will of the Emperor of Russia, the article for liberating the said deputies has been executed immediately.

"In the third place, with regard to what concerns the nomination of the respective Plenipotentiaries, as it has been expressly said in the note cited above, that the renewal of the discussions, formerly commenced at Constantinople by M. de Strogonoff, is founded upon the benevolent intention of consolidating the harmony between the two States, and the great desire of the Sublime Porte being thus to execute according to clear stipulations existing treaties, the consent of the Sublime Porte to the demands of the Court of Russia, reposing upon these treaties, takes place in the hope of seeing the relations of a good understanding confirmed between the two Courts by means of conferences, in which will be adopted the principles previously established, without raising pretensions out of the limits of the treaties, without introducing new clauses, or without wishing to change, extend, or modify the existing stipulations, the parties confining themselves in every thing to the clear letter of those treaties, and conforming their strict meaning.

"For this purpose, and in order to be always faithful to principles previously established, the Minister of the Sublime Porte, Seid Mehemed Hadi Effendi, at present Comptroller of Anatolia, has been nominated Plenipotentiary, and the Mollah Seid Ibrahim Afel Effendi, invested with the rank of Mollah of Scutaria, and provisional Cadi of Sophia, has been nominated second Plenipotentiary, to confer on the frontiers with the Plenipotentiaries of the Court of Russia, who will be appointed and announced for that purpose. The execution of all these points on the part of the Sublime Porte, the proofs of deference and respect which it has just given, being worthy of the justice which characterize his Imperial Majesty, as likewise the language of honour which it has employed, his Highness hopes that in return his said Majesty will make a point to execute and confirm the existing stipulations which will cement more and more friendship and harmony between the two Courts. It is in order to express this hope, and to declare likewise in writing to our friend the Charge d'Affaires the execution of the above articles (although a notification had been already made to him by the intervention of his dragoman, M. Panchiui) that the present official note has been drawn up and delivered."

GREEK PIRACIES.

Extract of a letter from Captain John Quick, of the schooner Tantivy, to his owners, Messrs. Fox, Sons, and Co. Plymouth, dated Smyrna, June 2, 1826:—

"As Mr. Hayes wrote you on the 10th ult. informing you of my arrival, I did not write, but waited until this post, when I beg to give you an account of the Tantivy having been plundered on the 15th ult. on the passage from Messina to this, in a calm, off the north end of Zea, by two armed messtrias, which are a kind of latteen-rigged vessels, with a square topsail forward, and with from twenty to thirty men in each; and two others of larger size lay on their oars close alongside, and ready to receive the cargo, if any suitable, with about sixty men in each. They used no violence, but plundered the vessel of tar, varnish, paints, brushes, buckets, water casks, trumpet, deep sea line, knives and forks, spoons, bread, fish, cordage, and a variety of small articles; I judge the loss about ten or twelve pounds. They likewise broke open the seamen's chests, and took part of their clothes; my private loss was trifling; one of them took the watch out of my pocket, but, from threatening, he gave it me back again. We fared much better than our neighbours. After they put off, three other larger ones came off from the shore, but the breeze springing up, we made our escape. There are now five English vessels in the bay, which have been plundered to a considerable extent, of cargo, stores, clothes, &c.: the brig Iris, from Liverpool, the day before me, (I have no doubt by the same gang) of 37 packages, to the amount, with stores, of 5000l. and two other masters and sailors of every thing; one of the masters lost even the trowsers he had on him; and on their arrival he was under the necessity of waiting for clothes to be made before he could go on shore. On my arrival I made my report to the Commodore, Captain Hamilton, who took down every particular, and sent an officer from each of the ships in port, to examine log and crew, but he seems to say he can do nothing, as having no orders, but he now sends convoy with the merchant vessels up and down the Archipelago, as far as he is able, but has not ships enough. Since I have been writing, the brig Helen has arrived from London, plundered of great part of her cargo; they say to the amount of 20,000l."

NEWS FROM CAPTAIN FRANKLIN.

The following is contained in a letter to the Editor of the Detroit Gazette, from a Gentleman at the Sault St. Marie, dated April 19:—

"The ground is still covered with more than two feet of snow, and the river fast held in the embraces of winter. During the winter the weather has been incredibly severe, though the extreme cold, as indicated by spirits of wine, was but 35 degrees below zero. From a correct register of the depth of snow, taken as it fell, we find an aggregate of seventeen and a half feet, and it is now snowing very fast.

"One of Captain Franklin's party, who is the bearer of dispatches from the Admiralty Office, passed this post on the 2d of April, from whom we learn, through the agents of the Hudson Bay Company, that Captain Franklin reached the shores of the Arctic Sea on the 14th of August, without encountering any of the Esquimaux in descending M'Kenzie's River, they having retired to their glacial habitations still nearer the magnetic pole. After remaining two days on the coast the party returned to Bear Lake, where arrangements had been made for their winter residence by the Hudson Bay Company, at which place the bearer of the dispatches left them on the 6th of September. Dr. Richardson had in the mean time been in search of the copper mountain alluded to in the printed Journal.

"It is to be hoped that the severity of the weather will not prevent an early movement of the party this spring. We have reason to believe that the rigour of their winter has been increased in ratio corresponding to their latitude, from the number of rein-deer that have been seen in this quarter—which would have taken place only in consequence of unusual difficulties in subsisting themselves in a region still more inhospitable than this."

PROVINCIAL INTELLIGENCE.

THE HARVEST.

SOMERSETSHIRE.—The dairy farms in this county have suffered dreadfully in their hay crops, on account of the excessive drought, but this week the occasional showers have revived the hopes of the farmers; they will improve the after-grass, and render the crops more productive. The crops of hay have not been bad generally; while in some fields it scarcely pays the labour of mowing and making; in others, there has been great abundance. The wheat promises well.

The wheat harvest has partially commenced, and will, if the weather continues fine, become general in about a week or ten days. In the more hilly parts of the county, the crops have sustained considerable damage from the continued drought; many spots may be seen where the wheat is literally parched up.—Bury Gazette.

The weather has been for some time extremely favourable to the corn harvest. With sufficient warmth, we have had refreshing showers of rain, that cannot fail to have a beneficial and obvious effect on vegetation. Some barley was last week cut, between Corbridge and Hexham, and oats have been sheared, within the last day or two, at Elswick, near this town. This fine weather, however, comes too late for the hay harvest; that has suffered dreadfully from the want of rain. The price of hay will be immediately from 4l. to 5l. we understand; and we should not be surprised if it is considerably higher in the winter.—Tyne Mercury.

Unwilling to increase the mass of distressing intelligence respecting the state of the country, we have waited week after week anxiously hoping to be able to give some account of the revival of trade in this neighbourhood; but up to the present time, so far as we can learn, no change for the better has taken place. There is scarcely any thing to do among the manufacturers, and the subscription raised for the relief of the unemployed poor is fast wasting away. Yet Sheffield is, perhaps, one of the last places which should give way to despair. The power of production, by the application and improvement of machinery, has not increased here as has been the case in the clothing districts, consequently, as the different markets have not been so glutted with our manufactures as with some others, we may therefore hope that a returning demand will take place at no distant period, to give employment and subsistence to many who are now wanting bread. —Sheffield Iris.

MIDDLETON, July 16.—About twelve o'clock last night the inhabitants of this place were surprised by the sudden appearance of 200 or 250 men, armed with sticks and bludgeons. At the time of their arrival every thing was going on as usual in the place—shops and public-houses were open, and people were looking after their ordinary concerns. But the unexpected intrusion of these strangers caused an instant change in the appearance of things—every body was filled with amazement or alarm. The rioters came from towards Manchester, and halted in the Market-place. Some of them were heard to say, "Here are shops, we can help ourselves to provisions, and here are shoes, let us each get a pair." They came in military array, and halted in their ranks, at the word of command. By their speech, their leaders were known to be Irish. One man spoke aloud, and said, "If any honest man is prepared with arms, and disposed to join us, he will be made welcome"—but nobody came out—not one inhabitant of Middleton joined them. Presently a noise was heard, and a cry that the soldiers were coming. Some then left their ranks, but the main body passed up Wood-street, and retreated across a place called Archer Park, and the Great Park, into the old road to Manchester, by which route they escaped. The military, a party of the Queen's Bays, now made their appearance, accompanied by Messrs. Norris and Foster, magistrates, the boroughreeve of Manchester, and several constables; and had it not been for their timely arrival, there is every reason to believe that the work of plunder would have commenced. Nothing, however, was now left for them to do but to look after odd stragglers, two of whom were taken and conveyed to Manchester, having confessed they came with the mob. Three others were taken this morning by a watchman, and one is now in the duageon here. He is a young man, poor, emaciated in appearance. He says he was in St. George's road when the mob came up, and he was compelled by them to fall into the ranks, and to come with them to Middleton. After the retreat of the rioters, the soldiers paraded the streets and lanes, and were received at several places with hooting and shouting, and other expressions of disapprobation, but no stones were thrown, nor any violence offered. At one time the soldiers took two young men into custody, belonging to the town. Whilst searching them, one of the lads cried out, "I ha but three-hapence, and yon munna tak it." "No, no," replied the soldiers, "we won't take your money, my lads, we would much rather give you some."

MANCHESTER, July 16.—Last night a meeting of several thousands of the working classes took place near Ancoats-street, at one of the outskirts of the town. The object of it seemed to be, how to remove their present distresses. The crowd was harangued by several speakers—one, particularly, dressed in a blue frock coat. There was something said about the Middleton people and their delegates, and about taking up arms, and delivering themselves from present difficulties. At this period three persons made their appearance, and stated that the Middleton people were armed and ready to come out. It was then resolved to march to Middleton forthwith, and join the body there. They accordingly set off for that place, but were quickly followed by the soldiers and several magistrates, who dispersed them, and took a number of prisoners.

SHOCKING OCCURRENCE.—On Tuesday morning last, a Coroner's Inquest was held at the Royal Oak Inn, St. James's-street, Brighton, on the body of Robert Bedford, a child nine years old, son of Mr. Bedford, proctor, of Bedford-row, Holborn, whose family is now residing at 14, New-Steyne. It appeared from the evidence, that the deceased and several other persons were assembled on Monday last, to witness the trial of Captain Mauby's life-preserver, at the outer head of the Chain Pier. The apparatus was fastened to the Pier, and the mortar was loaded with two or three ounces of gunpowder, an iron ball of about 5lbs. weight being put into the mortar, to which was attached a chain 18 feet in length, and at the end of the chain was a rope about 20 fathoms in length. The deceased was kneeling on the right hand of the mortar to witness the experiment, and immediately on the mortar being fired was seen to fall down. On being taken up, it appeared that he was wounded on the right jaw bone, and there was also a wound an inch and a half in length in the neck, which completely divided the carotid artery, and caused his death. There was no blame attached to any person attending the apparatus. The deceased was about two yards from the apparatus, when he received the wound by a broken link of the chain that was incautiously attached to the iron ball (which was placed in the mortar) instead of a rope. There were two or three persons wounded besides, but, fortunately, not seriously. The parents are inconsolable for the loss. The Jury returned a verdict of "Accidental Death," with a deodand on the chain of 1s. There were a great many spectators on the Pier at the time of the accident; and it was suggested that the experiment should be tried on the beach instead of the Pier; but this was over-ruled, on the ground that there would be equal danger, from persons crowding round the apparatus there.

CUNNING HORSE-STEALER.—Mr. Dickins, of Waters Upton, in this county, having had two horses stolen, advertised them, and was soon informed that the horses and the thief were at Buxton. Mr. Dickins set off thither, and identified his horse. The prisoner, while being conducted to Shrewsbury, was suddenly seized with violent pains in the bowels, and requested permission to ride. One of the horses being a heavy draught horse, and the other a valuable roadster, he preferred the latter, and alleging that riding without a saddle occasioned additional pain in his bowels, he was kindly indulged with a saddle, and his handcuffs taken off one hand. When they arrived near Knightly-wood, the villain galloped off, and has not since been heard of by his compassionate attendants.—Shrewsbury Chronicle.

Among the features of the late remarkable drought, it may be mentioned that Lincoln spring water, drawn from the conduits, formed an article of export to Boston by the steam packet boats.

At a public meeting held at Lancaster on Friday se'nnight, it was agreed to establish a Joint Stock Banking Company in that town. The capital stock of the Company is to be 300,000l., divided into 3,000 shares of 100l. each; and no person to hold less than 5, nor more than 100 shares.—Liverpool Advertiser.

DREADFUL RIOT.—At the fair of Kilfeacle on Monday, no business was done, on account of a tremendous riot between two factions under the titles of the Hickeys and Hogans, each party consisting of three to four hundred men, armed with muskets, pistols, bayonets, scythes, &c. They had been making preparations for this affray a month before. It appears two men were killed, one a desperate character of the name of Duggan, who had been corporal in the 84th Foot, the same who suffered two years' confinement in Clonmel gaol for a felonious assault upon a female child, and who deserted from that regiment since his liberation from prison. Mr. Thompson held an Inquest on his body in Tipperary on Monday evening. Another man of the name of Trehy was also killed in the affray at Kilfeacle; and two men, of the name of Carey and Peters (the last named was lately arraigned under a charge of murder at the Clonmel Assizes) were wounded. The military from Tipperary, and the police from different stations, were on the spot in the morning, under the direction of magistrates, who also attended the fair, to prevent the disorder; but as these went home early, the opposite factions came in contact, and battle and death ensued between the deluded wretches. Several wounded were supposed to have scrambled into the surrounding corn-fields, and their number or condition were not known at the time our correspondent closed their letters.—Clonmel Advertiser of Wednesday.

DREADFUL EFFECTS OF ANGER.

Amongst the many dreadful occurrences which fall under our notice, we have to add the following lamentable case of manslaughter. What renders it the more distressing to the feelings is, that the crime has been perpetrated by a father upon the person of his son, an infant of between six and seven years of age, and the dreadful catastrophe arose from giving way to an unbounded fit of passion, excited by a cause the most trivial.—The unhappy man, who now stands charged, upon the Coroner's warrant, for the offence, is a Mr. Ranton, a person about fifty years of age, and holding a respectable situation in society, that of steward to Thomas Bonar, Esq. of Elmstead Lodge, about two miles below Bromley, Kent. From the few facts that have come to our knowledge, it appears that the child was in the habit of going daily to school to Bromley, but on account of the distance, the child returned home only once a day, at the close of the school, in the evening. About ten days since, the boy, upon leaving school, loitered on his way, which occasioned him to arrive home considerably after the usual time. Upon going in doors, his father questioned him as to the cause which had kept him so long, and not being able to give a satisfactory answer, the unguarded parent ordered the child into a room. On entering the room, the door was fastened by the father, when it appeared he took up the rail of a chair, which was lying upon the floor, and began to chastise the poor child in a most unmerciful manner; the cries of the child only served to exasperate the frenzied fit which had taken possession of the father. The child, endeavouring to avoid the blows, stooped, when, horrible to relate, the stick alighted with the utmost violence upon the back part of the child's head; and in an instant he fell senseless on the ground, the blood gushing in torrents from the wound. The unhappy man, upon seeing the fatal effects which his passion had occasioned, instantly gave the alarm. The intelligence was quickly carried to the house of his master, and a messenger was despatched for surgical aid. In the course of a quarter of an hour, a surgeon arrived, who attempted to bleed the child; but medical aid was of no avail, the vital spark having fled. Upon the surgeon examining the wound, he found the scull fractured, which had produced a concussion of the brain, and which was the immediate cause of his death. The medical gentleman, upon finding his skill of no use, inquired how the accident had occurred? when a female, who was present, stated, that the parent of the child had been chastising him with a stirrup, the buckle of which had entered the head. At this instant, the unfortunate mother rushed into the room, exclaiming that her child had been murdered, and that it had been done by the rail of the chair, and not the stirrup. A further examination then took place, when a violent blow was discovered near the abdomen, which, from the discolouration, was evidently produced by a kick—but which the same female endeavoured to account for, by saying that the child had been bathed with strong vinegar.

Upon the day following the dreadful catastrophe, the Coroner held an inquest on the body, when, after the examination of two witnesses, a verdict of "Manslaughter" was returned; and the unfortunate man was committed to Maidstone gaol, to take his trial at the Assizes for the offence.

The dreadful occurrence has plunged the family of Mr. Bonar into a state of the greatest distress, arising from the deed being perpetrated upon the estate, to which they had removed, from Chislehurst, upon the dreadful and diabolical act committed there some years since, by an Italian footman of the family, upon his parents.

The prisoner, besides the victim of his passion, has a daughter somewhat younger than the deceased child.

Travellers to the Continent will find much valuable information, and many important hints respecting the objects most worthy the attention of an enlightened taste, in those interesting works, "The English in Italy," and "Recollections of a Pedestrian," both of which contain a variety of personal observations, which must prove particularly beneficial to those meditating a foreign excursion.

Two young women (sisters) of the name of Heden, in service, obtained leave to visit their parents, residing at Plaistow, in Essex, last Monday week, it being their father's club day (held at the Black Lion) and enjoyed themselves in apparent harmony. Upon returning home between nine and ten o'clock, they had to pass the Abbey Mill, when one of them suddenly jumped into the water. The other sister immediately rushed in, regardless of danger, and both must have inevitably perished, had not their cries brought the carman, who had the care of the mill, to their assistance, who fortunately rescued them from a watery grave. They were afterwards taken to the work-house at West Ham, where every attention was paid them. The one who attempted self-destruction has not since recovered her reason, and it is supposed she committed the rash act under the impression that she had been slighted during the evening by a young man upon whom she had placed her affections.

The duties paid on French and East India manufactured goods are less than was anticipated: 70,000l. paid July 6, the first day allowed for importation—Friday only 10,000l., and Saturday very inconsiderable.

Lord Strangford—By the last packet, letters were received from our Ambassador at St. Petersburgh, stating that he will return home in August, having had leave of absence on the score of ill health.

The late Viscountess Strangford.—This lady was the sister of Sir John Bourke, of Marble Hill, in the county of Galway, Bart. She was the maternal aunt to the Marquis of Clanricarde, who was lately married to the only daughter of the Secretary for Foreign Affairs; but she was more distinguished as the wife of Peter Viscount Strangford, whose name for some years has been celebrated in Europe, both in the walks of literature and diplomacy. Strongly attached to her husband, she accompanied him to the Courts of Sweden, Turkey, and Russia, where the affability of her manners, and the unaffected kindness of her disposition, endeared her to all. While in Turkey, these amiable qualities had but too frequent opportunities of displaying themselves. Among the applicants to her kind offices, and to her bounty, were numerous families of Greeks, whom it was impossible, in the first fury of the insurrection, to countenance or assist openly; but to these unfortunates her bounty flowed in many a secret channel. Slaves were redeemed, domestic affliction consoled, and the objects never knew to whose kind heart and liberal hand they were indebted. The cause of Lady Strangford's death, in St. Petersburgh, was an illness, that supervened on her confinement. While conversing with a friend one evening, she was suddenly seized with a spasmodic attack, which terminated in a state of insensibility that continued eighteen hours, when she gradually expired without a struggle. She had requested, in the event of her death abroad, that it might not be marked by any funeral pomp, but that she should be privately interred in the burying ground allotted to the British and other foreigners. Her body was, therefore, removed to the Roman Catholic Chapel, and the next day a solemn funeral service was performed. It was on this occasion that the esteem and good-will she had raised spontaneously displayed themselves. The immense Chapel was crowded by an unbidden congregation, among whom were the whole diplomatic body. The Ambassadors of the different Sovereigns of Europe, with their suites, attended, not with the indifference of ceremony and parade, but with the feeling of personal friends. It was even proposed that they themselves should be the bearers of the body to its last resting place; but, having been enclosed in a leaden coffin, it was found too heavy, and was, therefore, conveyed in a hearse to its final abode, where it lies in a green spot shaded with young trees.

THE ARMY.

The Depot of the 9th (East Norfolk) Regiment of Infantry, has received orders to proceed from Winchester to Plymouth.

The Depot of the 64th (2d Staffordshire) Regiment of Foot, is ordered, on being relieved at Plymouth by the Depot of the 9th Regiment, to proceed to Jersey.

The 17th (Leicestershire) Regiment of Infantry, is shortly expected to arrive at Liverpool, from Scotland.

A Detachment of the 39th (Dorsetshire) Regiment of Foot, recently embarked, as a guard, on board the Speke convict ship, which will proceed, in a few days, with 154 male convicts, from Woolwich for Sydney.

GENERAL COURT MARTIAL.

Head-Quarters, Jan. 5, 1826.

At a General Court Martial held at Head-Quarters of the Grand Army, Camp, before Bhurtpore, on the 22d day of December, 1825, Lieutenant Edward Griffiths, of his Majesty's 59th Regiment of Foot, was arraigned on the following charges, viz.:—

1st Charge—"For coming to the mess of his Majesty's 59th Regiment, on the afternoon of the 24th November, 1825, in a state of intoxication, such conduct being disgraceful to the character of an officer and a gentleman.

2d Charge—"For being drunk on the morning of the 25th November, 1825, whilst the Regiment was on the march from Ferozabad to Etamaúpore, both charges being in breach of the Articles of War."

Deliberation—The Court having maturely weighed the evidence for the prosecution, and for the defence, and what the prisoner hath urged in his justification—

Finding—Do find him, the said Lieut. Edward Griffiths, of his Majesty's 59th Foot, guilty of the charges, and of every part thereof.

Sentence—The Court adjudge the prisoner, Lieut. Edward Griffiths, of his Majesty's 59th Foot, to be cashiered.

Approved and confirmed, but, in consideration of his distressed circumstances, as represented by his Commanding Officer, his length of service, and his having purchased his first Commission, Mr. Griffiths will be recommended to be allowed the sale of his Ensigncy. (Signed) COMBERMERE, General.
Commander-in-Chief in India.

Mr. Griffiths is to be struck off the strength of the 59th regiment from the date of this order being made known to him, and he is to be directed to repair to Calcutta forthwith, where, upon his arrival, he will report himself to the Town Major of Fort William.

The foregoing Order to be entered in the General Order-book, and read at the head of every regiment in his Majesty's service in India.

CHESHIRE QUARTER SESSIONS.

Mary Moran, alias Jones, aged twenty-five, a lady very splendidly dressed, and decorated with a profusion of yellow ribbons, and her tongue withal "tipped with a bit of the brogue," was charged with stealing, on the 8th of April, nineteen sovereigns, one half-sovereign, two gilt seals, and other articles, the property of Mr. Shaw, of Hyde. The prosecutor is the landlord of the Navigation Inn, at Hyde; and a few days previous to the last Chester Assizes, where he was in attendance as a witness, he put 147 sovereigns in a particular desk, or chest of drawers, in his bedroom. During his absence, his wife had given gold in exchange for notes to several individuals; and, according to the account she rendered him, there were twenty-one sovereigns remaining in the desk. The prisoner had been in the service of the prosecutor about eleven weeks, when she opened the drawer in which this money was deposited, (the keys of the above chest were left in one of the drawers,) and took out the money and the two seals named in the indictment.—The manner in which the prisoner was detected is not a little curious. About half-past six o'clock on Friday morning, while the landlord was absent at Chester, the waiter, whose name is Alcock, came down stairs, and happening to look in at the door of a small parlour, he saw reflected in a looking-glass opposite, the prisoner, who was seated on a sofa in the act of counting the sovereigns into a white net purse. He communicated his suspicions on this subject to his mistress, and it was arranged between them, that the latter should be called up in great haste; and that Alcock should search her bed while she was in attendance on her mistress. He did so, and found concealed under the mattrass the above named white purse, containg nineteen and a half sovereigns and the two seals, all of which he suffered to remain where he found them. The next day, Mr. Shaw returned from Chester, and the prisoner was searched by Wood, a constable, when the purse and its contents were found concealed in a very peculiar manner on her person. The naivete, with which Wood gave his evidence, created roars of laughter in Court, and even discomposed the gravity of the Bench itself.

Mrs. Shaw, a very portly lady, the hostess of the Navigation Inn, was called to prove some particular facts, and she underwent a severe cross-examination by the prisoner, whose self-possession never forsook her during the trial. The Court was convulsed with laughter during this part of the proceeding: the landlady cried, "Oh! the ridiculous woman! Dear me! I shall be ill; I shall certainly be ill—I know I shall—Indeed I shall—Oh, you wicked woman; she's a most ridiculous woman, there's not a word of truth in what she says, Gentlemen."

The prisoner addressed the Jury at great length in her defence, and they, without hesitation, found a verdict of Guilty.

The Chairman in passing sentence, animadverted in strong terms upon the enormity of the offence of which the prisoner had been found guilty. He regretted to find that it was not the first time she had been before a Court of Justice.* The Court must mark their sense of the magnitude of her offence by an exemplary punishment. The sentence upon her, therefore, was, that she be transported for seven years, and in the mean time, imprisoned in Chester Castle to hard labour.

On hearing this sentence, the prisoner took occasion to faint; but she gave sufficient indication of her intention to enable those about her to prevent her falling down in the dock.

* The prisoner was tried at the last Lancaster Summer Assizes for the murder of her illegitimate child, and acquitted.

MISCELLANEOUS.

It is stated in a Paris Paper that Vice-Admiral Marquis Paulnini, who commands the Austrian squadron in the Levant, has sent to his Court for fresh instructions immediately, on learning the expected arrival of Lord Cochrane in these seas.

A Public Meeting was to be held at New York last month, consisting of the most respectable citizens in that place, and of British residents there, "to devise some means, or adopt some measures, for the relief, if practicable," of the distressed manufacturers in England.

The glove manufacturers at Yeovil are resuming their former activity. It appears that the protecting duty on French gloves, together with the facility afforded to the home manufacturer by the removal of the Excise restrictions, and the diminution of the leather duties, has very much quieted the fears of foreign competition.

A serious affray took place last Thursday (fair-day) in Clones, in the absence of the police, who were in attendance at the Election in Monaghan. About three hundred men, calling themselves "the Dairy boys," assembled in Market-street, and commenced huzzaing for "the tree of liberty," down with the Protestants," and instantly commenced an attack on them. The loyalists of Clones rallied, and immediately cleared the town of the pretended champions for the tree of liberty.—Fermanagh F. Journal.

The trial of M'Gregor and others, for a conspiracy to defraud, by selling titles and disposing of land, &c. in Poyais, took place before the Royal Court of Paris, upon an appeal from the Tribunal of Correctional Police, on the 11th instant, and continued during the 12th and 13th. A great number of witnesses were examined, among whom was M. Merilhon, the Advocate, who declared that he considered M'Gregor to be a very honourable man, and his title to the territory of which he claimed the sovereignty to be indisputable. The Court, after a deliberation of three hours, acquitted M'Gregor and the other prisoners (with the exception of Lehuby, his Parisian agent, who appears to have used false representations in negociating for his client,) and ordered them to be set at liberty. Lehuby, who had been sentenced by the Tribunal of Correctional Police to two years imprisonment, has had it reduced to thirteen months by the Royal Court.

The Death of Weber.—A song, bearing this title, which bids fair to rival in popularity even the most esteemed and highly estimated musical compositions of the present day, has just made its appearance, with an admirable likeness of Weber on the frontispiece. The words, which are beautifully poetical, and excellently adapted to the melancholy subject of the deceased composer, are by J. R. Planche, Esq. The song is composed by Mr. Braham, in which he has most happily introduced a great portion of those beautiful airs in Der Freischutz, with which the public have long since been familiar. The commencement of this song is the entire composition of Mr. Braham, and even when compared to the beauties of Weber's transcendant genius, judges have pronounced it to be in the finest keeping, thus reflecting the highest credit on the scientificabilities of this eminent vocalist, and adding another laurel to the fame which he has already so justly acquired by his former efforts.

The Reports from the gaols, which were ordered by the last Parliament, have been lately published. We most earnestly desire that every person in the empire could have it in his power to examine these Reports. It would be seen by them how attentive, how correct, how exact, how minute, is the superintendance over every department of prison discipline, under the eye of the present government. It is now almost impossible that any abuses should occur without immediate detection; it is altogether impossible that any vestige of the tyrannical conduct which prevailed in our prisons—as it indeed prevailed in all prisons, where, for whatever reasons, the final superintending power was inaccessible, or accessible with great difficulty—should be again complained of.

Music.—Elementary principles and practices for singing, being a compendium of exercises in Solfeggi simplified and explained, for improvement in syllabic articulation and delivery of words, as well as tone of voice and execution. By T. Philipps, of Dublin; published by Willis and Co. St. James's-street.—We are happy to find that musical instruction, in its various branches, begins at length to assume a systematic form, and that the plan of learning by rote, without demonstrating or inculcating any principle for future guidance, is now in the progress of total abandonment. Its last strong hold was in the vocal department, the necessary simplicity of the exercises affording a tempting facility to the pupil, and the indolent master to rely on the ear, or what we should more properly term the musical memory, for the acquirement of the given subjects of instruction. The very general introduction, however, of the elaborate productions of the foreign schools, has reduced this temptation surprisingly; mere memory has been found to be a very unsafe guide through their scientific mazes, and hence, the necessity of reference to those principles of instruction pursued where they were produced, and an adaptation of them to our own wants and circumstances. Scarcely less important is the developement of those various and ingenious expedients which the skill and sagacity of the foreign vocalists have supplied for the purpose of improving the voice in quality, volume, and compass, and producing distinct and expressive enunciation. Mr. Philipps remarks truly that "Italian authority cannot be doubted on any point relative to forming, training, or improving the singing voice." Mr. P. has attended most carefully to English vocal pronunciation. To the many who cannot, or will not discriminate for themselves, this part of the work must prove extremely valuable; every one attempting to sing should examine himself by some such standard as that which Mr. Philipps presents, and he will have reason to conclude, perhaps, that he is not so sinless in this particular as his own good opinion may have led him to imagine. The usual ornaments come under Mr. Philipps's consideration, and that most essential point, the management of the breath. Supposing his reader acquainted with the rudiments of music, he sets forth with him from an advanced point of his journey, and thus his attention is turned more effectively to those particulars which distinguish the finished performer. It has been no part of his design, however, to render his work a substitute for the assistance of an able master, his experience having convinced him that no specific in that case ever was, or ever will be found. But we have no hesitation in asserting that the master will find it a most valuable auxiliary.

The treadmill has been imported into Demerara, as one of the punishments under the new regulations of Government. It has spread terror through the whole Colony, particularly as one of the first of the negroes ordered to the mill was obstinate, refused to work, fell back, and was killed on the spot!

Remarkable good Fortune.—The following romantic story verifies the Proverb, "Cast your bread on the waters, and you will find it after many days," to the letter. Mr. Kinsman, a highly respectable butcher, near the Elephant and Castle, has lately come into possession of a very considerable estate in the county of Devon, in a singular and unexpected manner. A few years ago, a person having all the manners of a gentleman, but very much reduced in life, drew the attention of Mr. Kinsman, by his frequently coming to his shop for small bits of meat, from which circumstance, he entered into conversation with him, and finding him in the greatest possible distress, not only supplied him with meat for his dinner for upwards of twelve months, but became his friend in many other respects. About six years since the person disappeared, and from that time, till within these few months, he never heard any thing of him; and it now turns out that he became possessed of very large property in the county of Devon, at which place he died a few months ago, leaving Mr. K. the estate above named, which is supposed to be worth 500l. a year. Mr. K. will set off in a few days to take possession.

NOTICES TO CORRESPONDENTS.

A writer, under the signature of VERITAS, asks our opinion of the Lady of Sir THOMAS FARQUHAR, the banker of St. James's-street, giving a public breakfast at Roehampton ON SUNDAY LAST, to two hundred fashionables?—it is this, that considering the day which her Ladyship selected for the occasion, she could not well have done a more disreputable thing.

We have been too much occupied to devote the attention we could wish to the interesting novel of ALLA GIORNATA, but we will endeavour to do so, if possible, in our next number.

AN ADMIRER OF THE AGE is thanked for his communication —his Epigram is not worth insertion, but we shall always avail ourselves of any hint he may furnish us.

Several communications have been received respecting the man, ANTHONY SALISBURY, and his expulsion from the Clubs— we have commented thereon—the other man stated, by a mistake of the Herald, to be expelled from St. James's-street, is a Mr. TAYLOR, and Member of the Stratford Club.

A letter, signed CASTIGATOR, from Dublin, has been received, and although we have not room for a dissertation on its contents, we entirely concur with the sentiments of the writer.

The CHARACTER OF A LONDON BANKER has come to hand— the writer calls it a satyr, and though we know one answering that description, we presume he means satire.

FREDERICK PAPT, of 15, Portman-street, is requested to send his letters to those to whom he gave his orders.

THE AGE.

LONDON, JULY 23.

We are delighted in being able to record the uninterrupted enjoyment by the KING of good health, to the security of which, the retirement of Windsor, and the nature of His MAJESTY'S pursuits, is materially calculated to tend. We could not invoke a greater benediction on the land, than the continuation of a blessing which must insure to every class of his subjects a perpetuity of happiness, with a distribution among them of a portion of those means and comforts which are allotted to the KING himself. The present week has testified this feeling in a manner to which the annals of no preceding reign can adduce any parallel, His MAJESTY having added to the subscription list in behalf of the sufferers in Spital-fields a third DONATION OF ONE THOUSAND POUNDS. To a heart as accessible as that of GEORGE THE FOURTH, it is almost superfluous to convey any expression of popular gratitude, as the desire in his breast of bestowing the least relief on his afflicted people, supersedes even a thought the most remote of its appreciation; but we may venture, with humility, to observe, they wait but for some public opportunity to raise their applauding voices, which, after all, are only the faint echoes of their hearts, from the very bottom of each of which the constant and daily theme is this:—

" ——— May he live
" Longer than I have time to tell his years!
" Ever beloved, and loving, may his rule be;
" And when Old Time shall lead him to his end,
" Goodness and he fill up one monument."

The distresses under which the country to a certain general extent, but the manufacturing part of it particularly, is now labouring, has naturally become the theme of universal comment, as well as universal sympathy and commiseration, but to those who not only well know the times in which we live, but many of the characters who are permitted to exist in those times, it will cease to be a matter of surprise that the very feelings which are entertained for the distresses of some, should be by others misconstrued into a thousand shapes of the most deceitful and mischievous bearing. The grand outcry raised by all the malcontents of the land is of course against the Government, whose officers stand accused not merely of bringing about all the ruin which surrounds us, but of falling back and slackening in their exertions, at the very moment when public calamity should call them into action; an outcry which has, we regret to say, in some respects, assumed a more serious form than a mere ebullition of language, even of this nature, is at all calculated to create. COBBETT'S Register of yesterday contains the following extract from an address to the weaver boys of Lancashire:—

"When on the 29th of last month, I, returning from Preston, was met by the good people of Stockport, who conducted me into and through that populous and public-spirited town, there was, at the entrance of the town, a man, who having jumped up upon the hinder part of the open carriage in which I was, and having got hold of my right hand, held my arm up, while, waving his other hand over his head, he exclaimed, 'There, lads! Here is the LONG ARM that reached THE TYRANTS across the Atlantic!' As soon as I got released from his hand, I stooped down, and said to Mr. Clarke, who was sitting on the seat of the carriage, 'These people will never lie down like dogs, and starve in silence.'"

Whether the appearance of such a miserable wretch as COBBETT, in this part of our provinces, may have led to the disquietude now prevalent there, we cannot take upon ourselves to state; but it is clear that the spirit which breathes through the inflated nonsense contained in the foregoing paragraph, emanating from his pen, has been caught up, and acted upon, by some of the discontented part of that community, whose object is evidently rather to increase the calamities under which their fellow creatures may be destined for a time to labour, than to endeavour in any one way to alleviate them. The following statement from the Stockport Advertiser of the 20th instant, will speak more to the purpose than any comment of ours:

"We had hoped, from the good sense and forbearance which our fellow townsmen have hitherto shewn, that we should not have had to report any thing to their disadvantage; but, unfortunately, they have begun to listen to the insidious and inflammatory language of men who have no other object in view than to create anarchy and bloodshed. We would earnestly recommend them to abstain from countenancing the endeavours of such characters, and by a continuance of their peaceable conduct, entitle themselves to the sympathy and commiseration of the country at large. They cannot expect to do any good by a breach of the laws; but they may do much harm, for, most assuredly, if they cause any tumult, they will be very severely dealt with. We have been led into these observations from the occurrences of last night. We had heard that meetings had taken place on Monday and last week, and that one would be held in Longshutt-lane, last night (Wednesday.) We proceeded to the appointed spot about eight o'clock, where we found about 2 or 300 men and boys assembled; others continued to arrive until a quarter to nine, when the numbers on the ground were between 5 and 600. At this time a man, who it was evident was expected to address them, arrived; a ring was immediately formed, and he proceeded to business, by reading from Sherwin's Register, of November 14. 1818, one of the most inflammatory extracts we ever recollect to have heard—the tenor of which was to incite the people to arm, recommending for that purpose a knife, eleven inches and three-quarters in length, and two broad at the bottom, fixed into a staff eight feet long. (At this part of the proceedings, some person in the crowd fired a pistol off.) With this formidable weapon they were to defend themselves, or, if necessary, use it offensively. The speaker then proceeded to state (from the extract) the superiority of a body of men thus armed over a regular force, armed in the usual way, and illustrated it in the following manner:—'Suppose,' said he, 'two armies were drawn out against each other, the one armed with musket and ball cartridge, and the other with musket and bayonet, which would have the advantage?—Why, the latter, to be sure.' On finishing the reading of this extract, loud cheers were given by a part of those met—the majority, however, much to their credit, not joining. We now felt anxious to know who this fellow was, and were shortly gratified; for it appeared that it was necessary he should vindicate his character from some vile aspersions, and that he was one of those apprehended with Hunt, Moorhouse, &c. in 1819. His name we know. Let him beware how he again commits himself—the laws of this country are not to be trifled with. The vindication, as he called it, which, by the bye, was very lame and unsatisfactory, being finished, he said, 'Now is the time for any one to propose resolutions:' having repeated this two or three times, and no one coming forward, the meeting broke up about half-past nine, and the people returned peaceably to their homes, evidently not much edified, and no doubt greatly to the mortification of the orator."

From a perusal of these remarks, and from a consideration of the charge which these factious vagabonds, who are the subjects of them, would therefrom lay at the door of Government, let us turn our attention to a proper estimate of the measures which thus far have been adopted to allay immediate want, and eventually to restore tranquillity and plenty to those who are now its victims. The situation of the distressed manufacturers having been submitted to the KING by his Ministers, His MAJESTY, with that fulness of feeling which designates his character, presented them, in one direction or the other, with the sum, at different times, of TEN THOUSAND POUNDS—there has been a public subscription, amounting to more than ONE HUNDRED AND TWENTY-FIVE THOUSAND POUNDS—at the head of which all the great Officers of State appear as donors each for a large sum, and a further subscription for the individual relief of Spital-fields, amounting to THREE OR FOUR AND TWENTY THOUSANDS MORE, exclusive of some extensive private contributions locally distributed. This is a tolerably good specimen of what the feeling of Government has been on the business altogether.

On a due consideration of the present state of the nation, and the different opinions to which it has given rise, we cannot help directing the attention of our readers to the position of the case precisely as it stands. The inflammatory part of the press, in which disgraceful designation may be included one or two journals, with regret be it admitted, of a numerical and consequently influential circulation, has been the principal engine in effecting the very mischief of which, with their usual modesty and innocence, they are the very first to complain with shame, but, with truth, it must ba allowed that the exaggerated statements which, from time to time, appeared towards the close of the last year in the columns of The Times and Morning Chronicle, and, perforce of their example, obtained a a comparative circulation throughout the empire in papers of a reciprocal stamp, tended more to create and then enhance the temporary difficulties under which we were then labouring, than any actual distress with which they were incoherently confounded; and no surprise should therefore exist in a judicious mind at the attempt of any man to lay on the shoulders of another the onus wherewith he is alone chargeable, more particularly if in the execution of that pusillanimous and outrageous system, he can mix up with it a little display of (misnamed) patriotism. The insolent tone of language adopted by these journals would be more alarming than it turns out to be, if, in the exhibition of their effrontery they did not mix up a certain portion of sheer ignorance and bloated quackery, which speaks so plainly even to those they have in the first instance deceived, that conversion is much more frequently the consequence than conviction; for when an off-hand charge, of the nature made by these stupid scribblers, is indiscriminately levelled at persons who stand as acquitted of the calumny, as they are properly reckless of the calumniators, the blow falls harmless, and leaves exposed, standing in his isolated ignominy, the bare arm and masked heart of the assassin who strikes it.

It will not be uninteresting, at this particular crisis, to follow up the conduct of these desperate individuals who play their game in so diversified a manner that it requires some little dexterity to catch them at every turn. It is not too much to say, in testimony of the charitable disposition of this nation, that the claims of every other country are administered to with a proportionate, or perhaps a comparative energy, as are those of its own self—for no sooner is a case made the least apparent, than the heart and purse of every man becomes simultaneously open. This feeling, however, is frequently trespassed upon in a manner that will eventually, we should imagine, defeat the purposes for which it is called into action. The discontents which a degenerate spirit will naturally create in others, as well as this land, no sooner produce a momentary distress among the parties who investigate it, than a general exile, as it were by voluntary consent, is the consequence---every vagabond, which every parent of treachery, crime, and insubordination, can congratulate, flies for relief, and the rendezvous of all these miscreants is---ENGLAND. Once on her benevolent shores, the first step is to invoke that benevolence, the next to impose on it. The oppositionists of the day are immediately consulted, and a case is "got up" to hire in the naturally warm impulse of an Englishman's heart—all methods are adopted, every doctrine which humbug can invent, and quackery use, is seized upon, and in the grand question of the means by which a foreign vagrant, or an outlandish thief, may be protected, clothed, and fed, the hunger of the starving BRITON is passed by. They unsheath the dagger for their own breasts—it would be a just and a dear retribution, if their own breasts were to receive it. A more contemptible outcry has never been raised, than that which has ushered in the claims of the SPANISH and ITALIAN REFUGEES, consisting, for the most part, of a set of outlawed bravos, who have dared their own laws, and seek a protection from ours—they come, and with a piteous howl, invoke that protection which the specious journalist takes an opportunity of diverting from the more imperative quarter, YOUR OWN COUNTRYMEN, to which you had directed it, and once bestowed, you are loaded circuitously with every benignant curse for bestowing it. Let these circumstances, which are the occurrence of every day, be but well digested and well remembered, and the present efforts of these daring writers to excite in the people's minds a sense of their deprivations, far beyond what they in reality are, will be looked upon precisely in the light in which they stand—the pretensions of a weak intellect and a bad heart, and the nature of those pretensions exposed by the very weakness their promoters display.

SINGULAR PHENOMENON.

It is a very common phrase, amongst lovers at least, and they comprise two-thirds of the community, to talk about "melting the heart of stone"—then again, people go so far as to make these said stones do all kinds of things, and even the divine SHAKSPEARE puts a colour upon such argument by giving the following line to Macbeth:—

" For fear the very stones prate of my whereabout."

And again---

" Stones have been known to move, and trees to speak."

Nevertheless, with all this weighty opinion in their favour, we were certainly disposed to doubt their capabilities, until last Thursday, on which day appeared in The Times the following particulars of a conversation, held between some of them and a gentleman in Pall Mall, a few days ago:—

ITALIAN PASQUINADE ON CARLTON HOUSE.—An Italian, a man of some taste, being accustomed to see columns supporting something, or of some use, stood amazed before the sinecure colonnade of Carlton House, and questioned them, as to their employment, thus:—

" Care colonne! che fate qua?" *
" Non sappiamo in verita?" †

* Dear pillars, what are you doing there?
† Indeed, we don't know!

was their innocent answer.

We really think these stones very much to be pitied and the Editor of The Times entitled to the thanks of the public for bringing their miserable situation into notice.

It is with extreme reluctance we ever call the public attention to circumstances of such flagrant character as that on which we have now to speak, but considering the present case our warrantry for so doing, we feel less necessity for an apology than we otherwise might have done. We briefly alluded last week to the appearance at Marlborough-street of a wretch by the name of ANTHONY SALISBURY, a member of the Albion Club, on a charge of the most flagitious nature; and in the course of the last few days we have received several communications descriptive of many of this individual's infamous proceedings, the writers of all of them requesting some notice to be taken of the occurrence, from the singular taciturnity adopted by nearly every other journal. We cannot but admit that it appears very extraordinary a transaction of so public a nature as a police-office examination, and that of a fashionable (heu!) and wealthy person, should only be reported in such an obscure paper as the British Press; and there is no other way to account for it than to believe that all the others were bought—a charge which we would not be thought to bring against the highly-respectable individuals who conduct the daily press, but against some of their reporters, who, for a few pounds, have winked at the disclosure of a villany, which, in a poor man's instance, they would have been the first to promulgate. It is impossible to view the matter in any other light—for if the examination was reported by one paper, there can be no reason, but the one we have given, why it should not be by every other, whose reporters are always in attendance at the principal offices, and from the notes of most of whom appeared on the day in question other accounts from THE IDENTICAL ONE, Marlborough-street. We consider this a subject will worthy the attention and scrutiny of those editorial gentlemen keeping so many of these danglers about town, who lon many other occasions are very apt, either for "love or money," to give an account of things very different to what they in reality are.

Having premised thus much, we are bound to mention a circumstance which the vigilance and duty of our contemporaries might have saved us the task of doing. This miserable fellow, ANTHONY SALISBURY, as if not abashed by his exposure in a public COURT OF JUSTICE, and being there reminded by the magistrate of his former appearance on a similar charge at the same bar, had the frontless audacity, A FEW HOURS AFTERWARDS, to go and dine at the Oriental Club, of which he is also a member. It is a very mistaken notion which some members of both this and the Albion entertain, that they cannot expel this man—THEY CAN—and even if they had no law, they ought to make one, enabling them to do so; for the respectability of their establishments is mainly at stake, as long as they permit the name of such a degraded scoundrel to stand upon their books.

THE LAST WEEK.

Monday. His Grace the Duke of DEVONSHIRE, accompanied by the Editor of the Representative, arrived from Russia, and after transacting some private business in Piccadilly, returned there to dinner—Drury-lane Theatre taken by JONATHAN, JOHN being unable to manage it—e. p. (Old PRICE) system much talked of—GLENGALL asserted that KANGAROO COOKE got Captain CHAMBRE in CROCKFORD'S, pour l'amour de Mademoiselle ALEXANDRINE—though every one does not believe what MY LORD says, yet this is true—BALL HUGHES expressed his astonishment, to several gentlemen in St. James's-street, at CORN in English being the same as FISH in French, viz., wheat-ears (huitres!)

Tuesday. Mr. OTWAY CAVE, who died yesterday, "by particular desire" of the Editor of the Courier, came to life this morning—"Killing no murder" the order of the day—my Lord BESBOROUGH'S death, which was stated in the Kilkenny Independent, by the partizans of the Honourable PIERCE BUTLER (the defeated candidate for that town) to have taken place in Italy, being disproved, (by His LORDSHIP'S being alive in England) in the following letter from this Nobleman's third son to the Editor of the Courier :—

"Sir,—Be so good as to contradict a paragraph which appeared in your Paper of this Evening, announcing the death of the Earl of Besborough, who is in perfect health, at his residence at Roehampton. "Yours, &c.

"W. F. PONSONBY."

"St. James's-square, July 18."

Wednesday. Several well-known rakes in the *Hay*MARKET—rather an appropriate place for them at this time of the year—CORNWALL, hearing a person say, during TOM-TIT'S late absence from town, that he was laid up, observed, "then he must be "laid up in ordinary."—SIGNOR VELLUTI summoned before the magistrates, by the female choristers of the King's Theatre, on his refusing to pay them for performing at his benefit, on which the following epigram was written :—

VELLUTI refused them, well knowing their arts,
Because they were n't perfect, at all, in their parts;
But they say they are always, without any quiz,
More perfect in their parts than he is in his!

Thursday. Grand Gala in behalf of the refugees—Lord GLENGALL, who was the only GENTLEMAN present, observed, "that if the fate of the SPANIARDS and ITALIANS depended on the fete of VAUXHALL, they would be in a nice condition"—Mr. HEXTER, a grocer in Bermondsey, summoned a Mrs. DOWNER for assaulting him, she believing him, from his great resemblance to his Royal Highness the PRINCE OF SAXE COBURG, to be that distinguished character; in addition to his being like him in face, the poor woman evidently thought Mr. HEXTER'S resemblance borne out by his selling his CURRANTS, plums, &c.—JOE COPLEY burst out laughing at a friend of his getting wet through in a ten minutes' shower, and said, "You put me in mind of one of POOLE'S farces—a short reign and a merry one."

Friday. A few gentlemen lingering about CROCKFORD'S table—HENRY DE ROOS, who is what they call in Yorkshire "a sharpish chap," being asked the cause of BALL HUGHES appearing so cast down, said, "the only reason I can assign for his looking so sheepish, is, that he has been fleeced---Mr. Green announced to go up in a balloon--hundreds of that family, with whom every thing is sure to go down, went to VAUXHALL to see him---MARTIN, the Galway Member, took up the Chronicle the other day, and exclaimed "Gracious Powers, I didn't know Mrs. MATTOCKS, the actress, was alive? "What of her?" said a friend. "Why, by the Powers, I see she's dead!" said MARTIN---as the song says,

"MARTIN'S the man for the Bull."

Saturday.—Mr. BEAUMONT, the candidate lately ejected from Northumberland, roundly asserted by the Times newspaper to be insane—when that gentleman "went a courting" ELIZABETH, daughter of Sir JOHN SWINBURNE, in the year 1823, the same opinion prevailed, for he complained to a friend of indisposition, and that he had lost his senses; whereupon this "damned good-natured friend," as Sir FRETFUL PLAGIARY expresses himself, sent the fair lady the following lines :—

Poor BEAUMONT says he has been ill,
And that HE lost HIS SENSES, MADAM;
I leave to your superior skill
To tell me when he ever HAD 'EM.

POT versus KETTLE.

IN COBBETT'S Register of the 8th instant, he has the following passage relative to his late progress in Lancashire :—

"I must notice, that those are a curious sort of friends who could deem my departure from Manchester inglorious. What glory was there to be achieved by exposing a multitude of unarmed people to violence of any sort? I have always said of the 16th of August, that if I had invited 100,000 people to come together under such circumstances, I never would have told them to come unarmed. I would not have got them together, under such circumstances, it is true, and without rhyme or reason; but if I had got them together, under such circumstances, I never would have told them to throw aside the means of defending themselves. I never would have brought them together to be chopped or to be trampled to death. I have never yet led men to be hacked to pieces, or to be trampled to death. I dare say I never shall; and I am ready to take my oath, that I never will get together an unarmed people, and expose them to be thus treated, and that, too, merely for the sake of indulging my own vanity."

In the Times of yesterday, HUNT, who imagines this account of the Manchester riots in 1819 is levelled at himself, thus retaliates, in a letter written by him in that sublime journal :—

Now, Sir, although it is very evident that the intention of this malignant, poor old fellow, in writing this, was twofold; first, to apologise for his own cowardice, and, secondly, to cast an odium upon me for having advised the people to come to a public reform meeting "unarmed;" yet the effect is otherwise, and the fair inference to be drawn is, that it is his advice to the people "not to meet without arms," and when they meet "not to throw aside the means of defending themselves." It is worthy of notice that the first of these meetings at Manchester, last week, where this advice is acted upon, took place within three days after this Register of Cobbett's was published and circulated in Manchester. I do not mean to infer by this that Cobbett has the power to do mischief to any extent. It appears that out of an immense population of 100,000 persons, only about 200 poor wretches could be found to adopt such a wild and rash plan; yet as I know Cobbett to be one of the very last men in the kingdom who would be found at any meeting where there was danger, much less an "armed meeting," I think it right to caution my poor countrymen against listening to such a person. It is in this case as it was with respect to "forging Bank notes," he could urge others to do that which he has not the courage to undertake himself.

It would be a difficult point to determine, which of these two men is the greatest blackguard.

We have received the following letter from Mr. WELSH, and take the earliest opportunity of giving it insertion. It was with extreme reluctance that we in the first instance gave credence to the assertion of so respectable a gentleman being implicated in such a thorough piece of quackery as the one alluded to; and on that account are bound to remove from him an imputation as unpleasant to himself, as it is disgraceful to those who are the real promoters of it :—

TO THE EDITOR OF THE AGE.

SIR,—You would greatly oblige myself and Mr. HAWES by stating in your paper, that we know nothing of the proposal for publishing the bust of CARL MARIA VON WEBER, further than having had some bills left in the shop, with a request to receive subscriptions. I am, Sir,

Your obedient servant,
THOMAS WELSH.

THEATRICALS.

Drury Lane is doomed to be the foot-ball of the dramatic world, and certain it is that, within these few days, it has been preciously kicked about. We learn, however, from the daily journals, that the lease has been transferred from Mr. BISH to Mr. PRICE, and that the latter gentleman has been duly installed as the GREAT LESSEE.

The opinions we gave some numbers back, on the vast impropriety of such an assignment, are not now to be retracted—we consider the circumstance one of the most degrading nature, certain of materially undervaluing the property, and calculated in a remote degree to cast a general slur upon the nation. We must for once step out of our theatrical, and array ourselves in our political character, and there we feel, without any impulse of badinage, the thing to be extremely disgraceful. This theatre, from the reign of that redoubtable booby, PETER MOORE, to the fleeting reign of that virtuous old Lady, QUEEN CAROLINE, (whose patronage it especially received) has ever been looked upon as a very radical concern altogether; and the countenance of such Whigs for its Committeemen as Mr. CALCRAFT, Mr. G. LAMBE, Mr. D. KINNAIRD, &c., has rather established than lessened this feeling—and it only wanted to be reduced to the necessity of obtaining foreign aid to conduct its duties, to fix the thought indelibly. The theatre was always understood to be in mauvaise odeur in a very HIGH QUARTER; and we have reason to believe, that the present appointment has increased that opinion to a very great degree. We are bound to look with a very wary eye on any step taken by our present Transatlantic ally—there is some shallow policy in all his motions—himself, or rather his land, is concerned in every thought of his wily brain, and the vanity with which he will become invested by our NATIONAL STAGE coming under the controul of the New York THESPIAN, will induce him to fancy Mr. JEFFERIES Chancellor of the Exchequer, and Mr. ADAMS our Secretary of State. The whole thing is an absolute disgrace to the British Stage, and deserving the strictest attention of the people, who are bound very narrowly to watch every proceeding that may result therefrom.

We are bound, after these remarks, to observe that they are made without any reference personally to Mr. PRICE, whom we never saw, and of whom we know nothing—we do not mean to withhold from him that courtesy which, as a stranger, is his due, and decidedly wish him success, and will afford him all the assistance we can, whenever his efforts may entitle him thereto. There is a current opinion that we shall immediately have an importation of YANKEES from Pokotaccetococaccepunta, and other remote provinces of the UNITED STATES, to support our great SHAKSPEARE—that a Mr. COOPER, who wrote some story about a Spy, and who is the Leviathan of American Literature, is to be the Magnus Apollo of the Cabinet—that a cargo of cigars will arrive early in September, ready for the dress circle on the opening night, and that a steam-boat will lie off Waterloo-bridge, always in readiness to ship off to the PRESIDENCY any person that may make a momentary impression. All this we have heard, and consider it all the ebullition of waggery, which has nothing to do with the more solid question. Mr. PRICE'S going home the moment he has taken the lease, is now his own affair entirely—it should have been that of the Committee; for if, on his arrival in New York, he should take a fit in his head not to return, or the gout (with which they say he is afflicted) should take a fit in his FEET, and prevent his returning, or if any other occurrence should hap, for as Shylock justly says—

"Ships are but boards, sailors but men: there be land rats, and water rats, water thieves, and land thieves; I mean pirates, and then there is the peril of waters, winds, and rocks:"

the theatre, at the time it ought to open, will be in the exact situation it was lately placed in, by the resignation of Mr. BISH—but with all this we have nothing to do. The best answer we can give, theatrically speaking, to the tirade-disappointed players, or speculators, may issue against the New Manager, is to mention what he has done in opposition to what they assert he will do. It is understood that Mr. PRICE has fixed on the last year's stage manager, Mr. WALLACK, "a right proper man," on Mr. DUNN, as his treasurer, and Mr. WINSTON as his carpenter—he has moreover engaged, in addition to Mr. REYNOLDS the dramatist, as his reader of plays, Mr. LISTON, Mr. YOUNG, Mr. BRAHAM, and Madame VESTRIS, and many others, KEAN returning with him. All this looks like business, and business of the right sort, and certainly shows that, without referring to the political position we have taken up, Mr. PRICE has proved himself quite capable of executing the duties of his present station, and fully entitled to public support.

It will be seen by our Police Report that VELLUTI has been summoned to one of the PETTY COURTS by some of the women of the Opera, for resisting a demand made by them for performing on the evening of his benefit, and has been cast; though, as BALL HUGHES said, on hearing it, that's nothing new with the SIGNOR—we dare say the demand was exacted in the usual strain of impudence adopted by these jumpers; but certainly the correspondence of the Castrato smacks something of the same quality. The idea of any woman expecting HER RIGHTS from poor VELLUTI (as a letter from one of them in the Post terms it), appears to us both barbarous and exorbitant, but, however, the writer seems to say, that the rights were rather of a legal than a personal nature.

Mr. ELLISTON, having recovered from his late illness, performed on Friday last at Vauxhall, in a short interlude with Mr. POOLE. The immediate cause of this scene we did not learn, nor to what particular part of Mr. POOLE'S person the EX-LESSEE directed his attention; but we have reason to believe he assaulted him (presuming, of course, on the diminutiveness of the author's stature) in a way unbecoming either a man or a gentleman.

We will close our remarks upon the important subject of the DRAMA, with the mention of an anecdote well worthy of preservation. We have had the audacity once or twice during our career to call in question the genius of Mr. GEORGE ROBINS, and have been partly instrumental in fixing on him the epithet of NINNY, but as the following circumstance will be sure of removing from him such a disagreeable name, we are in justice bound to insert it. The Committee of Drury Lane (of which Mr. ROBINS is a leading member) have the power of entering it at all hours, and occasionally go of an evening to see that the firemen and watchmen are at their posts. During the time between Mr. BISH voiding the lease, and Mr. PRICE not avoiding it, GEORGE ROBINS determined to let the servants of the theatre know that if there was no manager, there was at least a committee, swaggered in one night late, "drest in a little brief authority," and raising his voice aloud, the following dialogue ensued :—

Robins.—Hollo, you fellows here, are ye all asleep?

Watchman.—No, Sir, I a'nt.

Robins—Hollo, I say, where to the Devil are all the firemen?

Firemen—Here, Sir!

Robins—What the Devil do you do here, Sir, when you should be there, Sir. Bring me a candle, one of you!

All—Ha! ha! ha!

Robins—What do you laugh at? bring a candle?

Fireman—Candle, Sir!

Robins—Yes; a candle!

Fireman—Lord, Sir, we an't no candles!

Robins—No candles! How do ye mean?

Fireman—Why, Sir, you don't allow us no candles in the holidays.

Robins—God bless my soul—how am I to see if the Theatre's ON FIRE, without A CANDLE?

THE NORTHUMBERLAND ELECTION.

Mr Beaumont, in his speech at the final close of the poll, which has since been published in an advertisement, having re-asserted that which, before the retirement of Lord Howick, had been repeatedly contradicted on the hustings, namely—that the opposition to him was founded on "pitiful and spiteful motives"—that "the falsehood of the charges brought against him had been discovered"—that "the folly of his enemies had made clear their malignity against him"—and that "disgrace attached to them for having hoped to fix disgrace on him"—the following correspondence has been published:—

TO THE RIGHT HON. EARL GREY.

Bradley, August 29, 1823.

Dear Lord Grey,—I cannot prevent this letter appearing to you very extraordinary, but its necessity has been brought on by Lady Swinburne's conduct.

Almost immediately after her daughter's acceptance of my proposals, in which she and Sir John seemed cordially to concur, I was struck by the unkindness of Lady Swinburne to me, and the continual endeavours she was making to hinder Elizabeth from giving her affections to me. This, you will easily imagine, alarmed me considerably; for, besides the usual respect of well-disposed children to their parents, I observed a confidence little short of idolatrous in Elizabeth towards Lady Swinburne. The peculiarity of some of their habits and education had contrived this. I resolved instantly to give up all other considerations, and to use all the advantages which my familiarity with the family and approaching marriage afforded me, for investigating to the bottom the cause of this unnatural behaviour.

Circumstances soon occurred to show me, that Lady Swinburne had not much regard for her husband, for whom, however, she constantly expressed the strongest attachment. I may now pass over a variety of things which brought me to suppose that she had entertained, if she had not still, a passion for yourself, which had, at some time or other, probably many years ago, been gratified. Having this idea, I went on to examine its truth by repeated conversations, which fully confirmed it.

Now, my Lord, I beg you will not consider that I took up this matter as my own, and would for my own sake have wounded the feelings of either yourself or Lady Swinburne.

I had opportunities of seeing General Grey with her, and was brought to a similar suspicion respecting him. Nor did it entirely stop here, so unbridled and unprincipled her conduct appeared to me. This gave sufficient ground for her conduct in all respects. For, seeing my affection for Elizabeth, if she could secure her daughter's blind devotion to herself, she had reason to hope that my eyes might also be shut. Luckily I had too strong a conviction of her guilt, and too firm a reliance that such wickedness would not be allowed to be triumphant, for such a hope ever to be realized.

The first step I took (this was in London a few weeks before their return to the country) was to expostulate with Lady Swinburne upon her behaviour to me, in such general terms as to leave no doubt in her mind of the full extent of my intention, without compromising myself by an explanation to a particular line of conduct. This language, however, was met on her part by reproaches, and an assurance that she was conscious of having done no wrong. Emily was by chance in the room during this conversation, and was at that time totally ignorant of what I meant. Her mother appeared to me to suspect that she knew it, and treated her with much cruelty in order to force from her what, in fact, she did not know. It is needless, at this time, to go into further details.

Sir John was, at different times, induced to conduct himself towards me in a manner that could only be the result of great misrepresentation. Lady Swinburne's conduct upon my determination to take Elizabeth abroad immediately after our marriage, with many other occurrences in London and at Capheaton, as well as what I have heard took place on the journey, gave me continual proofs that she could not be induced to give up her attempts to alienate her daughter from me.

In consequence of a quarrel with my mother, I found it necessary to think of retiring from the representation of the county, and consequently from residence in it, which I rather state, in order that I may omit nothing of importance which I recollected to have occurred in this singular affair, than from any precise bearing it appears to have upon the object of this letter. Still I had no idea of making my thoughts on this subject known to Sir John Swinburne, or his son Edward, although I had been compelled to acquaint Elizabeth and Emily with them before they left London. From the uncommon excellence and purity of Elizabeth's mind, and her most amiable disposition, such an explanation seemed to me possible to be avoided. About ten days, however, after my arrival at Caphcaton, our affairs took a new and extraordinary turn, which compelled me to a different conduct.

On Sunday, the 10th instant, after some prayers had been read at home, (it was a wet morning) selected from a book of Bishop Hoadley's, and in which, as well as in a sermon of Sydney Smith's, I was struck by the absence of all acknowledgment o the atonement of our Saviour, and the misrepresentation of the principal object of his coming upon earth, to die for the sins of mankind, I declared to Edward Swinburne my opinion respecting his mother, and named yourself, General Grey, and her own butler.

I think it also my duty to mention, that I felt myself urged to the course I took, by circumstances of an extraordinary character, which, after a most calm and dispassionate examination, I believe to be out of the usual course of events. Into a further account of these, it appears to me totally unnecessary for me here to enter, as I do not rely upon them for my justification with your Lordship in troubling you with this letter.

After my conversation with Edward Swinburne, we went together to Sir John, to whom I was going to make the same communication, when he became out of temper, and would hear nothing. I accordingly left him, and retired immediately with Mr. Bird, who arrived almost at that moment from his living at Chollerton, to Bradley, where I have remained since that time. Three weeks have now nearly elapsed, and although an offer has been made to me of forgiveness, if I would apologize to Lady Swinburne, which was of course rejected, I do not find that any steps have been taken by Sir John Swinburne. Last night, a note which I sent to Edward, at Ovingham, to ask what had been done, and inquire after the health of Elizabeth and Emily, was returned to me unopened, and my groom was desired to tell me, that after what passed, he could receive no letters from me.

I do not know, therefore, what it is his intention to do: he is aware that I shall remain at Bradley; and, to be prepared for any thing, I have written by this morning's post, to request a friend, who is in Yorkshire, to come and pass a few days with me. I have had sufficient evidence of the hardness of Lady Swinburne to make me believe she would not hesitate to risk her son's life, if she thought to accomplish her own object by that means.

Your Lordship will do me the justice to believe me, when I say, that it has not been the least in my thoughts to screen myself from a duel by this letter; but I look for your own acknowledgment to restore happiness to that of the family, which is most deserving of it, and to confound their most unworthy and abandoned mother.

I beg to be understood as not asking in this any favour whatever for myself, although my happiness is so entirely involved in that of her daughter, that what affects one must also affect the other.

During the whole of this affair, I have acted from a conscientious conviction of my duty, and I look for no recompense, but in the execution of it, for its own sake.

I remain, my dear Lord Grey, truly yours,

T. W. BEAUMONT.

P.S.—To prevent the delay of this letter in London during Sunday, I have sent it by my servant, who will wait for your Lordship's answer.

Answer.

TO T. W. BEAUMONT, ESQ.

Tunbridge-wells, Aug. 31, 1823.

Sir,—I have this moment received your most extraordinary letter, which has excited, not only my surprise, but my indignation.

How you could justify to yourself the unwarrantable use you have made of my name, I will not inquire. I feel it only necessary to say, that as far as relates to myself, the infamous allegation you have made against Lady Swinburne's character is totally false and unfounded. I am, Sir, your obedient humble servant,

GREY.

TO EARL GREY.

Warren's Hotel, Oct. 26, 1823.

My Lord,—Being convinced, upon calm reflection, that my conduct towards your Lordship has been unjustifiable, I do not hesitate to offer your Lordship an apology for it.

I am, my Lord, your Lordship's obedient humble servant,

T. W. BEAUMONT.

After some farther letters, the correspondence terminated.

SIGNOR VELLUTI AND THE WOMEN.

COUNTY COURT FOR MIDDLESEX.

Signor Baptista Velluti was proceeded against by the female chorus singers of the King's Theatre, to recover the sum of 1*l.* each, for work and labour done, by singing for him on the night of his benefit. The court was crowded by theatricals and others interested in the cause. There appeared a dashing array of smart girls against him. Great disappointment was caused by his non-appearance, but Mr. Monkhouse attended on his behalf, and there was also a number of Italian singers.

Miss Rummins stated the case for the plaintiffs. They were engaged by Mr. Ebers to sing during the season, but they had concluded their engagements before the benefit of Signor Velluti arrived. About a month before this time, Mr. Rubbi, the master of the chorus singers, having assembled them all, male and female, in the Green-room, read a letter to them from Mr. Velluti, promising them one guinea each if they performed their parts well. Being excited by this extraordinary reward, they attended rehearsals during nearly three weeks, from half-past nine o'clock in the morning until two, three, four, and five o'clock in the afternoon, and sometimes they were called again at half-past six o'clock, and engaged until ten at night. The night arrived, and it was acknowledged that they performed their parts well. The gentlemen chorus singers had been paid, but the ladies had been refused; on what pretence it would he for the court to hear and decide.

The learned Judge, Mr. Dubois, asked for the letter sent by Mr. Rubbi.

Mr. Monkhouse said Mr. Rubbi is not here.

Mr. Dubois—Then I shall adjourn the case, as he is your agent, and you must produce him.

Mr. Monkhouse then produced what he said was the letter. It promised 1*l.* to the gentlemen, on condition that they were perfect in their parts, but not one word about the ladies.

The ladies one and all declared that the letter produced was not the letter read to them in the Green-room.

Mr. Dubois—Where is the real letter?

Mr. Monkhouse—I have none other.

Mr. Dubois—Then favour us with a reason why he paid the gentlemen and refused the ladies.

Mr. Monkhouse said the fact was, the Signor had a decided objection to the ladies, and never allowed them to appear in any place where he was concerned. He had been indisposed at home, and had sent the letter in question (which was undoubtedly the letter he had sent,) requesting that one guinea should be offered as a gratuity to the gentlemen only.

Mr. Dubois—Why this is an extraordinary want of gallantry, to pay the men and refuse to pay the females.

Mr. Monkhouse—He did not know of the ladies being so engaged, contrary to his wish and express directions.

One of the plaintiffs—Why, he has beat time to me.

[Here there was a chorus of—"He pricks out the score for us."]

Miss Rummins—He could not have done without us, as we had solos, which could not have been omitted. He beat time to us.

Here there were so many of the fair plaintiffs talking eloquently at once, that nothing could be heard, and the officers of the Court had some difficulty in procuring silence.

Mr. Monkhouse said that the guinea was promised as a gratuity only; that the Signor ought not to be called upon to pay it as a debt, more particularly as he had objected to permit the ladies to sing in any piece where he performed.

Here there was a strong manifestation on the part of the female as well as the male portion of the auditory.

Mr. Monkhouse, notwithstanding, contended, that as the letter referred only to the masculine gender, they alone were entitled to the gratuity.

Mr. Dubois could not help saying that the defence was paltry. He considered that the terms of the letter might be taken to mean the choristers generally; and, though the masculine gender was particularly referred to, as that (according to the opinion of some) denominated the superior sort of the creation, the others, as inferiors, were included in the term. The Ladies had performed the labour; and why, if he had so strong an objection to them, did he not prevent them?

The Choristers—He beat time to us.

The Learned Judge decided, that the Ladies having performed the labour, were entitled to the reward.

A friend of the Signor's here stepped forward, and said, that it was not the object of the money, but the mode in which it was demanded, that induced him to defend the present proceedings.

Mr. Dubois—Poh! poh! I do not hesitate to say that I consider it as a trumpery defence.

The other plaintiffs were burdened with compliments as to their general treatment. It appears, that according to the system of the large theatres, of screwing down the salaries of the minor performers, in order to give enormous sums to the principals, the choristers had been paid during the first part of the season at 5s. 9½d. per night, or 11s. 7d. per week, out of which they had to buy shoes, gloves, and flowers, adapted to the costume of the various characters; they had for some months to attend the rehearsals every day, half-past nine to five; on some days dress was to be found them, but was often neglected, and they were seen performing the characters of Grecian virgins in the dresses of Spanish peasants, &c.; and petticoats of such extraordinary brevity, that they might have been mistaken for kilts, were sent down to them from the wardrobe. In the course of the season Signor Velluti interceded for the gentlemen, and obtained an advance of their salary to 15s. per night. The ladies struck—Madame Pasta interceded for them—and obtained the enormous advance of 1s. 2½d., making altogether 7s. per night. Of course this was not matter with which this court, though it possesses, as the learned Judge stated in the course of the cause, an equitable jurisdiction, could have interfered in any way. The ladies retired rejoicing in their success.

In consequence of the above report, the following correspondence has appeared in the Daily Papers.

Sir,—In reference to a report of proceedings instituted against me, by the Female Choristers of the King's Theatre, which appeared in the Newspapers of yesterday, I feel myself called upon in defence of my private and professional reputation, to direct the attention of the public to the points upon which the extraordinary decision of the Magistrate was founded.

My "Benefit" having been appointed for the 1st of June, on which occasion a new Opera was to be produced, and the Opera of "Medea" being at the same time in rehearsal, I felt that the Gentlemen Choristers would have considerable trouble in learning so much music in so short a period. As a stimulus, therefore, to such additional exertions as were necessary, I caused it to be made known to those Gentlemen, that I would pay them as a gratuity, a sovereign each, in addition to the salary paid them by the Manager, provided they were prepared to perform on the night fixed (the first) for my benefit. The Manager, however, having thought proper to postpone it from the 1st to the 15th of June,* the Choristers were of course released from the extraordinary exertions which I had anticipated, and I, consequently, from my promise, for there was ample time, without any effort, for the requisite study of the parts; but as the gentlemen in question, on the night of my benefit, acquaitted themselves to my entire satisfaction, I adhered to my original intention, and rewarded them accordingly on the following morning.

The letter which offered the gratuity from me, was the best proof that no Female Choristers were thought of—the words used were, "Signori Coristi," meaning literally, Gentlemen Choristers. This letter was produced in Court, and offered to be proved by the person who wrote it for me, who was then present, but the Magistrate declined to take his proof, the very point upon which the whole justice of the case rested, and decided that the "Ladies" were entitled to a sovereign each! because, as he said, "they had done the work;" but on this head it was shewn to him that "the work" they did was to be paid for by Mr. Ebers, who, by my articles with him, was bound to give me for my benefit the use of his establishment, free from all expenses. The Magistrate might as well have said, that I ought to have paid the whole Orchestra and Corps de Ballet.

The fact is, had these "Ladies," in the first instance, thought proper to have asked this sum from me as a favour, as the Gentlemen had done, instead of writing me an impudent letter, demanding it as a right, and threatening an immediate prosecution before I had even refused them, I would not have hesitated to comply with their request. Knowing that they had no just foundation for their claim, the threat of prosecution appeared ridiculous; but the Ladies have proved that they were better acquainted than I with Magisterial law.

I am, Sir, your's, &c.

July 10, 1826. G. B. VELLUTI.

* Postponed again to the 22d.

Sir—In reply to the attack which has been made upon myself and the other female choristers by Signor Velluti, in the Morning Post of this day, we deny that the letter which was sent by us to Signor Velluti deserves the character of 'extremely impudent,' which Signor Velluti has ascribed to it. It merely remonstrated with him in a suitable manner upon his injustice in withholding from us that recompense for our labours, to which we are lawfully entitled, as the decision of the Magistrate has determined; and if we ventured to differ from Signor Velluti, upon a question of English law and justice, our presumption was certainly not so great as his, who has presumed in his letter, which appeared this day in the Morning Post, to impute injustice to the decision of an English Magistrate. Signor Velluti pretends that we asked for our right in an impertinent manner; but, Sir, he must be very ignorant of English feeling and English justice, if he imagines he can withhold from others their just dues upon any such arbitrary and overbearing principle; and he ought to have made some allowance, if a spirit of indignation had been manifested by a few humble and necessitous females, when their rightful pittances were withheld from them by a person in the affluent circumstances of Signor Velluti. Signor Velluti also complains that we offended him by asking as a right, that which we ought to have solicited as a favour. The truth is, none of the Female Choristers are on very sociable terms with Signor Velluti, and as to asking a favour of him, we know that we should get nothing by our asking, if we were; but our rights we shall certainly enforce from him—such rights at least as a Magistrate can assist us to—we mean our pecuniary rights.

I remain,

Your respectful humble Servant,

ONE OF THE FEMALE CHORISTERS.

Haymarket, July 11.

TO THE EDITOR OF THE MORNING POST.

Sir,—Not wishing to give importance to a really trifling subject, or to obtrude myself further upon the Public, I shall take no other notice of a letter which appeared in your Paper of Friday, signed "One of the Female Choristers," than by giving a copy of the only communication which I received from the "Ladies" in question, that the public may decide whether or not my epithet of 'impudent' was misapplied.

I am, Sir, &c.

BUILDING IN RUSSIA.—In the neighbourhood of Moscow, and along the roads of Russia, they have what is termed house markets. Timber beams and rafters, prepared for building, are spread upon the ground, the parts necessary for the construction of a house are marked ready for fixing together; when the bargain is concluded the purchaser tells the seller where he will have the house erected, and within four days after the house is made habitable. By this mode of building Prince Potemkin created whole villages at short notice, and the Imperial Catherine was astonished, during her grand journey, at the population of her new provinces.

DEATH OF THE MARQUIS OF WATERFORD.—It is with much regret we announce the death of this most amiable and highly-esteemed nobleman. In our paper of Tuesday we stated that his Lordship was considered to be so much improved, as to render it safe for him to undertake a journey to Buxton. Lamentable, however, to relate, he was not able to proceed beyond Carmarthen, where he died on Sunday last. He was a nobleman of the most amiable and excellent disposition, and his death will be deeply and universally regretted. He is succeeded in his titles by his eldest son, the Earl of Tyrone, now Marquis of Waterford. —Evening paper.

POLICE INTELLIGENCE.

LADY ERSKINE.

MANSION-HOUSE.—The Lord Mayor has received some communications relative to Lady Erskine, since our last report on the subject, and Lady Erskine herself waited upon his Lordship.

She expressed her regret that the Public Papers had noticed her application. On her children's account she regretted it, but she knew that it was dictated by a good feeling. She felt peculiarly on account of an error of a very injurinus nature to her children and herself. It appeared from the account that had reached the public. that Lord Erskine and she were acquainted as man and wife before their marriage. This was not the fact. Lord Erskine took her into Scotland, and acknowledged her as his wife, a ceremony which she understood from him and every one else, equivalent to the marriage ceremony of this country, before the intimacy alluded to took place.

The Lord Mayor asked her what the ages and condition of her three children, who were no longer under her protection were?

She burst into tears upon being asked this question, and was unable to answer for some moments. Her distress was, she said, occasioned by the apprehension that her children would be disgraced by the mention of the calamities of their mother, as there was but little excuse, in the opinion of the great world, for poverty, however unavoidable. She then informed the Lord Mayor that she believed her three eldest children were well provided for; but it was with great pain she ever alluded to them in her subsequent conversation. She lamented that her inclination to keep at home with her the only child who had not been removed to a distance from her, had excited any animosity. She had suffered so much degradation in endeavouring to procure the pittance to which she supposed she had some claim, that it would have been much more agreeable to her to earn her bread by bodily labour, than to submit to the toil and meanness of incessant solicitation.

The Lord Mayor admitted that the fact was an extraordinary one. It was, in fact, inexplicable to him, that after Lady Erskine had been recognised as the wife of Lord Erskine by the King, and that her case had been made an instance of Royal bounty, such dreadful neglect had followed, that the unfortunate Lady was allowed to sink to so low a state in society.

Lady Erskine said she had expressed a wish that she might be set up in a little business, which would contribute to her and her child's support. It was, however, thought that she was not adapted to trade, and all opportunity of escaping from the degrading condition in which she was kept was denied her. She felt her downfall most bitterly, as she received the shillings doled out to her as if she was a pauper dependant upon the bounty of a parish.

The Lord Mayor said he could not suppose that Lady Erskine would object to allow her son to go to school for the purpose of receiving the education suitable to his rank. It was, he added, a most distressing thing to see the poor child deprived of the advantages which his Lordship was happy to find the other children were enjoying.

Lady Erskine said she had by no means any objection of the kind. She was most anxious to see him under good tuition, and indeed he had not altogether since he had left school, been by any means neglected; a scholar, who had heard of the circumstances of the child, humanely undertook to give him lessons, and she has herself taught him as far as she was capable. She could not, however, bear to be torn away from him altogether, as was the case with regard to her other children.

The Lord Mayor said, it would be monstrous to put such a barrier between a mother and her child, and he hoped when the executors of Lord Erskine were in town, that every thing would be satisfactorily arranged.

His Lordship then gave to Lady Erskine some money which he had received for her. One sum was from a Nobleman, who was well acquainted with Lord Erskine. A few pounds were sent by Barristers, but all does not amount to twenty pounds, notwithstanding the strong impression which the story of Lady Erskine's misfortunes made upon the public mind.

His Lordship has received several communications with respect to Lady Erskine, from different persons, which are in substance precisely what has already appeared before the public.

LIEUT. KENNY COMMITTED FOR TRIAL.

BOW-STREET.—Tuesday, a gentleman appeared at this office from Mr. Charlton, and expressed to Sir R. Birnie the strong disinclination felt by that gentleman to become the prosecutor of Lieut. Kenny. Sir Richard stated, in reply, that unwilling as he was to urge a prosecution undersuch distressing circumstances, yet it was absolutely necessary for public justice that a strict investigation into the unhappy affair should take place. After some farther conversation, on the arrival of Mr. Harmer, who acts as the legal adviser of the unfortunate gentleman, the worthy Magistrate, with the other parties concerned, retired to the private room. An arrangement was made, we were given to understand, in compliance with the wishes of the prisoner's friends. The investigation lasted about an hour and a half, during which time several witnesses, the majority of whom were sailors, were examined. Lieut. Medge, of his Majesty's 45th regiment, also was called upon for his testimony, which is believed to be very material. Mr. Oakes, the second officer of the Bussorah, whose absence on the second examination was noticed as singular, was yesterday morning in attendance, and was twice called in. The result of the examination was the full committal of the unfortunate gentleman, to take his trial for the wilful murder of Mr. Charlton. The prisoner appeared deeply affected by his situation. He wore a half military blue frock coat, light coloured waistcoat, and blue trousers, and has a very gentlemanly appearance. His age appears to be about 30.

Mr. J. Dickson, a gentleman connected with the Vigo Bay Company, and Mr. Steele, his friend, were brought to this office, for having published a correspondence calculated or intended to provoke a breach of the peace, after Mr. J. Dickson and Mr. J. S. Taylor, the principals, had been held to bail. Mr. Steele stated, that his object in publishing the correspondence, on the contrary, was to prevent a duel from being fought on the other side of the water; and Mr. Halls, the sitting magistrate, having taken his solemn promise, as well as that of Mr. Dickson, that they intended no breach of the peace, the case was dismissed.

EXTENSIVE FORGERY.

George Watson, alias John Peele, was brought to this office, from Derby, upon a charge of forgery, in the custody of Gardner. The office was crowded to excess, by persons who were anxious to see the prisoner, who has in almost every county in England committed forgeries on bankers. Sir Richard Birnie adjourned to the private room, that those who were in attendance on Peele's case should not be incommoded by the persons in attendance on routine business.

Mr. John Steward deposed, that he was clerk to Messrs. Beeching and Sons, bankers, Tonbridge Wells, Kent, and that, on the 10th day of May last, the prisoner called at Messrs. Beeching's bank, and produced a bill of exchange, dated "Genoa, 4th March, 1826," purporting to be drawn by "Wm. Davidson," upon Messrs. Coutts and Co., Bankers, Strand, for thirty-five pounds, payable to "Messrs. J. Webb and Co.," for which bill he requested cash. Deponent gave him thirty-four pounds, seventeen shillings and sixpence, deducting two shillings and sixpence for discount. In due course the bill was sent to the banking house of Messrs. Coutts and Co., where it was discovered to be a forgery.

Mr. Andrew Dickie, a clerk in the firm of Messrs. Coutts and Co., stated, that he recollected the bill in question being sent to that firm; he examined it, as he does every bill which is presented, and pronounced it a forgery.

Several other cases were ready to be entered into, but his Worship considered that there was no necessity for going into them, as the present case was so clearly proved.

Sir R. Birnie took occasion to observe, that during the whole period of his Magistracy so atrocious a case of forgery had not come before him. In his possession were found a great number of blank bills of exchange, indorsed, "John Thompson." It was stated, that he had managed to destroy a huge pile of papers, which, no doubt, were of a similar description.

He was delivered over to the care of Gardner, to be conveyed to Maidstone Goal, to await his trial at the ensuing Assizes.

Sir R. Birnie mentioned that information had been for a long time in the possession of the Police, of the practices which the prisoner had carried on with such extraordinery success. He had never, in the whole course of his Magisterial experience, known an instance in which the crime of forgery had been so extensively perpetrated. It was a singular fact, that the prisoner could be indicted in every county in England, for there was not one, in some part of which he had not uttered forged paper.

Mr. Gates, Solicitor to the Association of Bankers, for protection against forgery, attended for the prosecution, and W. Curtis, Esq. the banker (son of Sir William), who is at the head of the Association, was also present.

Mr. Gates stated, that he had been engaged in tracing him to a great many places. He was a man of very imposing manners, had a great knowledge of business, and the style in which he had lived, and the appearance of himself and his female companion, a beautiful and elegant woman, completely disarmed suspicion in the minds even of the most wary. His general mode was to drive to the first-rate inn, in whatever place he chose to stop at, and there live sumptuously for a few days, pay liberally, and take especial pains to ingratiate himself with the landlord of the house, whom, with his wife, perhaps, he would take in his carriage for a day or two to some place of public resort, or for a short time about the adjoining country, treating them with champaigne, and every other luxury that could be procured. When about to quit the town he would say he was short of ready money; he had plenty of bills, as good as the Bank of England; "but, then, the devil of it is, you see, that no one knows me here, or your bankers would discount for me." This was a difficulty which the landlord would soon remove, by offering to say that he knew him, sooner than he should be inconvenienced. In this manner he got a forged paper cashed at Newark, and several other places. At each place where he stopped he was constantly receiving letters by the post containing bills and bank-notes, and it had been ascertained that several of those very letters had been first given by the prisoner himself to stage-coachmen to be put into distant post-offices. When he was apprehended, he had two packages filled with printed forms of bills of exchange and promissory-notes, several of which were drawn, accepted, and endorsed in various names and handwritings. One of these parcels he contrived to destroy. (Mr. Gates produced the other.) There were also some slips of paper, on which were written a great many signatures in different characters of hand-writing, as if by some person practising. At one place the prisoner obtained cash for a bill of 20l. by this expedient. He received a letter by post, with a black seal, with which he went in haste to a tradesman, with tears in his eyes, and said, his brother had been killed in the Burmese war, and he was compelled to go in haste to London, to settle his affairs. But a still more ingenious trick was played off by him at Rochester. He had been some time at that place, and had by some means got acquainted with a lady of high respectability, and good property, residing there. He ascertained where she kept cash; and one day when he was taking a drive with her, in her own carriage, he requested she would order her coachman to stop for a few moments at Messrs. ———, (mentioning the name of her bankers.) She at once complied, and he alighted, walked into the banking-house, and requested cash for a bill to a large amount. The bankers, seeing with whom he came, had not the least hesitation in complying with his request, and gave him the money. He left Rochester very shortly after.

The prisoner is a good looking man, apparently about 33 years of age, of florid complexion, light hair, and about the middle size. His appearance was gentlemanly. He wore a jacket, made after the fashion of those worn by our metropolitan fresh-water sailors in their excursions. His female companion was in the office, but not present at the examination. The prisoner's conduct has been extraordinary cool and firm since his apprehension; it has, in fact, been that of a man who has sufficient firmness, under trying circumstances, to make up his mind to meet the worst that can befal.

That renowned Quack, Doctor Eady, was brought up, in company with his daughter, a girl of about 18, on a warrant, charged with assaulting and beating Ellen Healey, their maid of all work. The Doctor, in his own proper person, really exhibited an imposing presence. He is a man about 45 years of age, stoutly made, of florid complexion, and five feet eight inches high. Upon the present occasion, he was attired in a spick-and-span new suit of black, hessian boots, with tassels of enormous size, and a black military stock reaching to his ears, and surmounted by a collar of such ample breadth as almost completely to hide those valuable appendages. His head, perhaps one of the largest which nature ever placed upon the shoulders of a human being, is nearly bald on the top, but behind, and at the sides, is a profusion of half black, half white hair, which was gathered into tiny curls, and formed into regular rows, one above another, in the most precise style imaginable: the whole adorned with an abundance of powder and pomatum. It is almost needless to state that the moment Doctor Eady was announced, all eyes were fixed upon the hero of all the chalked dead walls in the kingdom, and a general titter ran through the office.

Ellen Healey, the complainant, a good-looking girl, then stepped forward, and began her tale by stating that she had been servant of all work for seven months to Doctor Eady.

Mr. Halls—And pray, who is Doctor Eady?

Complainant—Who is he, Sir? Why he is, Sir—he is—dear me, Sir—he is—Doctor Eady, Sir.

Mr. Halls—What is he—what is his occupation?

Complainant—He does business in the doctoring line, I believe, Sir.

Mr. Halls—Oh! he does business in the doctoring line, does he? and pray where does this doctoring personage live?

Complainant—In Church-street, Soho, Sir.

Mr. Halls—Well, let us hear what you have to say against this Doctor, as you call him, and his daughter.

The complainant said, her mother being ill, she requested leave to go to see her, which was refused by Mrs. Eady; but, having never been out, except on errands, during the seven months that she had lived there, and feeling very anxious to see her mother, she determined to go. She was detained longer than she expected; and, when she returned, she found Miss Eady busied in cooking some fish for dinner. She had spoiled them, and, in taking them up, they dropped to pieces on the kitchen floor. Witness offered to assist; but Miss Eady told her to go about her business, for a good-for-nothing hussey as she was; and, upon her attempting to take part in getting up the rest of the dinner, Miss Eady struck her several times on the breast; and her father, the Doctor, came down, shook her violently, and said he would kick her out of the house, unless she went away quietly without delay.

Mr. Halls asked her if she had any witness, and she said the Doctor's man-servant was present at the time.

Mr. Halls (significantly)—Do you wish him to be sworn? Understand me, you need not have him called unless you like. Do you wish it?

Complainant—He saw me struck, Sir, and of course he will speak the truth.

The Doctor's man-servant was then called, and a most singular looking being he was. He is not more than four feet nine inches in height, has a head scarcely as big as a cocoa-nut, a face shockingly mutilated, and his skin and apparel so fitting, that every person near the table instinctively drew back as he approached.

Being sworn, he was asked by Mr. Halls what he was?

Witness—I am man-servant to Dr. Eady, Sir.

Mr. Halls—You say Dr. Eady. Is he a Physician, then?

Witness—No, Sir, he is not.

Mr. Halls—How then, is he a Doctor? Is he a Doctor of Laws, or Divinity, or what!

Witness—No—no, Sir, he practices—doctoring.

Mr. Halls—Then the fact is, he is not a Doctor at all. I thought we should come to the fact at last.

The witness then swore that he saw a scuffle between Miss Eady and the complainant, and he was positive that no blow was struck. In spite of the exclamations of astonishment on the part of the complainant, and repeated questions and cautions of the magistrate, the witness swore positively that no blow or shaking took place.

The Doctor and his daughter severally addressed the magistrate, and declared that the complainant was one of the most impertinent of maids, and that her tongue was perfectly unhearable.

Mr. Halls said the complainant had chosen to call a witness, who had flatly contradicted her own statement, and he could not hold the defendants to bail where such conflicting testimony had been adduced. The complainant could, however, indict them at the Sessions.

This she expressed her determination to do, and the parties left the office.

No branch of trade is suffering more at present than that of printing. In Edinburgh, at this moment, there is not one-third of the usual amount of work, and but for the Session papers, it would have been still worse. Above 70 compositors are now going idle, and many others have but partial employment. In London the trade is absolutely at a stand. A very eminent printer there, who employed 11 readers, finds one sufficient to carry on his business at present. In another office, where eight or nine presses were kept going, there is nobody employed but a foreman and two or three apprentices. The stagnation has been increasing from week to week, and there are now, we understand, 1200 printers in the metropolis absolutely idle, and deprived of their means of subsistence. As a last resource, application has been made to other towns for subscriptions; and, depressed as the trade is here, we learn that they have agreed to contribute what they can to the support of their brethren in London for a few weeks. —The Scotsman.

Friday, about one o'clock, a fine boy, seven years old, nephew to Mr. Plush, plumber, of 130, Chancery-lane, fell out of a two-pair of stairs window of his house into the street. The little sufferer was taken up alive, but very little hopes are entertained of his recovery. This is another proof of the necessity of having guards to windows to which children have access.

The wheat harvest has generally commenced in this neighbourhood, and the accounts, both as to quality and quantity, are highly satisfactory. Some few local exceptions may be found, but on the whole, the wheat crops are abundant. Barley and oats are a little improved from the late showers, but the latter is a very slight produce.—Plymouth Journal.

The late Alderman Cox, it appears, died without any will, as Friday an administration was granted by the Prerogative Court to Frances Charlotte Cox, the widow and relict, under 600l.

PEERAGE OF IRELAND.—The Peerage (vacant by the extinction of the three Peerages of Baron Coleraine and Baron Eardley, in 1824, and Viscount Newcomen, in 1825), is to be filled by the elevation of Mrs. Fitzgerald, Lady of the Right Hon. James Fitzgerald, late Prime Serjeant of Ireland, and mother of the Right Hon. William Vesey Fitzgerald, M. P. for the county of Clare, to the dignity of a Baroness in her own right, by the style and title of Baroness de Windsor, with remainder to her male issue. The title of de Windsor is assumed from Gerald de Windsor, Constable of Pembroke, and Governor of South Wales, who, by Nesta, daughter of Rhys, Prince of South Wales, was father of Maurice Fitzgerald, who accompanied Earl Strongbow to Ireland in 1168. Since the above extinctions, the following have also occurred, viz.---Baron Whitworth, 1825; Viscount Carleton, 1826; Viscount Netterville, 1826;---so that in a year from the last extinction, and no claim put in, his Majesty will be enabled to confer another new Peerage.—The Viscounty of Netterville is the 50th Peerage extinct since the Union.

PROVIDENTIAL ESCAPE.—(From the Greenock Advertiser of Tuesday.)—Arrived here on Sunday last the Latona, of London, James Paterson, master, from Cape Breton, with timber. When off the Mull of Kintyre, Capt. Paterson discovered a small boat with two men and a woman on board, labouring hard to bear up against a tremendous sea. With genuine sympathy he bore down to relieve them from their perilous condition, the yawning waves threatening every moment to overwhelm them, and succeeded in getting them on board of the Latona, where he treated them with much humanity till they were landed here. The story of this frail bark, about thirteen feet keel, and her worn-out crew, is no less remarkable than it is interesting. Samuel Adamson, master of the boat, proceeded from his abode at Birsay, in Orkney, with lobsters, for Mr. Davidson, in Stromness, on Friday, the 7th inst. accompanied by J. Sinclair, who was engaged with him in this employment, and his wife, who went to Stromness to procure medical advice. After delivering their fish, they set out from Stromness on the evening of the same day, directing their course to their native haven at Birsay, but were soon enveloped in a most impenetrable fog, by which they lost every trace of the land; and then, under the influence of the strong currents that are so remarkable in those seas, without the aid of compass or any other guide, surrounded by a dense atmosphere, and the wind, in such circumstances, generally treacherously variable, they kept steering such a course as they concluded would catch some part of the land; but the wind having shifted during night, and being misled by this inconstant agent, they were carried by the tide through the Pentland Firth, which changed their course to quite an opposite direction. About two p.m. on Sunday, the fog cleared up, but being then out of sight of land, they took the sun as their guide to recover their native shore, but having reversed their position during night, they were rapidly extending their distance from it, and in this way they kept, unconscious of their error or their danger, till about seven p. m., when they were picked up by the Elizabeth, Morison, master, a Prussian ship, from Memel, bound to Wexford, in Ireland, with timber—then 40 miles out of sight of land in the North Sea. Capt. Morison behaved to them with great humanity, and kept them for eight days on board, till at Adamson's own request, he was turned off between the North of Ireland and the Mull of Kintyre, with the intention of landing on the latter coast, where, as has already been mentioned, they were again picked up by the Latona, when again in imminent danger of perishing. It need hardly be added, that they are fit objects of compassion and liberality, to enable them to regain their desolate and distressed family of five helpless children, one of them a mere infant, who have long ere now despaired of ever recovering their protection again; and it is presumed that their case only requires to be known, when the necessary aid will be generously afforded them, they being at present destitute of every means of subsistence. They have been for the present lodged with a Mrs. Stewart, East Quay-lane, at the charge of a few individuals to whom their misfortune became first known.

LATEST REPORT OF THE HARVEST.

The wheat harvest has commenced in the neighbourhood of this city. The crop will be large, and of most excellent quality.—Canterbury Paper.

A fine sample of new barley was exhibited in our market, on Saturday last. The wheat looks uncommonly well, and there is every appearance of an early and prolific harvest.—Ibid.

Reaping is begun in the neighbourhood of Edinburgh. Three bands of shearers were at work on Thursday, on the fields between the north side of the New Town and the Firth.—Edinburgh Paper.

We rejoice to find that all apprehensions for the safety of the harvest, and the late potatoe crops, have now vanished. The rains have been general in every part of the United Kingdom.—They did not come in time for the hay, and that is the only short crop.—Dublin Morning Post.

The wheat harvest has commenced throughout the West of England, and the accounts both of the quality and bulk of the crop are highly satisfactory. The plantation of hops, at Orchard Portman, near Taunton, is in a remarkably thriving state.—Devizes Gazette.

The wheat harvest is now in almost general operation throughout Devonshire, and the produce is bountiful. Oats and barley are also abundant crops, except on light soils, where the want of rain has been most felt.

SHREWSBURY, Thursday, July 20.

CHARGE OF CHILD MURDER.

Esther Dyos, aged 28, was charged with the wilful murder of her new-born male child, on the 31st of May, at the parish of St. Leonard, Bridgenorth.

Mr. Ryan stated the case for the prosecution, from which it appeared, as well as from the subsequent evidence, that the prisoner had cohabited with a person named Henry Bower, and that they lodged as man and wife at the house of a woman named Yeardley, who hinted to the prisoner that she was in the family way, when the latter evaded the interrogatory, and said that she was not, but would soon know if the contrary were the fact. She was overheard to leave her room very early on the morning of the 31st of May, and to speak with Henry Bower, who went down stairs at the same time. From subsequent circumstances an inquiry was prosecuted, and the body of a new-born male child was found dead in the place where the prisoner had been, but without any appearance of violence, or any other reason for supposing that the birth had been attended with any thing remarkable, except its precipitancy, and the unfavourable situation in which it had occurred. The poor woman said, that she had heard the child "whine once," and a surgeon declared his belief that it had grown to a mature size for a new-born infant, and was alive, judging from the expansion of the lungs within the cavity of the breast, and adding the reason, (which is a vulgar error), that the lungs floated in water.

Henry Bower was called, but did not answer. The prisoner seemed much affected, was labouring under deafness, and without counsel, until late in the trial, when Mr. Phillips humanely interposed a legal objection in her behalf, which he argued with considerable ingenuity. It was this, that if Bower had been with the prisoner at the time of the birth, of which the evidence, he contended, raised a strong presumption for the jury, there was an end of the charge of concealment of birth, (that of murder had not been relied upon at the opening of the case,) it having been held in the case of the "King and Peate," according to Mr. Archbold's useful little book, that even if an accomplice were present, the charge of concealment could not be sustained. He was aware that the principle of this rule had been somewhat shaken in the subsequent case of the "King and Elizabeth Cornwall," in page 336 of "Russell and Ryan;" but there the cause of the deviation arose from a circumstance which was not to be found in the present case; in the former there was evidence of the woman's denial of the birth immediately after it had occurred; here the prisoner admitted the fact, and said, she had heard the child whine, though she was unable to save it.

The Court overruled the objection, and could not concur in the version of law, that the presence of an accomplice would save a party from the charge of concealment; but there was not evidence enough even to presume the presence of Bower.

The Jury acquitted the prisoner of murder, and convicted her of concealment of the birth. The Court sentenced her to six months' imprisonment, after commenting severely upon the nature of that offence, as it led in a great variety of instances to a perpetration of the horrid crime of murder. With respect to Bower, there was evidence in the depositions before the magistrates, that he did not know what the prisoner was about, that he became incensed at her conduct when he discovered it, and then swore that he never would cohabit with her in future.

THE BRITISH SPECIFIC, for re-producing and promoting the GROWTH of HAIR.—The principle of its operation is to cool and contract the pores which are opened by a redundancy of heat, occasioning a relaxation of the roots, and render them incapable of retaining the hair; to counteract which nothing is better calculated than the British Specific, as, from its invigorating and oleaginous properties, it almost immediately arrests the falling off, and affords such effectual nourishment to the roots, that persons giving it a fair trial may assure themselves of its speedily restoring it even where it has become completely bald, however long it may have been so, and, if grey, gradually to restore it to its natural colour. The superiority of this preparation (the invention of a medical man) derives additional recommendation from its being, unlike other compositions for the hair, so extremely clean and agreeable, that its application is a real pleasure, and is only requisite to be generally known to receive the preference of every article in use for similar purposes. To be had only of D. Peden, 15, Burlington Arcade, Piccadilly, in bottles 6s. each, or cases of four bottles for 1l., forwarded to order, on receiving the amount, post paid.

WINES, RETAIL and WHOLESALE.—Café de L'Europe, No. 9, Hay Market, two doors above the Theatre Royal. This splendid Room, which has been fitted up in the most elegant and costly manner, is opened for the reception of the Public, for the consumption and sale of every description of European wines, both bottled and from the wood; the entire stock has been Imported and selected with judgment and liberality, and no expense has been spared to render the whole worthy of patronage. The Morning, Evening, and Foreign Journals, with the popular Periodicals and Pamphlets will be provided.

BURGESS' ESSENCE of ANCHOVIES, Warehouse, 107, STRAND, corner of Savoy Steps, London.---JOHN BURGESS and SON, being apprised of the numerous endeavours made by many persons to impose a spurious article for their make, feel it incumbent upon them to request the attention of the public, in purchasing what they conceive to be the Original, to observe the Name and Address correspond with the above. The general appearance of the spurious descriptions, will deceive the unguarded, and for their detection J. B. and Son submit the following caution:---Some are in appearance at first sight "Burgess' Essence of Anchovies;" others, "Burgis's," and many more without address.--JOHN BURGESS and SON having been many years honoured with such distinguished approbation, feel every sentiment of respect towards the public, and earnestly solicit them to inspect the labels previous to purchasing what they conceive to be of their make, which they hope will prevent many disappointments.

Burgess' New Sauce for general purposes having given such great satisfaction, continues to be prepared by them, and is recommended as a most useful and convenient sauce; will keep good in all climates.

Warehouse, 107, Strand, corner of the Savoy Steps.—The Original Fish-Sauce Warehouse.

CHARLES WRIGHT'S CHAMPAGNE.

As lately, in the window of the club call'd University,
There sat with Colonel A—— the never over-busy B——.
Admiring on the well-spread walls the very huge diversity
Of Posters, Black and Red, which somewhere thereabouts we see.

Up goes a Rainbow Wine-Bill from the Op'ra Collonade.—
Charles Wright in all his glory? "A magnificent display!"
Quoth the Colonel,—"'Pon my honor, it may very well be said
"Charles is certainly, of colorists, the grandest of his day."

"Decidedly," observ'd the B——. "His characters are splendid,"— (Lord C——, a little dunny, just then chanc'd to toddle near.)
"His sale, I hear, is wonderful,—prodigiously extended.
"In spirit he's unique,—his Rouge et Blanc beyond compare!"

"Pray, who is this new Artist?" cries my Lord, "this flaming fellow
"This—what's his name?—CHARLES, who?—By all this trumpeting, 'tis plain
"He must be an incarnation of Da Vinci or Rafaello!"
"Nay, rather, I should think, my Lord—of—Philip de Champagne!"

The most prominent trait of BEAUTY is a fine HEAD of HAIR, which is effectually produced by

ROWLAND'S Macassar Oil, the original and genuine, a vegetable production, which has for many years been universally admired; also acknowledged pre-eminent for nourishing the Hair, preventing it from being injured by illness, change of climate, study, travelling, accouchement, &c. removes scurf, harshness, and dryness—renders it soft and glossy; prevents its falling off or turning grey; creates a thick growth on the baldest places; producing beautiful curls, adding a most incomparable, transcendent, and beautiful lustre, rendering the head-dress truly enchanting. Ask for "Rowland's" Macassar Oil, at 3s. 6d.; 7s.; 10s. 6d.; and 21s. per bottle.

Rowland's Kalydor, for the complexion, which immediately diffuses on the skin a delectable and pleasing coolness, truly refreshing; renders the skin peculiarly soft and pleasant; removes freckles, pimples, and all cutaneous eruptions; imparts luxuriant and matchless beauty to the complexion.

Rowland's Essence of Tyre for changing red and grey whiskers to black or brown.

Rowland's Alsana Extract for the tooth-ach, and preserving and beautifying the teeth and gums.

Caution.—In consequence of the high popularity of the above articles, base impostors have imitated the labels, bills, and bottles. To guard against such imposition, it is necessary on purchasing to ask for "Rowland's," strictly observing their signatures in red on each bottle of the genuine articles,

"A. ROWLAND and SON, 20, Hatton-garden."

NEW EDITION, THE TENTH, ENLARGED,
With Observations on the Danger of trusting to Nostrums, as an Internal Remedy for the Cure of Strictures. Illustrated by Cases. Price 3s.

PRACTICAL OBSERVATIONS on STRICTURES of the URETHRA and RECTUM, recommending an improved system for their Treatment and Cure; illustrating its efficacy by numerous remarkable and highly important cases, in some of which, Strictures of from ten to twenty years duration have been totally removed in a few weeks, and its superiority thereby fully established over every other method hitherto practised. By C. B. COURTENAY, M.D. To which are added, Observations and Practical Comments on Gleet, Seminal Weakness, and the miseries occasioned by Self Abuse, for the cure of which a mode of treatment, the result of long and successful practice, and at once safe, speedy, and effectual, is adopted by the Author.

Printed for the Author, Robert-street, Adelphi; and published and sold by Jones and Sherwood, Paternoster-row; Onwhyn, 4, Catherine-street, Strand; Chapell, Royal Exchange; Marsh, 145, Oxford-street; Walker, 90, High Holborn; Chappell, 94, Pall Mall; Sutherland, 9, Carlton-street, Edinburgh; and may be had of all Booksellers.

"We earnestly recommend the cases related by Dr. Courtenay to the perusal of such of our readers as are afflicted with the complaints which the Author has made the subject of these Observations. Several instances are adduced of the recovery of perfect health from states which were considered hopeless by Practitioners of eminent talents, and very extensive experience. We entertain the highest opinion of Dr. Courtenay's professional skill, and congratulate him on his successful and judicious application to these severe and often fatal diseases."—European Magazine.

IMPOSTURE UNMASKED.—The progress of Merit, although frequently assailed, is not impeded by Envy and Detraction. The aggression of ambuscade terminates in defeat; and conscious rectitude ultimately triumphs in the attainment of the grand object—public approbation. The test of experience is the guarantee of favour, and has established WARREN's BLACKING in general estimation; of which there exists not a stronger proof than the tacit acknowledgment of a host of servile imitators, who surreptitiously obtrude on the unwary a spurious preparation as the genuine article, to the great disappointment of the unguarded purchaser, and manifest injury of WARREN, whose character and interest by this iniquitous system are equally subject to detriment. It becomes therefore an indispensable duty to CAUTION THE PUBLIC against the manœuvres of Unprincipled Venders, who having no character to lose, and stimulated by avarice in their nefarious pursuits, aim at the acquisition of money through any medium than that of honour! The original and matchless BLACKING bears on each bottle a short direction, with the signature

ROBERT WARREN

All others are counterfeits; and in many instances the imposition labels are artfully interlined with a different address, in very small characters, between the more conspicuous ones of "No. 30," and "STRAND." It is earnestly recommended to Shopkeepers and others who are deceived by base fabrications of WARREN's BLACKING, to return the detected trash to the source whence it came, and expose the machinations of rascality to merited obloquy.

WARREN's BLACKING is surpassingly brilliant;—it excludes damp; gives pliancy to the leather; retains its pristine virtue in all climates; and, combining elegance with comfort, is an article equally of indispensable fashion and utility. Sold by every respectable Vender in Town and Country, in bottles, at 6d. 10d. 12d. and 18d. each.

DISTRESS in SPITALFIELDS.—At a MEETING of the COMMITTEE, holden in the Vestry-room of Christ Church Spitalfields, August 5, 1826.

The Rev. RICHARD HARVEY in the Chair:

The Committee lament to say that the distress among the Spitalfields Weavers has not yet began to diminish. Notwithstanding every endeavour on their part to reduce the number of cases, and the relief afforded to each, the money distributed during the last week amounted to 480l. 17s. 6d., and on this sum, 9,000 persons were entirely supported. In consequence of the diminution of their resources, they have this week been compelled to make a further reduction in the allowance afforded to winders: and a still more general reduction, preparatory to an entire cessation of all relief whatever, must almost immediately take place, if this appeal does not meet with greater success than those which have been lately made.

The Committee have witnessed with the deepest regret the proceedings which have lately taken place respecting an increase of wages, calculated as they are to impress the public with a conviction that abundance of work may be obtained at the reduced prices. This, however, they can positively affirm is not the fact. No attempt whatever has been made to strike, in order to obtain higher wages, nor is there the slightest indication of such an intention.

The Committee pledge themselves to use the utmost vigilance to obtain the earliest information on this subject, and to afford no relief whatever to any person who may refuse work on any terms.

FOUR YEARS in FRANCE; or, Narrative of an English Family's Residence there during that Period. By a Fellow of Magdalen College, Oxford.

"Having lived between three and four months in Paris, and between three and four years in the south of France with my family, I have made observations, which I hope may be useful to those who have the same plan of foreign residence or travel, and not less interesting, both to them, and to those who are content with their English Home, than the remarks of a more hasty tourist. The care of a household, and of the education of children, brings the head of a family to the knowledge of many circumstances and combinations which escape the notice of the single traveller; and intercourse with the society of a place, during a sojourn, gives some insight into the character, some perception of the manners and opinions of a people."—INTRODUCTION.

BRUSSELLS, PLACE ROYALE, HOTEL DE L'EUROPE.—F. BOUNY has the honour to apprize the Nobility and Public who travel, he has recently fitted up and opened the above spacious Hotel, with superior elegance and every requisite for comfort. F. B. feels a conviction his long acquaintance with English habits, together with the peculiarly advantageous situation of his Hotel will secure him extensive patronage, and respectfully solicits those travelling to favour him with their early commands to insure his best attention to care of baggage, and enable him to obviate (by giving the fullest particulars of route) the inconveniences incidental to travelling.

J. PERRING, of No. 413, Strand, two doors from the Adelphi Theatre, offers to the public HATS at prices accordant with the times, not made up for Sale alone, but warranted of the best materials, such as will do the Seller and Wearer equal credit. To sell cheaper only than other persons is not the end sought for—to produce a good article bearing a small profit for Ready Money, best suits the convenience of both parties. The Proprietor of this establishment has carried on business many years upon such fine ples, with satisfaction to himself, and a discerning public.

Among the many systems of trade, perhaps this is not the worst at any rate—the purchase of One Hat will ruin no man; those who have confidence to do so, are respectfully solicited to favour the Proprietor with a call. The following priced Hats are particularly recommended to the notice of the Economical:

Good Fine Rich Silk Hats in a variety of shapes, at ..... 15s.

Perring's Patent Double-edged Ditto, having an extra quantity of Napping on that part of the Crown most exposed to wear ..... 17s.

GUNS WITHOUT LOCKS.—After much labour and expense, J. RIVIERE has succeeded in so far simplifying the machinery by which Fire Arms are discharged, as to render Gun Locks totally unnecessary. By this simple method of discharging Fire Arms, (for which J. R. has obtained his Majesty's Royal Letters Patent,) accidents will be prevented, and the price of Guns and Pistols materially reduced. There are also considerable advantages which the newly improved Construction of the Gun and Pistol possesses over those now in use, and which may be seen at the Manufactory, 315, Oxford-street.

BURGESS' ESSENCE of ANCHOVIES, Warehouse, 107, STRAND, corner of Savoy Steps, London.—JOHN BURGESS and SON, being apprised of the numerous endeavours made by many persons to impose a spurious article for their make, feel it incumbent upon them to request the attention of the public, in purchasing what they conceive to be the ORIGINAL, to observe the Name and Address correspond with the above. The general appearance of the spurious descriptions will deceive the unguarded, and for their detection J. B. and Son submit the following caution:—Some are in appearance at first sight "Burgess' Essence of Anchovies;" others, "Burgis's," and many more without address.—JOHN BURGESS and SON having been many years honoured with such distinguished approbation, feel every sentiment of respect towards the public, and earnestly solicit them to inspect the labels previous to purchasing what they conceive to be of their make, which they hope will prevent many disappointments.

Burgess' New Sance for general purposes having given such great satisfaction, continues to be prepared by them, and is recommended as a most useful and convenient sauce; will keep good in all climates.

THE BRITISH SPECIFIC, for re-producing and promoting the GROWTH of HAIR.—The principle of its operation is to cool and contract the pores which are opened by a redundancy of heat, occasioning a relaxation of the roots, and render them incapable of retaining the hair; to counteract which nothing is better calculated than the British Specific, as, from its invigorating and oleaginous properties, it almost immediately arrests the falling off, and affords such effectual nourishment to the roots, that persons giving it a fair trial may assure themselves of its speedily restoring it, even where it has become completely bald, however long it may have been so, and, if grey, gradually to restore it to its natural colour. The superiority of this preparation (the invention of a medical man) derives additional recommendation from its being, unlike other compositions for the hair, so extremely clean and agreeable, that its application is a real pleasure, and is only requisite to be generally known to receive the preference of every article in use for similar purposes. To be had only of D. Peden, 15, Burlington Arcade, Piccadilly, in bottles, 6s. each, or cases of four bottles for 1l., forward to order on receiving the amount, post paid.

ROYAL GLOUCESTER SCIENTIFIC RIDING AND DRIVING ACADEMY, near the Magdalen, Blackfriars-road.—Mr. C. STEWART, Sen., Proprietor of the above fashionable and commodious Equestrian Establishment, begs leave most respectfully to announce to the Nobility, Gentry, and a liberal Public, whose distinguished favours he has so long experienced, that he has engaged, for their sole instruction and accommodation, Mr. P. AUREL, Captain and Commander of Cavalry, for the express purpose of giving them Lectures experimentally on Horsemanship, either in the Light Horse or Dragoon Department; as well as to teach the Broad Sword Exercise, the use of the Lance, Sabre, and Pistol, either on Foot or Horseback, when trotting or gallopping, on the most improved Modern, Scientific, and Military Principles, as now practised on the Continent: likewise to teach Ladies and Gentlemen the polite art of Riding in all its various branches, and to Break Horses of the most virious, unruly, and turbulent tempers, as to plunging, kicking, &c. &c. Mr. P. A. has, in addition the peculiar advantage of giving his Lectures in the French, Spanish, and Italian Languages, and flatters himself that he will be found to give the highest satisfaction to those who may do him the honour of giving him a trial of his high capabilities, and that he will with ease convey a perfect idea of the knowledge of the above languages in a few lessons.

FOREIGN INTELLIGENCE.

TURKEY.—French papers of Tuesday contain some intelligence from Constantinople, which has probability for its basis, if not truth. It is stated that the Janissaries at Arianople, Widdin, and Sophia, have taken arms, and threatened to march upon the capital. Similar movements were expected at Belgrade, and at every place were Janissaries are stationed. It is also added, that, in Constantinople itself, a re-action has taken place; that the Janissaries, who were thought to be completely vanquished, had again risen in arms, and, aided by a part of the populace, had set fire to the buildings where the new troops are quartered. It may be, that some of this is exaggerated; but, unless we believe the whole to be invention, it must prepare us for that which, from the first, we regarded as likely, a final struggle on the part of this turbulent and factious body, to defend their privileges. The promptness and vigour of the Sultan, in the first moments of the conflict, stunned them, as it were: but when we consider their numbers, their character, and the interests they have at stake, is it to be supposed they would suffer themselves to be annihilated without an effort to avert it? Certainly, if the bold enterprise of Mahmoud should end thus.—if the brief but bloody conflict in the capital, should prove the beginning and the end—it would puzzle us to determine whether the Grand Seignior ought to be congratulated more upon his good fortune, than upon the wisdom and energy of his measures.

The fortifications of Bhurtpore have been demolished; the principal bastions and parts of several curtains were bown up on the 6th of February, and it is left to the rains to complete the ruin. The Fatty Bourge, or "bastion of the victory," built as the Bhurtporeans vaunted, with the bones and blood of Englishmen who fell in the assault under Lord Lake, is now laid low, and among the destroyers were some of those "white men permitted to fly from her eternal walls," who, after a period of twenty years, returned to the assault to witness her towers and battlements crumbling to dust.

OUTRAGE IN UPPER CANADA.

TOTAL DESTRUCTION OF THE PRINTING OFFICE OF THE COLONIAL ADVOCATE.

From the Canadian Freeman.

We have this day to unfold to our readers a tale, the like of which has never been heard since the days that Solon or Lycurgus turned their attention to the framing of laws for the well-being and good government of civil society.

On Thursday last, a set of men, holding high and honourable situations under the Colonial Government in this town—a set of men not irritated by distress, disappointed hopes, or political degradation—but wallowing in ease and comfort—basking in the sunshine of royal favour—enjoying every right and privilege of freemen, and fattening on the loaves and fishes which are purchased by the toils of a loyal, peaceable, and industrious population—formed themselves into a conspiracy against the public peace—and between the hours of six and seven o'clock in the evening, while the great enemy of guilt as yet hovered above the horizon to restrain the arm of the ordinary desperado—they attacked the printing office of the Colonial Advocate, broke open the door in the presence of several witnesses, and demolished press, type, forms, sticks, cases, frames, galleys, stands, &c. &c. until the whole materials, which were new and of the first quality, exhibited nothing but a heap of ruins. Lest the types might be picked up and turned to some advantage, large quantities were carried down on the merchants wharf and thrown into the lake! All this, we are informed, was carried on in the presence of two Magistrates, who viewed the work of destruction with silent complacency!—Two British Magistrates!—O! clarum et venerabile nomen!—Two Police Magistrates of Little York, it is said, stood coolly gazing on the open violation of all law, both human and divine—while the son of one of them was engaged in the work!

When the Advocate office was assailed by seventeen men, well armed with clubs, &c. the Editor and his family were absent, save an old lady of eighty, whose feeble arm was ill adapted to afford resistance against such a force. Two of the band, on seeing the old woman, not expecting to meet a living creature in the house, fled in a state of extreme trepidation, but the other fifteen brave fellows stood their ground like Spartans, and after getting the better of the old lady and two boys (apprentices in the office, who came up to her assistance,) by intimidation, they proceeded to the work of destruction, and completed their business in a few minutes.

On hearing of the affair, we hastened to the spot; and such another scene of ruin we never beheld. But language is inadequate to paint our feelings, when we beheld the aged, helpless, and venerable mother of the Editor, her natural protector, absent from her, standing in the midst of the ruins, viewing the wreck of her son's property in silent sorrow.

MASSACRE OF AN ENGLISH CREW.

SUMATRA.—Captain Endicott, of the ship Packet, arrived at Boston in 119 days from Troumond, west coast of Sumatra, reports that an English brig was cut off, about the 1st of January, near Pulo Munky, where she anchored in a calm, by one Ponyam Hadjee (brother to the Rajah of Troumond) and his boat's crew. They had joined the vessel at Troumond for the purpose of assisting the Captain in procuring pepper at Asahan, and on the way treacherously murdered him, his supercargo, officers, and most part of the crew. The vessel was re-captured the next day by an English ship, and carried to Calcutta. Understood that a plan was laid by a number of natives, headed by one Warhob, to cut off the American ship Maine, Captain Davis. They embarked on board two prows, with some pepper, as they said, for sale—and went from South Tally Pow to Mingin, where the ship was lying: they went alongside, and offered to sell their pepper, saying their prows were loaded with that article. Captain Davis readily admitted part of them on board; but being a little suspicious of them, they being more numerous than when nothing but traffic is intended, he examined their prows—and, finding but few bags of pepper, and plenty of arms, he at once drove them from his vessel, and thus escaped the danger.—American Paper.

Captain Edicott, who arrived at Boston yesterday from Sumatra, was informed at Troumond, by the Rajah, that the Dutch had taken possession of Pulo Nyas (a valuable island off the west coast of Sumatra), and Barroos, a small place between Sinkel and Tappanooly, both belonging to the natives; that the Malays were much disturbed at this outrage, and would, if they had the means, attack the invaders without delay; and that the Rajah had written to the King of England, soliciting his interference to procure the restoration of both places to the Malays; and Captain Endicott saw the letters, which were forwarded in an English vessel via Calcutta.—From another American Paper.

A letter from Trieste, written on the 6th ult., says—"There are still sad divisions among the Greek leaders, but I am happy to say that the ship-owners are cordially disposed to co-operate with Lord Cochrane. They have altogether 235 sail (independent of the piratical vessels, the owners of which are declared by the Government of Napoli traitors to the State). The number of guns which they carry is only four hundred, as some have only only one gun, and others only muskets, but the crews are upwards of fourteen thousand fine seamen, many of whom, being strangers to it to Lord Cochrane's ships, will do much execution."

As a proof of the increasing prosperity of New South Wales, it may be sufficient to state that there are now five newspapers published in that colony—viz. three in Sydney and two at Hobart Town.

IRELAND.

TRIAL FOR THE MURDER OF SULLIVAN, AT THE GALWAY ELECTION.

GALWAY, JULY 29.—The trial looked forward to with so much anxiety, and which excited an interest unparalleled in the annals of this county, has just terminated. The Honourable Mr. Bingham, Mr. Lambert, and all the other persons charged with the murder of Sullivan, during the riots at the late Election, have, after a most patient and long protracted investigation, been this moment Acquitted, with the entire concurrence of the Learned Judge who presided.

CROWN COURT.

Thomas Dillon Lambert, and John William Crowne, Esqrs., the Honourable Denis Arthur Bingham, Patrick O'Connor, Roderick O'Connor, David Wilson, and John Blake, Esqrs., were put to the bar, charged with the wilful murder of Jeremiah Sullivan.

The indictment, upon which a true bill had been found the preceding day, charged that Thomas Dillon Lambert did, on the 28th day of June, in the 7th year of his present Majesty's reign, wilfully and maliciously discharge a pistol loaded with a leaden ball at the person of Jeremiah Sullivan, thereby inflicting upon him a mortal wound, of which he languished and died; and that the said Denis Arthur Bingham, and the several other prisoners arraigned, were then and there aiding and assisting the said Thomas Dillon Lambert. The prisoners pleaded Not Guilty.

A considerable time was occupied before the Jury were sworn, and the pannel, of which only forty answered to their names, was called over on fines of 50l.

Eleven challenges were made on the part of the Crown, and seventeen on behalf of the prisoners. The Jury having been sworn—

Mr. North stated the case briefly on the part of the prosecution, and detailed with great clearness the facts connected with it.

The first witness examined was Francis O'Shaugnessy, an apothecary. Lives in Merrick-square, next door but one to Kilroy's hotel; remembers the 28th June last; was standing at his own door on the evening of that day; knows the prisoners at the bar; identifies them; saw the prisoners, with several others, on the evening in question; saw them running out of Kilroy's Hotel; they were all armed; Mr. Browne had a case of pistols, Mr. Lambert had another case: Mr. R. O'Connor one pistol, Mr. Wilson a sword, which was in the scabbard at the time he left the hotel; cannot recollect whether Mr. Bingham was armed or not; other persons besides those already named accompanied the prisoners, but they were not armed; did not see Mr. Blake, one of the prisoners, with them on that evening; the prisoners went out in a great hurry; there were six or eight persons of the same rank as the prisoners in company with them; no person of inferior rank accompanied them; the gentlemen on quitting the hotel first went into Kilroy's yard and remained there about a minute; witness was looking at them, and saw Mr. P. O'Connor arm himself with a large pitchfork, and Mr. R. O'Connor had a rack-stave; the other gentlemen who were now at the bar were armed, some with scrapers, others with handles of brooms and shovels; when they came out they stopped opposite Kilroy's gateway; the whole party stopped for a moment; witness saw Mr. R. O'Connor rise the rack-stave over his head, and heard him call out, "Come boys, follow me," or words to that effect; besides there were ten or twelve of the lower class; Kilroy's hotel was occupied during the election by Mr. Lambert's friends; the prisoners, with the other persons, on leaving the gateway ran on in the direction of William-street; the party amounted at this time to between twenty-five and thirty; they proceeded rather quick, and witness soon lost sight of them; remained standing at his own door during their absence; in about five minutes the whole of the prisoners returned; does not include Mr. Blake; they passed witness's door to the hotel, armed as they went out, with the exception of Mr. Browne, who brought back but one pistol; heard no shots fired, nor any thing said by them on their return.

Cross-examined by Mr. Pennefather—His house adjoins Kilroy's Hotel; witness was at home on Sunday, the 25th of June; remembers the house in the square being attacked and burned by the mob; the house was opposite witness's; Mr. Lambert's freeholders were in the house when it was on fire; saw the mob pelting stones at it while the house was burning; this burning was not the only outrage that was committed during the election, witness soon lost sight of the party who came out of Kilroy's; they turned down William-street, at about 100 yards from where witness was standing; heard of no uproar on that evening in the rear of Kilroy's; the party were not five minutes away from Kilroy's till their return.

By a Juror—Will take upon himself to particularize the arms Mr. Lambert and his party had, although they rushed out in a very great hurry.

William Kennedy examined through the medium of an interpreter—Was at the door of a man named Stephens, opposite the meat-market, in William-street; knew but three of the prisoners, Mr. Lambert and the two Mr. O'Connors; did not see what arms the party had; saw two pistols with Mr. Lambert; saw the party firing down the street; there was a great crowd there at the time; some of the people were not ten yards from where the pistols were fired; others were one hundred yards off; saw Mr. Lambert fire two shots; can't say whether they took effect or not; knew deceased; saw him standing at the opposite side from where witness was, near the meat-market, and Mr. Lambert running after him; did not see anything in the Messrs. O'Connor's hands; did not see them do anything; saw no stones thrown; did not see any people coming out of Prendergast's garden; there was a large mob assembled at the shambles: Mr. Lambert and Mr. O'Connor ran back after the shots were fired.

John O'Hara, Martin Geoghegan, William Elwood, P. Rorke, Thomas Cottingham, Martin Kinnry, and Redmond Comyns, were produced on the part of the Crown, as also Doctor Gray, who examined the wound inflicted on the deceased. The evidence for the Crown was nearly similar to that given by Shaughness and Kennedy, and the testimony was intended to show that the people were quiet, and that the shots were fired wantonly. One of the Crown witnesses, however, admitted that Sullivan, the deceased, struck one of Mr. Lambert's party.

After the case for the Crown had closed,

Mr. Pennefather addressed the Bench, and stated that Mr. John Blake was entitled to an acquittal, inasmuch as no evidence had been offered sufficient to inculpate him in the transaction.

The Counsel for the Crown, after consulting for some time, agreed with Mr. Pennefather, and the Jury accordingly, under the direction of the Learned Judge, found Mr. Blake Not Guilty, and he was discharged before the defence of the other prisoners was gone into.

FOR THE DEFENCE.

William Sheppard, a private in the 8th Hussars, was examined. He was quartered in Kilroy's Hotel on the night that Sullivan was shot. Knows where Prendergast's garden is situated; some of Mr. Lambert's men were in it on the 28th June; a violent attack was made on them by some of Mr. Martin's friends; it was to succour his voters that Mr. Lambert and his friends ran out as described by the first witness. Heard a violent tumult in the garden; heard the cry of murder from the garden; witness alarmed the gentlemen in Kilroy's, who ran out armed to protect their men; the mob ran towards the doors of the garden before the witness got down; witness said to the gentlemen at Kilroy's who were then at dinner, "for God's sake, gentlemen, come down stairs, for the mob in the garden are committing murder;" witness then went to the troop serjeant-major, and reported what was going on; the serjeant-major immediately ordered the troop out.

Walter Butler, Walter Blake, and Joseph Zouche, Esqrs., members of Mr. Lambert's Committee, and who were with Mr. Lambert's party when the alarm was given, proved distinctly that the gentlemen on reaching the shambles, expostulated with the mob, and advised them to disperse; that Walter Blake was struck with a stone on the head, which split his hat in two and cut him severely; that a mob of 150 persons were assembled around the shambles, who behaved in the most outrageous manner, and pelted the gentlemen frequently with stones; and that no shots were fired until the gentlemen had been frequently attacked and their lives in peril.

These witnesses were cross-examined at great length, but without, in the slightest degree, shaking the testimony which they had given on their direct examination.

The Learned Judge then commenced summing up the evidence. After his Lordship had concluded, the Jury retired for a few minutes, and returned their verdict, acquitting all the prisoners.

The Judge then called the prisoners to the front of the dock, and in a very solemn and impressive address expressed his perfect concurrence with the verdict of the Jury. His Lordship hoped that the prisoners and their friends would not entertain any violent or vindictive feelings towards the persons who prosecuted, or those by whom the prosecution was instituted.

The announcement of the verdict and the address of his Lordship were received with acclamation.

STATE OF TRADE.

A few days ago a deputation from the distressed manufacturers and workmen connected with the woollen-cloth trade of the town of Frome, in the county of Somerset, waited upon Mr. Peel, to request that he would present a petition to the King, praying for what they considered a remedy for the existing distresses of that trade. Upon presenting the petition to Mr. Peel, they stated that they had just left an immense number of their townsmen in the greatest possible distress, out of employment, and without any visible probability of being able to save themselves from starvation. Mr. Peel expressed great astonishment at the assurance made by Mr. Greenland, one of the deputation, that there was distress in the West of England. He could scarcely credit such a report, as it had never reached his ears through any other channel. He begged to be informed what was the opinion of the most intelligent persons at Frome as to the causes of this distress. The deputation then pointed out some particular portions of the machinery, by the operations of which, combined with that of the corn laws, and other measures of desperate severity upon the poor, the people were, they said, reduced almost to the last extremity. Mr. Peel, after having listened most attentively to every thing the deputation had to say, expressed his regret at the condition of the poor, but lamented that he could hold out no hopes of a remedy. The evil, although great, must cure itself. How could the ministers, who had urged the manufacturers to lay out immense sums of money on machinery, turn round upon those manufacturers and compel them to abandon what they had encouraged them to adopt in the first instance.

The deputation then left Mr. Peel in absolute despair, and applied for advice to Mr. Hunt, to whom they communicated the result of their conference. Mr. Hunt, who had become fully acquainted with the distresses of the manufacturing population of Frome, during his canvass for Somersetshire, suggested to them the propriety of waiting on the Right Honourable George Canning. Upon the suggestion they determined to act, and accordingly went to Downing-street on Thursday last, and requested an interview with Mr. Canning by the following note:

August 3, 1826.

Sir,—A deputation from the manufacturers and unemployed workmen of the town of Frome, in the county of Somerset, having brought a petition to be presented to His Majesty through Mr. Secretary Peel, would feel highly honoured if you would afford them an interview on this interesting and highly important subject. I am, Sir, for the deputation, your most obliged, most humble servant,

STEPHEN GREENLAND.

To the Right Hon. George Canning.

The deputation were, however, disappointed. The clerk or officer in waiting to whom they applied, upon hearing what their business was, told them that Mr. Canning's time would be occupied for that and the two following days in conferences with Ministers of Foreign States. They, therefore apprehensive that some days might elapse before they could obtain an interview with Mr. Canning, and finding that their business would not allow of longer delay, left town last night.

LEEDS.—We have nothing at present to add to the statement which we published last week under this head, except to mention that the improvement continues gradually progressive, both in the woollen and worsted trades. A number of hands, however, are still out of work, and the orders received by the manufacturers have not been distributed by fortune as equally among them perhaps as could be wished. Some, however, of those who have looms and jennies idle, we understand, allow their former men to use them in doing jobs for other houses. The neighbourhood of Leeds is infested by beggars, many of whom assert they have come from a distance, and almost all of whom betray signs of squalid poverty and long-borne suffering.—Leeds Intelligencer.

Meetings for the relief of the unemployed poor have been held at Huddersfield, Bradford, and Halifax. It is unnecessary to point out how urgently the statements of the distress prevailing in these places appeal to the feelings of the rich and benevolent for a continuance of the succour hitherto afforded.—Leeds Intelligencer.

A correspondent of the Scotsman says, "I understand that Ministers have requested the gentlemen who waited upon them, relative to the distress of the country, not to publish what passed between them. I gather, however, that Ministers have not pledged themselves to the adoption of any particular means of remedy, nor have they held out that Parliament will be called together in November, as was stated, for the purpose of considering the matter. Emigration was suggested, but it met with an unfavourable reception."

The distress in the manufacturing towns of Trowbridge and Bradford, we regret to hear, is fully as great as ever, several of the manufactories being entirely closed. Our readers are aware that the chief manufacture of the above towns is kerseymeres.—A warm summer naturally proves injurious to this trade; but when the nankins, and other light articles now so generally worn, shall be laid aside, an impulse will be given to kerseymeres, and we trust that every workman in Trowbridge and Bradford will again find active employ.—Devizes Gazette.

As the distress has fallen with increased severity on the poor of Carrickbeg, who are principally tradesmen, a committee to collect subscriptions has been formed there for some time. By the returns of this committee, it appears, that among the population of Carrickbeg, containing about 4,000 people, there are 163 families, consisting of about 750 individuals, destitute of employment, without food, or money to procure it.—Clonmel Advertiser.

GLASGOW.—Last week not much was done in Glasgow, save on Saturday, when, encouraged by the cheering accounts from Liverpool, larger sales were effected in cotton than during the whole of the preceding five days. To-day we do not hear that much has been done.—Glasgow Free Press of Tuesday.

LAW INTELLIGENCE.

HOME CIRCUIT—Maidstone, Aug. 2.

The Commission was opened by Mr. Justice Holroyd and Mr. Sergeant Onslow (instead of Baron Graham, who has been recently attacked with a severe fit of the gout.)

EXTENSIVE FORGERIES.

The Grand Jury having returned into Court, found a number of bills; amongst them is one for forgery, against John Peele, otherwise George Watson, merchant, the person whose exploits in this way have been so remarkably extensive, that it is supposed he has committed this offence in every county in the kingdom. He was shortly afterwards placed at the bar, and having been arraigned in the usual form, he requested an hour and a half to consider what plea he should give.

Mr. Justice Holroyd—Certainly; let him have time to consider his plea.

The prisoner was then removed, and was subsequently placed at the bar, and indicted for having forged and uttered, knowing it to be forged, a certain bill of exchange, amounting to 37l. 11s. 6d. purporting to be drawn by Nathaniel Underwood, with intent to defraud Thomas Beeching and others.

Prisoner—I plead guilty.

Mr. Justice Holroyd—It is my duty to tell you, you must not expect your conduct, in thus pleading, will afford any ground for mercy being extended to you. If you wish any further time to consider your plea, you may do so.

Prisoner—I have considered it. I am guilty, and I said so from the first; nor do I expect any mercy to be shown to me on account of my plea of guilty.

This was delivered in a firm tone, and the prisoner's conduct made a deep impression on the Court.

Mr. Broderick, who was for the prosecution, said the prisoner's conduct had not proceeded from any communication with the prosecutors (the Society of Bankers for the Prosecution of Forgeries) but was solely the prisoner's own act.

Mr. Justice Holroyd—Let the plea be recorded.

This being done,

Mr. Justice Holroyd said, prisouer, are you aware there are other indictments charging you with the same offence?

Prisoner—I am, my Lord; and I am equally guilty.

He was then arraigned upon a second indictment, charging him with forging, and uttering as true, a Bill of Exchange, purporting to be drawn by Alexander and James Liddle, for 35l. with intent to defraud Mr. John Steward.

Mr. Justice Holroyd humanely said, though this may be too late, yet I wish to know, do you understand you are pleading guilty to a charge which affects your life?

Prisoner—I do.

Mr. Justice Holroyd—(After consulting with the Clerk of the Assize)—You may take time till to-morrow morning to consider your plea.

Prisoner—No, my Lord, I do not wish it. I have made up my mind.

Mr. Justice Holroyd—With a thorough knowledge that your pleading guilty cannot be the slightest reason for affording you mercy?

Prisoner—(Dejected)—Yes, my Lord, with that thorough knowledge.

After a few minutes, Mr. Justice Holroyd declined passing sentence, and the prisoner was removed from the bar.

The prisoner's self-possession did not desert him throughout this appalling situation. It was rumoured throughout the Court that he would stand his trial, though he had, since his apprehension, determined on the line of conduct which he this day pursued, and the postponement which he requested in the early part of the day, gave a kind of confirmation to the report. That, however, did not proceed from any thing like hesitation, as it was solely asked to enable him to execute a conveyance, which had been in preparation, of some property, in favour of an unfortunate female, whom he seduced from her friends. We understand that the prisoner is from the neighbourhood of Cockermouth, and is most respectably conected there. He was employed as a commercial traveller for many years by a first rate house, and having become a defaulter to them about seven years ago, he absconded, and has ever since pursued the course which has led to his fate. He is stated in the calendar to be only 38 years of age, and appeared at the bar plainly dressed in a blue sailor-like jacket, and drab kerseymere pantaloons.

MAIDSTONE, August 3.

John Peele, alias George Watson, who pleaded Guilty yesterday, being placed at the bar, when

Mr. Adolphus stated, on his behalf, that, since yesterday, some friends of the prisoner had arrived in the town, and having advised him, in so serious a case, to stand an investigation of the various charges against him, he now respectfully claimed the liberty of availing himself of the indulgence which the Learned Judge had so tenderly allowed him permission to seek, if he should be so minded. The prisoner now wished to withdraw his plea of Guilty, and take his trial on the plea of Not Guilty.

Mr. Andrews and Mr. Broderick, Counsel for the prosecution, said, they had no resistance to offer to the prisoner's request; but they were placed in this difficulty, that, in consequence of the prisoner's pertinacious determination, expressed yesterday, of abiding by his plea of guilty, the witnesses for the Crown had gone away, and perhaps it might be impossible to procure their attendance again, pending the present Assizes, in which case there might be a failure of justice. A message could be sent after the witnesses, and if possible, they should be brought back by Saturday morning. If this were found impracticable, the prisoner must consent that the trial should be postponed until the next Assizes.

The matter was ordered to stand over for an hour, at the end of which time an affidavit was produced, stating, that one of the most material witnesses for the crown, a gentleman near 80 years of age, had been taken suddenly ill on his way home, and that it was impossible his attendance could be obtained during these Assizes. Under these circumstances, it was moved to postpone the trial until the next gaol delivery.

No objection was offered on the part of the prisoner, and it was accordingly ordered that the trial should stand over until the next Winter Assizes.

A Family of Nine Persons Burnt.—On Tuesday se'nnight, the farm house, at Inveruglas, occupied by A. Bell, ground officer on the Inverness-shire estate, Badenoch, was burnt to the ground, and the whole inmates, consisting of his wife, seven children, and a tailor lad from a neighbouring parish, were burnt to ashes. The unfortunate man was from home, procuring meal for his family and neighbours. It is snpposed that the fire originated from a spark from the turf in the open fire-place, and that, owing to the combustible materials of the dwelling, the fire spread so rapidly while the unhappy family were asleep, that when they were awoke, half suffocated and stupefied by the smoke, they were unable to escape from the flames; but this is mere conjecture, for none remain to tell the circumstance of their awful fate.—(Inverness Journal.)

On Tuesday, at Cardross, Mr. Robert Macintyre, miller, lost his life under the most affecting circumstances. His wife was standing by him at the time he was attempting to adjust or lay aside a belt passing over one of the wheels of the machinery, when his arm was caught, and his whole person being drawn into the vortex of the machinery, he was torn to pieces in a moment. He has left a family of five children.

Mr. Davis, of Slough, has published the result of an experiment for ripening wall-fruit by covering the wall with black paint, which has completely succeeded, besides adding to the weight of grapes nearly two-thirds.

MANCHESTER.

(From the Manchester Exchange Herald of Thursday.)

An object of high importance presents itself to the public eye, recommended, we may almost venture to assert, by the Bank of England, though indirectly, through the London Courier, the demi-official, typographical-mouth-piece of Government, and therefore deserving of observance. It is that of forming Provincial Corporate Banks. It is evident, from what the Courier says, that the Bank of England entertains very similar views with ourselves, as to the inutility of establishing Branches in the Country from Leadenhall-street; and, through the Courier, covertly recommends another, and we really think a more effectual method of preventing the recurrence of the shock which commercial credit has lately felt. In the Herald of the 20th ultimo, in announcing the intention of the Bank of England to establish a Branch in Manchester, we ventured to express our doubts as to the use and value of such an establishment in this town. The leading article of the Courier of Monday last, corroborates and strengthens the opinion we offered. The following is a copy of the demi-official communication, for such we must regard it, and we cannot but indulge the idea, that in this document we can trace the future measures, or intended measures, of his Majesty's Ministers, in respect to the Corn Laws and the Circulating Medium, by which they hope at once to conciliate the Agricultural and Commercial Interests. We know not whether the extract will make the same impression on our readers as it has done upon us—but here it is:—

[The Article alluded to in the Courier is then given.]

After having read the above, we think our readers will agree with us, that it is not at present the wish of Government that a Branch of the Bank of England should be established here; but that a Local Joint Stock Bank be formed; that that Bank should issue Notes for local accommodation, which might be received and circulated in full confidence of ultimate and uninterrupted security; and by that creation of an accredited circulating medium, make money more plentiful—or, rather, in the same plenty it was before the late panic broke up so many private banks, and shook public confidence in so great a degree as to the stability of the remainder, and occasioned so much distress. A few public local banks, immediately established, we have not the least doubt, would meet the wishes of the Ministry, and enable them to meet Parliament, and open their plans with additional confidence, since they could point out to such strong outworks of defence for the public credit, and such secure protection for the agriculturist, the merchant, the manufacturer, and the economical and industrious operative.

APPREHENSION OF A BAND OF ROBBERS.

(From the Bath Journal.)

Incredible as it may appear, a numerous gang of robbers, with the necessary appurtenance of romance—a cave—has existed at Wickwar, in this county, for more than seven years; during which period, although they have been the terror of the neighbourhood, and have extended their depredations over an extensive tract of country, they have contrived to elude the prying eye of justice. Last week, however, in consequence of some suspicious circumstances, the police were induced to pay a visit to Yate Common, where they took into custody an old man of the name of Mills, his wife, and their four sons; and immediately after their apprehension, those persons disclosed the history of the lawless community with which they were connected. The whole gang is supposed to have amounted to 40 or 50, of which number, we understand, thirty-one men and women have been apprehended. It appears that, connected with a kitchen in old Mills' house, on Yate Common, these well organised bandits had constructed a subterraneous cave or storehouse, the entrance to which was behind the fire-place, where the soot and a large pot effectually prevented the slightest suspicion; and in this cave the officers found twenty sides of bacon, quantities of cloth, wheat, barley, oats, malt, cheese, two bedsteads, and 50*l*., chiefly in half-crown pieces. The accounts which have reached us of the depredation of the gang almost exceed belief. It has been no uncommon thing for a farmer to rise in the morning and find the greater part of his furniture, fat pigs, poultry, cheese, &c. swept away; and the cave or depository for the stolen goods was so well contrived, that all search for the property was invariably made in vain. Besides the family of Mills, a man of the name of Gardiner, his wife, and two sons, are in custody. We understand that among the prisoners is a parish clerk; and that a respectable shopkeeper, at Wootton-under-Edge, stands charged with having been employed in the purchase and sale of the stolen property.

THE ARMY.

One troop of the 4th Dragoon Guards has been ordered from Manchester to Dudley, and another troop of the same corps to Wolverhampton.

A Detachment belonging to the 90th Regiment of Infantry, embarked, on Friday, on board a vessel in the River, on route to Carlisle.

A Detachment belonging to the 83d Regiment of Foot, embarked, Friday morning, on board a vessel in the River, for Tynemouth.

Major-General William Grant.—The late Major-General William Grant entered the service on the 24th October, 1778, as an Ensign in the 55th Regiment of Foot; obtained on the 7th of February, 1781, a Lieutenancy in the same corps, and was promoted on the 24th January, 1791, to a company of Independents. He was appointed on the 16th March, 1791, to the 77th Regiment, obtained, on the 17th June, 1802, the Majority of the same corps, and was promoted, on the 9th July, 1801, to a Lieut.-Colonelcy, in the 14th Battalion of Reserve. He was placed, on the 25th February, 1805, upon half-pay, was appointed, on the 15th August, 1805, to the 82d Foot, was made, on 4th June, 1811, Colonel in the Army, and was raised, on the 4th June, 1814, to the rank of Major-General.

The amusing Bagatelle "Buy a Broom," sung by the pretty Love every night at Vauxhall, is really a lively composition. The Author says, "No Lady should e'en be without one," and so say we, for the song has point, spirit, and good music.

The Thunder-storm.—The neighbourhood of New Bridge-street, at midnight of Thursday, afforded a singular spectacle, the whole road, for more than 100 yards in length, between Water-street and Bride-lane, being flooded up to the top of the pavement on both sides of the way, so as to present the aspect of a considerable river. About the deeper parts, towards the channels, common wherries might have floated without difficulty; and the front wheels of hackney-coaches were in water up to the axles in passing through them. From twelve to one o'clock, the lightning was remarkably vivid; and the owners of the new shot tower at Waterloo-bridge must have been under some anxiety, more than once, about their iron staircase. Two o'clock being the time of high water at London-bridge, if the rain had fallen an hour and a half later, it is likely considerable damage would have been done to the sewers; especially as many of them were already choked from the long continuance of the dry weather.

The commercial accounts from the manufacturing districts continue to be favourable. We have seen letters from Manchester and the east coast of Scotland. In both districts there is a considerable increase in the demand for goods, but only at low prices. The report of the Tuesday's market at Manchester was looked for with much interest. The revival of the trade at Manchester has a corresponding effect at Liverpool; the sales of cotton, for the last week, average about 2,000 bags per day.

MURDER IN FULHAM FIELDS.

On Thursday evening a Coroner's Inquest was held on the body of Sarah Bateman, who was killed by her husband, Isaac Bateman, in Fulham-fields.

The body exhibited a frightful picture.

Mary Hughes sworn.—The deceased and her husband resided at the Old Greyhound, in Fulham-fields; they alone occupied the house; she had known them for the last three years. The deceased was occasionally addicted to drink, and her husband also got tipsy. The deceased's husband was a labouring man in the gardening line, and his wife went out to work at the same place that he did. On Monday night, about twelve o'clock, witness heard a noise in the deceased's house; it was like the breaking of crockery; on going towards the door, she saw Isaac Bateman standing there. Witness said to him, "You thief, you have killed your wife." She thought it was so, in consequence of hearing her groan. He replied, "No, I have not hurt her; she is not hurt yet; she wants nothing but gin, and gin and water, and water I shall give her." Bateman then took a can in his hand and went to the pump; he took no water from it, but threw the can down and ran away. Witness went inside the house, and saw the deceased lying on the tiles of the ground-floor; she had all her clothes on except her cap; there was a great quantity of blood all round about her; blood was also flowing from her head, neck, and temples; the deceased was quite senseless. There was no light except what the neighbours brought, in consequence of the noise which alarmed the village. The deceased's husband did not return again during the time that witness remained there, which was till half-past one o'clock.

Juror.—Did you see any weapon?

Witness.—Yes. I saw the handle of a rake, which was found in the cupboard, broken in three pieces, but did not observe any marks of blood on it.

Mr. Matthew Giosephi, assistant to Mr. Bowling, of Hammersmith, surgeon, found deceased on the floor extended; she was in a state of insensibility. He ordered her to be carried up stairs, and assisted in putting her to bed. To some questions witness put to the deceased, she muttered several words, which he did not understand. The deceased did not smell of liquor. On examination, he discovered several contusions and cuts about her face and head.

Mr. John Bowling, surgeon—On Tuesday morning he visited the deceased; her face was a good deal contused; there was a cut over the right eye, which was black, and another cut on the scalp, behind the right ear; they were not of a dangerous nature. The deceased was then sensible, and complained of great pain at the lower part of her body. Witness inquired of her how she came in that state, when some of the neighbours observed, that her husband had said she was seen with some person in the stable, upon which the deceased said it was false, and the neighbours knew that her husband would say any thing when drunk. At this time she was aware of her danger. Witness prescribed for her, but conceiving she could not get proper attendance, advised her being brought into St. George's Hospital. The rupture of the vesica was the occasion of her death.

Mr. Henry Russell, house surgeon of St. George's Hospital, disposed to the death and post mortem appearance of the deceased. She died on Wednesday afternoon. She had no mark of a kick.

John Chapman, besides corroborating the evidence of first witness, deposed, that about half-past three o'clock the same morning he saw the deceased's husband rise from a potatoe-bed fronting the house. Witness called to him, saying, "Bateman, I want you: what have you been about?" He then came over the gate, and gave himself up, saying, to a question which he (witness) put, that he had made up his mind to die for the b— b—. Witness told him he had killed his wife. He kept him in custody, and soon after gave him in charge to a peace officer at Hammersmith. He seemed sober at this time.

Jane Couzens, about nine o'clock on Monday morning saw Bateman go out. His wife made a holiday that day, and went to the house of Mr. Hawkins, near the spot; it was a kind of merry-making. The deceased and her husband were addicted to drinking on Sundays and Mondays. On those occasions they would quarrel together, and he used to throw water generally over her. On Sunday evening last he brought the deceased out of Mrs. Mason's house, and kicked her in the side.

The Coroner now addressed the Jury, who consulted for a few minutes, and divided, when there appeared thirteen for a verdict of "Wilful Murder," and two for "Manslaughter."

Coroner—Gentlemen of the Jury, this is an important inquisition, on which we have had the opinions of medical men; but I need not inform you that twelve of yourselves are sufficient to decide the point. We have already had that number from among yourselves, besides the Foreman; and, therefore, there can be no difficulty in coming to an unanimous, though melancholy verdict, but which, I conceive, you feel bound in conscience to give.

The Jury then returned a verdict of "Wilful Murder against Isaac Bateman," and he was ordered, on the Coroner's warrant, to be forthwith committed to Newgate for trial.

EXECUTIONS.

On Wednesday morning, the sentence of the law was carried into effect upon Charles Collison, tried and convicted of sheep-stealing, by the name of Butcher, at the last June Sessions. Previous to and a short time after, the arrival of the death warrant, the prisoner impugned the verdict of the jury, by a declaration of his innocence; but, as the hour of death approached, he manifested a more proper feeling, and in the end refrained from exculpating himself.

He was attended by the Ordinary and Mr. Baker; also, by Mr. Isitt, a butcher, residing at Bedford, in whose service the prisoner lived three years, and maintained an excellent character. After the prisoner had engaged in prayer and religious conversation, he partook of the sacrament, the nature of which, from a religious education, he appeared to be acquainted with.

He arose early and wrote several letters, and an inscription in a prayer-book given him by Mr. Sheriff Kelly, which book he presented to his late master.

A little before the arrival of the Sheriff he accosted Fordham, who is ordered for execution to-morrow, and exhorted him to prepare for that fate which he (Collison) was about to undergo. The prisoner gave several directions relative to his friends, and as the hour of death approached, his mind appeared to be more tranquil and resigned.

At eight o'clock the officers arrived, and pinioned his arms, during which time the prisoner was engaged in fervent prayer, in which exercise he continued until his voice was lost in death by the hand of the executioner.

The prisoner's mother keeps a respectable inn at or near Stony Stratford, to whom he was indebted for religious education and instruction.

Stirling, July 29.—Yesterday morning, Peter Moffatt was executed at Stirling, for the murder of his father, at Kilsyth, pursuant to his sentence by the High Court of Justiciary, Edinburgh. He appeared calm and resigned to his fate, and acknowledged the justness of his sentence. About nine o'clock he dropped the signal, and was ushered into eternity. He was decently dressed, about five feet eight inches high, twenty-three years of age, and by trade a weaver. His body, after hanging the usual time, was cut down, and sent by an escort to Edinburgh, for dissection.

A letter from Paris states, that all the Allied Powers have sanctioned the new Portuguese charter, and have also notified to the Spanish Government not to interfere in the affairs of Portugal.

NOTICES TO CORRESPONDENTS.

We think it due to all parties to insert this letter, received by post on Thursday last :—

"The Editor of THE AGE ought to know who are its abusers on this side of the Tweed. A Mr. H. F. SCOTT, who has lately been elected M.P. for Roxburghshire, in the room of the late Sir ALEXANDER DON, upon all occasions abuses THE AGE. It is necessary that THE AGE should know who this Mr. H. F. THE AGE.

LONDON, AUGUST 6.

The opinions we ventured to give last week upon the existing distresses, and the various consequences and proceedings arising therefrom, have been verified in a most decided manner within these few days. It is not because a gleam of hope, a prospect of better things, may shine forth in any one particular province, that we propose, by means thereof, to illumine the whole manufacturing horizon—on the contrary, it neither makes us sanguine for the future, nor desponding of the present, by a retrospect on the past; but we wish, under all circumstances, to draw the proper conclusion, and at least when there is a promise, on no account to damp it. One of the grossest instances of sheer humbug ever practised upon public credulity, (which assumes a more glaring appearance, from the particular period when it is practised, and from the particular circumstances to which it owes its origin) has just occurred in one of the most populous and extensively manufacturing towns in the Empire; and from the pernicious example it holds out to surrounding districts, may be the means of exciting a wilful and serious alarm, unless exposed in due season.

In THE AGE of Sunday last will be found the following passage:—

"Disappointed speculators, or puddling tradesmen, anxious to draw themselves and their concerns into some notice, invariably seize an æra, like the present, to preserve their names and fames from dull oblivion, to hoist up on high the flag of patriotism, and to render themselves generally notorious. A triumvirate of this band of heroes have presented themselves at Fife House, to lay before Ministers the state of distress in Birmingham, and to speak on that subject 'the sentiments of one hundred of the principal manufacturers'—no doubt they are all three very worthy people, but as far as the limit of their authority, in the quality of their representation goes, we imagine the embassy to be all fudge, and the whole advantage, either derived or proposed, in undertaking it, was a trip to the metropolis from their smoky workshops, and the pleasure of going back to tell their artisans they had seen HIS MAJESTY'S MINISTERS—remembering well the old proverb, that 'a cat may look at a king.'"

These sentiments were the result of a general knowledge of all manufacturing privations at the existing moment, of an understanding of their real nature in the town of Birmingham, among the rest, and of an acquaintance with the names of those who constitute the only leading manufacturers in that town (not one of whom is to be found in the "Triumvirate" referred to), and, in addition to every other circumstance, of a conviction of some quackery, from the general tone which the whole affair assumed. To our infinite delight, and to the gratification of that feeling which we all entertain on the satisfactory issue of either our actions or opinions, we find every syllable therein recorded TRUE. Aris's Birmingham Gazette, one of the most admirably conducted journals in the kingdom, and one most influential as its circulation, at all times a very firm prop to the best interests of the Church and State, and one which may be looked upon as the organ of whatever is respectable in that place, on Monday last thus treats of this precious deputation:—

In the Morning Chronicle of Friday, the following paragraph was prominently set forth:—

"We learn that a Deputation from Birmingham, speaking the sentiments of above one hundred of the principal manufacturers of that town, are to meet Lord Liverpool, by appointment, this day at one o'clock. They are instructed to lay before his Lordship a statement of the distress which prevails in the district to which they belong, and the opinion entertained by the leading people in Birmingham as to the causes of it."

This article has been succeeded by the following, which we extract from the Courier of Saturday:—

"A deputation from the principal manufacturers of Birmingham had yesterday an audience, at Fife House, with Lord Liverpool, Mr. Secretary Peel, the Chancellor of the Exchequer, and Mr. Huskisson; the object of which was, to present to his Majesty's Government a memorial of the extremely depressed state of trade in that town, and praying that some measure may be devised for its immediate and effectual relief. The following are the names of the gentlemen who composed the deputation:—Charles Jones, Esq. Benjamin Hadley, Esq. and T. C. Salt, Esq."

Though we do not profess to be much in the secret as to the proceedings of the gentlemen thus coustituted "a deputation from the principal manufacturers of Birmingham," yet it becomes necessary that we should offer a remark or two to our readers on the subject. It is true we uederstood that a memorial of the description referred to had been drawn up and handed round, by one or more of the gentleman named, amongst the manufacturers, and that it was signed by many, perhaps to the number stated; but how, and by whom, these gentlemen were afterwards deputed to wait upon his Majesty's Ministers, we have yet to learn. Certain, however, we are, that whatever statements their memorial may embody as to the "distress" said to prevail here, they most assuredly have not been deputed to lay before the Government "the opinion entertained by the leading people of Birmingham, as to the causes of that distress." Since observing the first article quoted, we have made it our business to inquire as to the precise nature and contents of the memorial itself, but our efforts to obtain sight of a copy have failed.' One result of our inquiries we must add—it is, that a number of the principal inhabitants, deeply interested in the manufacturing and commercial prosperity of the town, declined countenancing the measure, on the express ground that the allegations contained in the memorial were not borne out by fact; and among those who refused were some of the most active members of our Chamber of Manufactures and Commerce, who, independent of other circumstances, were, perhaps, on that account, well enabled to judge of the accuracy of the statement offered to them to sign. In due time we shall, of course, be informed of the result of the interview.

This very proper exposition of so barefaced a proceeding drew forth the following statement, in the Thursday's Birmingham Chronicle, from the three heroes, who very modestly put a paragraph, for which they subscribed three and sixpence each, in one of the London Papers, announcing to the British Nation their gracious reception by his Majesty's Ministers, and adding, of their own free will and accord, the dignified title of Esquire to each of their names; an addition which, we should imagine, must have made any one of their fellow-townsmen imagine them to be perfectly insane, if their conduct on the occasion had not previously established that belief:—

BIRMINGHAM, AUGUST 3.

TO THE MANUFACTURERS OF THE TOWN OF BIRMINGHAM, WHO SIGNED THE MEMORIAL TO HIS MAJESTY'S GOVERNMENT, DATED JULY 13, 1826.

Gentlemen,—We think it proper to report to you, that at the instance of some of the principal manufacturers of the town, who signed the memorial, we proceeded to London for the purpose of presenting it to his Majesty's Government, and of answering any questions relative to the state of the town which ministers might think proper to ask. Upon our arrival in London we addressed a note to the Earl of Liverpool, requesting the honour of an interview, for the purpose of presenting the memorial, and his Lordship appointed Friday last, at one o'clock. We were received with great courtesy by his Lordship, in company with Mr. Secretary Peel, the Chancellor of the Exchequer, and the President of the Board of Trade. These ministers perused the memorial with great attention, and made many enquiries respecting the state of trade in the town, and the causes of the general distress, which they appeared to think arose, in a great degree, from overtrading. We ventured to represent the impossibility of this, because, during the last year, to which the charge applied, all our manufactures were carried off, by absolute consumption, quite as fast as they could be produced; whereas now, in the present year, almost all our manufactures are made for stock, notwithstanding the workmen are very generally placed upon half work, or less.

We further ventured to state, in answer to some questions put to us, that in our humble opinion, and in that of many of the principal inhabitants of Birmingham, the distress proceeded chiefly from the contraction of the circulating medium, and could not be remedied without providing an ample and secure currency, adequate to meet the obligations and immense engagements of the country.

The increase of our population, the amount of our poor levies, the management of the poor, and a variety of matters relating to our workhouse, and parochial regulations, were specific objects of inquiry, with reference to the statements contained in the memorial, and upon each of them we gave the fullest information.

After an hour's conversation upon these important subjects, our interview was terminated by an expression of the strongest assurance from the Earl of Liverpool, that the facts contained in the memorial should have the most serious consideration of His Majesty's Government.

We could have wished that nothing had been made public respecting our proceedings until the publication of this report; but we find that some unjustifiable remarks have found their way into the public papers, one of which it may be proper to notice.

In Aris's Birmingham Gazette of yesterday, an article appears (which we are persuaded did not proceed from its respectable Editor) in which it is asserted, that "a number of the principle inhabitants, deeply interested in the manufacturing and commercial prosperity of the town, declined countenancing the measure, on the express ground that the allegations contained in the memorial were not borne out by fact." As this representation may be construed into a denial of the facts stated, we think it proper to mention, that out of upwards of one hundred of the principal manufacturers of the town to whom the memorial was presented, not more than eight or ten declined signing it. Of these, not one individual denied the general correctness of the facts stated. One or two expressed their full concurrence, but stated, that owing to some peculiar circumstances, their own trades had not fallen off to the extent represented. Two or three others concurred in the whole statement, but expressed their opinion, that the Chamber of Commerce ought to have taken up the subject; and three or four others represented that the subject ought to have been brought forward at a town meeting.

The gentlemen with whom we acted, as well as ourselves, were of opinion that the Chamber of Commerce was not the most proper body to take up the subject, because the Chairman and Deputy Chairman, and many of the most influential members, are bankers, who are irritated and injured by the measures of government, and whose interests might by some be supposed to be too much compromised by those measures to allow their disinterested interference. With regard to a town's meeting also, it was thought to be advisable to make a private representation to government in the first instance, which might perhaps obviate the necessity of a public measure of that kind, during a period of so much excitement and distress. Under these impressions, the memorial has been signed by manufacturers only, who can have no other interest than that of the country at large; who have the responsibility of employing the mechanics and artisans; and who are of course better acquainted with their sufferings and privations than either merchants or bankers can be.

We cannot but regret that the sufferings and privations of these meritorious and unfortunate classes of men should have been treated rather lightly in the paper above alluded to, because nothing so soothes and consoles a distressed population, as the knowledge that their distresses are known and appreciated by their more affluent neighbours.

We think it proper to make one other remark. We have been informed, from good authority, that some individual in this town ha had the meanness to write to a member of the Administration, for the purpose of misrepresenting the statements made in the memorial, and of disparaging our humble exertions, in making known the real situation of the town, in a quarter from whence alone relief can be expected. We have, however, the satisfaction of assuring you, that this unworthy conduct has had no effect; for we had every reason to be satisfied with the reception which we experienced from his Majesty's Ministers, and with the kind and anxious attention which they paid to our representations.

We insert below a copy of the memorial, and of the signatures attached, which, with the exception of the gentlemen above alluded to, and of a few others who are absent from Birmingham, are generally those of the most respectable manufacturers of the town.

We are, gentlemen, your most obedient servants,
CHARLES JONES,
BENJAMIN HADLEY,
Birmingham, Aug. 1. THOMAS CLUTTON SALT.

We have received, in the course of the week, several private communications both from Birmingham and Manchester, on the subject of an attempt in each town to "get up" a public petition to Government, and in our letters from the former place, this "deputation from the principal manufacturers" has been laid out in its true colours. The real state of the case we believe to be this. There is in this populous town a banker by the name of THOMAS ATTWOOD, one of the most addlepated of all the King's subjects, notorious for Radicalism, pamphleteering, and shares and treasurerships of joint-stock companies; who, being behind the curtain in all crack-brained fancies about the currency, and politico-economical notions, is wisely concluded to have stimulated this. Squire SALT, a leering lamp-maker there, always considered the "fidus Achates" of TOM ATTWOOD, is consulted by him upon this trying occasion, and as being remarkable for a prodigious degree of effrontery and conceit, is deemed, and not a bad idea either, a very proper person to undertake so impudent an errand. The said Squire! is gifted, moreover, with a marvellous quantity of botheration, with which he infests every one who comes near him, and is therefore as regularly shunned as a man would be who is addicted, on all occasions, to catching you by the button; but then his MAJESTY'S MINISTERS could not know this till he made his appearance, and that only operates against his ever undertaking a similar excursion again, or rather against their ever receiving him again. Well, then, Squire SALT goes over the way to Squire JONES, a retailer of thimbles and native brass, at a large shop with the word Pantechnetheke over the door, put up in Greek letters, because the Squire does not know much of English, and, after a brief consultation, they wait upon Squire HADLEY, a worthy button-maker, and over a glass of ale, they settle the whole in a giffy.

"When shall we three meet again?"

was the wind up—why, in London to be sure, and accordingly, as their great county poet says, not only did they "sit by the fire, and presume to know what's done i'the capitol," but e'god they start off to the CAPITAL, to see that they are right, having elected themselves, previous to their departure, the bearers of some sort of petition, with the signatures attached thereto of persons, who, in signing it, were perfectly ignorant who were to present it. On their arrival in the great metropolis, they addressed the following letter to Lord LIVERPOOL—and the only wonder to us is, they did not first call and take a chop with HIS MAJESTY:—

TO THE EARL OF LIVERPOOL.

MY LORD,—The brass FOUNDERS of Birmingham, whom we represent, having more stock on hand than they know what to do with, and their business being therefore at a stand, begs to see your Lordship on the subject. That your Lordship, between ourselves, may form a proper idea of that article, we have brought up three specimens in

Your humble Servants to command,
CHARLES JONES, Esquire!
BENJAMIN HADLEY, Esquire!
THOMAS CHITTEN SALT, Esquire!

Pig and Whistle, Smithfield, July 25, 1826.

The courtesy of our Prime Minister is too proverbial to admit of any denial to such a modest request, besides which, the letter is really a very smart thing.—His LORDSHIP accordingly forwarded a Special Messenger to the genteel address from which their application was dated, allowing the interview, which terminated in affording every satisfaction to the Squires, and a vast deal of information, we should imagine, to the Crown Officers of State.

On a perusal of the letter addressed by Squires JONES, HADLEY, and SALT " to the manufacturers who signed the memorial," there is one thing for which we were really not prepared, which is, that their trade last year was worse than it is this, for they observe, that "during the last year all their manufactures were carried off by absolute consumption," which they consider an answer to an observation of the Ministry, that " their distress arose, in a great degree, from overtrading." Now, it is nothing of the sort, for it is very evident that their manufactures last year must have been on the decline, because, by their own showing, they " were all carried off," poor things," by CONSUMPTION."

It is evident, therefore, on a review of the whole affair, that a much more impudent thing was never undertaken by any set of persons, much less by three shopkeepers, and yet as a proof how " fools thrive where wise men perish," it is currently reported, that His MAJESTY intends knighting the three Squires, for this display of their industry and genius.

Badinage apart, it must be gratifying to know that the distress of which these three persons (who as well as their stultified patron, TOM ATTWOOD, are three notorious Radicals) have so laboriously treated, is, in a great measure, fictitious; for while it is impossible to deny that Birmingham has, in common with all manufacturing districts, very materially suffered in the past crisis, and the present distress arising therefrom, yet, at this moment, the workmen have FOUR DAYS' EMPLOYMENT every week, and the poor-rates have scarcely increased a fraction!

It shall be our purpose, from time to time, to expose all the shallow pretensions which our provincial malcontents may dare to set up, particularly at a period requiring all the forbearance and moderation of the people—for, in every point of view, they are but to be looked upon as persons dangerous to the community, and who only aspire to aggrandize themselves, by the sacrifice of their fellow subjects.

In one of BALL HUGHES's love-letters to the charming MERCANDOTTI, before marriage, wishing to style her, "Idol of my soul" in French, he wrote as follows:—Paresseux de ma sole."

Not a day passes but an explosion takes place of some one or other of the numerous schemes to which the speculating mania of the last year gave birth. An exposure of the system adopted in the formation of the Cornwall and Devonshire Mining Company, with the letter of the new Member for Sudbury, has been already fully before the town, and the last few days have brought to light the principles upon which the affairs of another, the Arigna Company, have been hitherto regulated. We have all along so openly and unreservedly expressed our sentiments upon the subject of these bubbles, that it would be both unnecessary and tedious to repeat those opinions—but if we were the least involved in them, we should leave no stone unturned to arraign Mr. BROGDEN, Sir WILLIAM CONGREVE, and others, before the bar of the House of Commons, for their practices in the many schemes to which their respective names appear affixed as Directors. The least to be expected by such persons was the conduct adopted on Thursday, at a meeting of the Arigna Proprietors, on which half-yearly occasion the said Mr. BROGDEN officiated as Chairman. Unless a statement of facts were submitted to the reader, he could never bring his mind to believe the scene of outrage and blackguardism which presented itself, but as it is a record well worth treasuring up, we cannot deny ourselves the gratification of recording at least one very prominent part of the morning's diversion:—

Mr. Wm. Clark said, that of this he was sure, the property of the shareholders, so far from being depreciated by the efforts of the committee, would not now be worth 10 farthings, if the former directors had been permitted to remain in power.—(Applause.) The fall in those shares was the consequence of mismanagement and abuses, which it was the business of the present committee to correct; and there could be no greater proof of mismanagement than the late expulsion. In this opinion, there was not an honest man in the country who did not agree.

[Cries from a distant part of the room, " It's a lie—a d—d lie!!!"]

Mr. W. Clark said, no language could speak more strongly than the acts of the directors, and the determination of the shareholders to expel them.

Mr. Power (an old director)—" You lie!!!"

Mr. W. Clark assured the proprietors, without taking notice of this most respectable line of argument, that he was sure no man could be more zealous or active than those whom they were called upon to elect.

[Here some conversation took place in different parts of the room. The lie was repeatedly given, and parties strutted up to each other as if they meditated some very terrible breaches of the peace!]

Mr. Brogden—This is really horrible, gentlemen.

Shareholders—It is your business, Mr. Chairman, to put a stop to it. Why don't you do so?

Mr. Brogden—The language is so different from that which I have ever been in the habit of hearing—and I have been connected with several joint stock companies—that I do not know how to act.

A Shareholder—I am the nephew of Mr. Power, and I went to Mr. Comerford and Mr. Parker, and said, that I would not allow any one to calumniate my uncle, or Mr. Surtees. They assured me they had nothing to allege against either; and am I now to listen to those calumnies? This gave rise to further confusion, and it was asserted, that Mr. Brogden had described all the gentleman in the former direction as the most zealous men he had ever met in his life.

Mr. Brogden---Certainly I did, until I discovered what they were.

Mr. John Hinde said, that he had been grossly calumniated, in a speech made by Mr. Bent, in his absence. It was with respect to a conversation with Mr. Flattery, out of whose pocket the sum of 15,000l. that had been divided, had come, instead of out of the pockets of the shareholders.

Mr. Flattery—It never came out of my pocket, for it never got in. (Laughter.)

Some opposition was then made to Mr. Hinde's proceeding with what he called his vindication, as it had no reference to the proceedings. He, very properly, persevered, and was heard out, notwithstanding Mr. Brogden's argument, that the statement made by Mr. Bent did not go to criminate Mr. Hinde, but was merely an historical fact.

Mr. Hinde stated, that the report in The Times newspaper of Mr. Bent's speech, made that gentleman say that Mr. Flattery told him that Mr. Hinde said he knew that the 15,000l. was divided between the Directors, and that he (Mr. Hinde) afterwards admitted that fact to Mr. Bent. Now this was not the fact: he had said nothing of the kind to either. Here Mr. Hinde gave a very uninteresting version of what took place, and spoke in praise of the ex-directors, and in praise of the efforts of Mr. Joseph and Mr. Henry Clarke to put money in their pockets, in consideration of the trouble to which they were put, and the obloquy to which they might be exposed.

Mr. Flattery---The Clarkes get the money: they know it,—I ask you, did they not make 30,000l. by the sale of shares! If I had chosen to put money in my pockets, could I have not sold my shares?

A Shareholder---We had better join Roger Flattery, Esq., to the new directors. (A laugh.)

Mr. Flattery---Do you hold your tongue, Isaac. You are always telling such d—d lies! Go along and account for the 40,000l. you got out of the Hombush mines.

A Shareholder—You lie!

Another Shareholder---You lie, you rascal!

Mr. Flattery—You know, Isaac, you are an ould liar!

A Shareholder—Why, Mr. Flattery, you act with great assurance. It is not long since you were a beggar, Mr. Flattery; you are the cut of an ould beggar—look at him!!!

Mr. Hinde—I must say that Mr. Bent told a most impudent falsehood in saying that I made the acknowledgment to him about the 15,000l. division. I never did. He came to me, and spoke to me about the Arigna, but I never replied. I always said to Mr. Bent that he was to receive a bonus, and if the Clarkes have not made a good thing of it, I am very sorry for it.

Mr. Flattery—Oh, this is pretty humbugging. This is a nice way to be plundered.

An adjournment was moved and withdrawn, after a great deal of angry discussion, in the midst of which Mr. Brogden said he really believed that he should be obliged to call in the assistance of the police. The report was at length received, and the following gentlemen were elected Directors:—Mr. Brogden, Mr. Bent, Mr. Morgan, Capt. Cater, Mr. Moxon, Mr. R. Hitchens, Mr. Frampton, Mr. Fox, Mr. Barrow, Mr. Hills, and Mr. Herley. Auditors—Mr. Gooch and Mr. Pritchett.

Mr. Joseph Clarke entered his protest against the proceedings, as illegal; and was borne out in his opinion by Mr. Wilks, sen., who attended upon the part of the ex-directors.

Mr. Brogden must have felt greatly humiliated. Many of the shareholders treated him with the most rude scorn. His request was, upon every occasion, disregarded, and he had the charge of participation repeatedly thrown in his teeth.

We leave the thing to speak for itself, but one observation we must make. We have carefully read over the different speeches, with the names of the individual who delivered them, on this momentous occasion, particularly those of a Mr. FLATTERY—and certainly, if we had not the GENTLEMAN'S own word for it, we should say there was less flattery in his address than in that of any other speaker.

The following impromptu on Signor VELLUTI is said to have been made by JEKYLL, on the first arrival of that Italian importation. JEKYLL's is a good horse for any wag to ride home on; a bad joke passes, by virtue of his talismanic name—a good one becomes proverbial for ever; and this is a very good one: --

Quis novus hic hospes nostras successit ad oras?
Non vir—non certe fœmina, sed——veluti!

MEMS. OF THE LAST WEEK.---No. 6.

Went to see the new piece at the English Opera-house, called " Lying made Easy"---find that it is not written by DICKY GLENGALL, his Lordship having only furnished several excellent hints. --- London full of TOMMY GARTH and Lady ASTLEY, and they full of each other---poor dear thing! positively left, they say, without a farthing---find, by the Morning Chronicle, that her Ladyship, having passed Maidenhead, was traced, by Sir JACOB's solicitor, to the Black Bear, Reading.--- Consider myself shamefully treated by BALL HUGHES, who, after my repeatedly applying to him to sell me a horse I fancied, positively promised me the refusal of it. In the mean time, he receives a better offer for it than mine, and parts with it, thinking, because I am a Cit, and in trade, he may treat me as he pleases. I met him in the street, and, upbraiding him with his conduct, indignantly observed, " Did not you promise me the refusal of it?" To which he replied, " So I did, and now I give it you---you sha'n't have the horse"---am certainly of opinion that is a refusal, but not a gentlemanly one. ---JOHN LYSTER, on hearing of the transaction said, as he once did of my face---

" 'Tis true—'tis pitty—and pity 'tis 'tis true."

Met SEFTON looking, as JACK TALBOT says, like a comb, all teeth and BACK.—Understand Drury Lane opens, under the management of Mr. PRICE, with Columbus, and Jonathan in England—find the EX-LESSEE consoles himself with caning one of his authors; on hearing which, ELLISTON reminded me of VIRGIL, when he says, " Arma virumque cano"—not asked by Mrs. COUTTS to celebrate NELLY's marriage, which I set down to the influence of the widow's toad-eater, Lady DASHWOOD KING—some talk of Lady GRESLEY being very mad—don't think Sir ROGER far off the mark—CROCKY's bank broke Friday se'nnight, by a small party, LORD MILTOWN in the Chair!—owing to recent circumstances, had no hand in it—no gentleman can possibly fight a fishmonger, because he is sure to get a dab in the mouth, if he does—CROCKFORD had the insolence, on my making no reply to his low remark the other day, to say of me, " Vy, he looks as if sugar vou'dn't melt in his mouth"—met that pert Baronet Sir JOSEPH COPLEY reading a letter in a hurry, and walking in a greater—said, " Ah, JOE, what are you going so hastily about?" to which he replied, " about my business, and that's what you seldom do!" overtook Sir GEORGE WARRENDER and DICK MARTIN arm-in-arm—am of opinion the Swallow is more in Sir GEORGE's line than the Martin any day, particularly at dinner time—supped at CROCKFORD's the other night—desired a waiter to bring me some fresh porter; on hearing which, HENRY DE ROSS, who saw Lord NUGENT just enter, drenched with rain, said, " Here's some 'heavy WET' just come in, if that will do as well, TOM"—laughed excessively, and went home, wishing CHARLES SHERIDAN is canvassing the borough of Stafford, with the view of offering himself as a candidate for its representation.

THE EDINBURGH REVIEW.

It is believed that The Edinburgh Review will no longer be published by the respectable house under whose name it has now been sent forth, for nearly a quarter of a century. Rumour says that its Editor, Mr. Jeffrey, is involved in disputes with Longman and Co. who have hitherto shared the copyright with the Edinburgh publishers—and it is added, that the present Editorship may not endure.—Scots Times.

Whether there is any foundation for two of the above rumours we are not prepared to decide—but we believe it is true that some differences have taken place between Mr. Jeffrey and Messrs. Longman and Co. since the failure of Constable and Co.'s house in Edinburgh. As we stated, several months back, the little Editor of the celebrated Blue and Yellow, has had for a long period a sum of 700l. for each number of the work published, half of which sum was payable every three months by Messrs. Longman and Co.—Constable and Co. accordingly, we understand, drew upon them immediately each quarterly batch of Whiggery came forth, for Three Hundred and Fifty Pounds, on Mr. Jeffrey's account, and the demand was, of course, always punctually discharged. The learned gentleman, however, believing in the perfect solvency of the Scotch Firm, had allowed these sums, as well as the similar ones, payable by the other half of the proprietors, to accumulate, at interest, in the hands of the latter; and by that means, when the establishment stopt, he stood on their books a creditor to a large amount—report affirmed for some thousands of pounds. Finding himself in this awkward predicament, it is said that he conceived of taking a legal hitch against Messrs. Longman and Co. for the moieties of his salary from them, which they had already paid to Constable and Co. for his account, and even threatened to insist upon demanding from the surviving partners in the Review the whole of the debt due to him from his late Edinburgh friends! Such a claim was extremely well calculated to breed a schism, and being very naturally resisted, has, we conjecture, led to the split above reported. In the number of the Review about to appear, there are, it seems, among others, the following articles:—" Icon Basilike," by Sir James Mackintosh; " Hamilton on Languages," and " M'Adam on Roads," by the Rev. Sydney Smith; " Commercial Revulsions," by Peter Maculloch; and " The Massacre of St. Bartholomew," a review of " Lingard's History of England," by Mr. Allen, the Principal of Dulwich College, and Private Secretary of Lord Holland.—Leeds Intelligencer.

From these statements it would seem that a division has taken place in this precious Cabinet of Whigs, arising from that one great maxim which is the creed of these famous politicians, " taking especial care of No. 1." It seems that little JEFFREY, styled by LORD BYRON the Alpha of the Edinburgh Review, has been in the annual receipt of the enormous sum of 2,800l. for editing it, and for a considerable portion of it, payable by LONGMAN and Co. of London, he demands a second payment, because the first payment that house made, he lost in the bankruptcy of CONSTABLE and Co. to whom he lent it. JEFFREY is completely of O'KEEFE's opinion, that " there is no harm in a guinea"—that's very evident; and this opinion seems to have operated with him to so great an extent, that he has resigned the situation which has brought him so many, because he cannot be paid double for some! Poor Whig! but JEFFREY, even if he does retire, and his celebrated work, the blue leaf, should " fall into the yellow leaf," can never die—his duel with TOMMY MOORE, at Chalk Farm, in 1806, will always preserve his memory, and the following lines of Lord BYRON will immortalize it:—

" Health to immortal JEFFREY! once in name.
England could boast a judge almost the same;
In soul so like, so merciful, yet just,
Some think that Satan has resigned his trust,
And given the Spirit to the world again,
To sentence Letters, as he sentenced men.
With hand less mighty, but with heart as black,
With voice as willing to decree the rack;
Bred in the Courts betimes, though all that law
As yet has taught him is to find a flaw.
Since well instructed in the patriot School
To rail at party, though a party tool,
Who knows? if chance his patrons should restore
Back to the sway they forfeited before,
His scribbling toils some recompence may meet
And raise this DANIEL to the Judgment seat.
Let JEFFREY's shade indulge the pious hope,
And greeting thus, present him with a rope:
' Heir to my virtues! man of equal mi-
' Skilled to condemn as to traduce:
' This cord receive! for thee "
' To wield in judgment. "

This last apostrophe very happy one, for it is exemplified the Whiggs themselves.

Our dramatic general interest little novelty has affairs during the operetta at the Lyceum fully received, and

Thirteen to the Dozen at the Haymarket, with equal good fortune—a sister of a Mr. HAMBLIN, one of our emigrants to America, has departed this life, on board the James Cropper, on her voyage out to her brother, and it is not determined yet whether ELLISTON is to be sent to the Tread Mill, or Bedlam, for his outrageous assault on the gentlemanly little author of Paul Pry. This is the principal news.—Madame VESTRIS, we are glad to hear, is re-engaged, on a very high salary, at Covent Garden Theatre, previous to her appearance at which she will sing a few nights at the Haymarket and Vauxhall.—CHARLES KEMBLE, who is reported to have played so successfully throughout the provinces, has failed everywhere—MACREADY sails in three weeks for America; YOUNG sailed yesterday for Rotterdam; and Mr. CLAREMONT will return to Covent Garden in September.—Some blockhead has been amusing himself by inserting this paragraph in the Gloucester Herald, every word of which the least-informed of readers knows is false :—

"DRURY LANE THEATRE.—For the peculiar benefit of the London Newspapers, we beg leave to contradict every statement they have made of the manner in which this concern has been finally disposed of. Mr. PRICE has not taken Mr. BISH's bargain off his hands, nor is any portion of that "lucky" Gentleman's deposit transferred to the credit of his presumptive successor. The facts are simply these.—Mr. PRICE was a competitor for the lease when advertised to be parted with, and offered an advance of five pounds beyond the rental paid by Mr. ELLISTON. When Mr. BISH withdrew from his absurd and lavish contract, the Committee wisely turned their attention to Mr. PRICE's proposals, and committed the establishment they preside over to those liberal and experienced hands by which every true friend to the British drama will ultimately find reason, from what is known of the new Manager, to rejoice at having it directed."

We cannot do better than conclude this article by the insertion of a singular document, which has come into our possession in a singular way. We understand that Mr. LISTON, in the last act of Paul Pry, where he fishes up the papers thrown into the river by Mrs. Subtle to avoid detection of her practices, fished up accidentally, the other evening, the following weekly memoranda dropped in mistake by the Mrs. Subtle of the Haymarket Theatre, and of the genuineness of which, from the identity they bear to her style of language, we do not entertain the slightest doubt:—

Monday. The dear child and myself came to rehearsal in a friend's carriage—could not spare it to take us back—understand after all it was pawned t'other day—went into the manager's room for some orders—toaded him out of a new part for the dear child—saw a bottle of Madeira on the table—fainted, to get a glass.

Tuesday. Mr. DUMCOMBE behind, in the evening, talking to Mrs. HUMBY, while she was playing VESTRIS's part in Paul Pry—not contented with taking away HER CHARACTER, she seems determined to take away HER MAN also—shall write to VESTRIS, and tell her of it, for which she will play gratis for the dear child's benefit.

Wednesday. Find it is not settled who is to have Drury yet—wish to God they'd make haste about it, that one might know whom to be civil to—wish VESTRIS would return, that I might get some dinners out of her, not that I would allow the dear child to visit her on any account—oh dear, no.

Thursday. Watched Mr. DUNCOMBE and Miss JONES walk together into a house—peeped in, and found him giving her a cover, or frank, or whatever they call it—sent off word to dear VESTRIS—vastly glad, by the way, to see she has failed in Ireland—the dear child fined—went to MORRIS, and snivelled, to get it remitted.

Friday. Told that impudent fellow, LISTON, that I had last night a pain in my chest—to which he replied, "In it, or on it?" Find DUNCOMBE handed Mrs. HUMBY into a coach the other night—watched under the opposite portico to see him get in—he did'nt—however, wrote word to VESTRIS that several women had called on him in Queen-street in her absence, and asked her to bring over the dear child an Irish poplin.

Saturday. Had a cold letter from VESTRIS—wonder who she is—have seen her drink dreadfully—Captain GEORGE MILDMAY behind the scenes after the dear child—when she talked of marriage, the wretch burst out laughing—the MILDMAYS a disgraceful set.—wheedled PERCY FARREN out of a part for the dear child—impudent fellow as he is—wrote an anonymous letter to his wife—poor dear thing, she little knows—Oh, no—not she.—Shook hands with DUNCOMBE, because our benefit 's coming on—saw 'Ann' on the corner of a pocket-handkerchief in his hand—whispered the fact in the ear of a certain lady's mother, not far from Charles-street, Covent-garden.—VESTRIS returns in ten days—shall speak to her, but certainly not let the dear child be seen in her society—oh, dear no!

Thursday morning the child of an industrious cabinet-maker, named Finerty, fell from a window in the third story of the house, Pill-lane, Dublin, at the instant a woman bearing a large basket of chickens on her head passed underneath; the child was fortunately received into the basket, and restored, perfectly unhurt, to its terrified parents.

SPEAKING TERMS—Met also a free-and-easy actor, who told me he had passed three festive days at the seat of the Marquis and Marchioness of ———, without any invitation; convinced (as proved to be the case) that my Lord and Lady, not being on speaking terms, would each suppose the other had asked him.—Reynolds's Life and Times.

It is impossible in Russia for a man of character to go out, although it be only to next door, unless in a coach drawn by six horses—a state which becomes sometimes almost ludicrously inconvenient.—"The first day on which I conformed to this practice, having a visit to pay to a lady who occupied the next house to mine, one of my postillions had already entered the gate of her dwelling, while the carriage was still under that of my own."—Memoirs of Comte Segur.

MR. BEAUMONT AND SIR J. SWINBURNE.

(From the Newcastle Chronicle.)

The following correspondence is published with the consent of the parties :—

TO T. W. BEAUMONT, ESQ.

SIR—From the report of your speech at Shields, contained in the Tyne Mercury of July 25, it may be inferred that you re-assert the offensive expressions, relating to my family, contained in your letter to Lord Grey, which was published in last week's Newcastle Chronicle; while, at the same time, you declare, in an advertisement in the same paper, "that you will not advance any thing that can wound the feelings of others."

With reference to this declaration, and to a written apology you sent to my father a short time after you left Capheaton, I have to request you will afford me some means of judging how I am to construe expressions so contradictory.

I remain, Sir, &c.

Newcastle, July 26, 1826. C. H. SWINBURNE.

TO CHARLES HENRY SWINBURNE, ESQ.

SIR—I cannot be responsible for the accuracy of the report of the speech at Shields, but I can assure you that it was not my intention to say anything which might be construed into a re-assertion of the expressions contained in my letter to Lord Grey.

I am sorry if, in the heat of a public speech, I have said any thing which might be so interpreted, for nothing is farther from my feelings than to utter any thing which can be offensive to any part of your family. I am Sir, your most obedient Servant,

Newcastle, July 26, 1826. T. W. BEAUMONT.

INSOLVENT DEBTORS' COURT.

LIBEL.—Mr. White, late proprietor and publisher of the Indian Observer, was brought up for judgment.

This was a case of imprisonment for non-payment of damages and costs, amounting to 342l., for a libel on Capt. Kinnaird Smith, of the Hon. East India Company's service. The debtor was discharged on account of his case coming under the purview, not of the present, but of the late Act, the date of his certificate being anterior to the passing of the latter.

The Chief-Commissioner in giving judgment, made some observations upon the laws by which this court had been governed since its establishment in the year 1813. The Act 53 Geo. III., made "malicious injury" an offence, but a doubt arose in the mind of his predecessors, as to whether the clause of that statute went so far as to include "libel." Mr. Serjeant Runnington, in his evidence before the committee of the House of Commons, in the year 1819, stated, that neither himself nor Mr. Serjeant Palmer, who preceded him, had so viewed it; but they viewed the clause as referable to the dilapidation of property, &c. rather than an attack upon private character. In the recent Act of Parliament (Geo. IV. cap. 51) the Legislature had made a wise alteration, because it was quite clear that libel upon private characters, or upon individuals holding public situations, was, in fact, an injury of a serious nature, and the party aggrieved had only the remedy of an action at law, which was a poor compensation for the injury sustained, if the defendant, upon judgment being obtained, thought proper to pay the damages and costs by a short imprisonment, and then come up to this Court and be absolved from all personal restraint. The law, as now altered, awarded two years' imprisonment at the suit of the aggrieved party; but the Court, notwithstanding, had a discretionary power vested in it to diminish that term, if it saw cause to do so.

An inquisition was held on Wednesday at the Nag's Head, Kentish-town, on the body of Mr. Augustus Barker, a medical gentleman of high respectability, and the son of an eminent dignitary of the church. The Rev. Robert Drought, curate of Shadwell, sworn.—I knew the deceased well before his death, which happened on Saturday last. He resided at the Northern Dispensary, near St. Pancras church, in the New-road. I saw him last about twelve o'clock on Friday morning, at the Bankrupt's-court, in Basinghall-street, and had some conversation with him at the time. The deceased went to surrender himself at a commission of bankrupt; he appeared very dejected, but spoke rationally at first. After some conversation, he suddenly appeared to labour under great excitement. Perspiration broke out all over his face, his eyes rolled in a singular and wild manner, and he gave such incoherent answers to questions which I put to him, that I should have been alarmed, had I not conceived this violent emotion was produced by the painful situation in which he was then placed, as from long intimacy and experience I knew him to be a man of great sensibility, and a highly honourable mind. The deceased felt and expressed great agony of mind at not being able to meet the full demand of his creditors. I have not the smallest doubt that circumstance caused temporary derangement. I knew him to very religiously disposed; he always spoke of suicide with the utmost abhorrence. I should also state I am a relative of the deceased. He drank tea at my house the day previous. I observed he put some liquid in his tea, but I cannot say what it was. He however told me it was to raise his spirits. Several other witnesses deposed to the same effect. Verdict—"Found dead in bed, but how or by what means the deceased came by his death, it does not appear in evidence to us jurors."

On Saturday se'nnight it was discovered that the extensive Moors, in the vicinity of Sheffield, had by some means taken fire, and they still continued to burn, with unabated fury, up to the time the last accounts reached us. Such was the progress made by the fire in a few hours, that it was supposed upwards of six acres of the Moors were burning on the evening of Saturday. During the whole of that night and Sunday the conflagration continued to spread, and, on Monday morning, it began to assume an alarming aspect. On that day a ditch was cut, with a view to stop its progress, and for a short time this expedient seemed to answer the purpose. The fire having reached one side of the ditch, it made a partial stand; but was still kept alive by the unconsumed combustible materials remaining in or upon the ground, within the limits of the space which it had already overspread. The heat was now become intense, and every thing consumable was literally burnt to ashes, light as air. This was succeeded by a brisk breeze, which blew the burning dust across the barrier, and set fire to the adjacent district. From the dryness of the ground, it was immediately in a state of ignition, and it was calculated by a gentleman, residing in the neighbourhood, that, on Monday night, there must have been fifteen hundred acres of land burnt and burning! That evening the scene was awfully grand—even terrific in its appearance. The thunder was heard in loud and continued peals, the lightning was seen in vivid and repeated flashes, darting across the firmament—the rain descended in torrents, and the ground for miles was in flame! The principal seat of the conflagration is in the immediate vicinity of Broomhead Hall, the seat of Colonel Leader, and fears have been entertained that it might possibly reach the plantation in front of that gentleman's mansion. This, however, is separated from the burning ground, by a road 30 feet wide, and every thing calculated to feed the devouring element has been cut away for the same distance, towards the fire. The inhabitants of the houses, in the neighbourhood, are in great fear and alarm for the result of this singular phenomenon, and are using every means likely to check its ravages. Some pains have been taken to find out the origin of the fire, and it has been traced to the following circumstance, as the only assignable cause. On Sunday several persons went on the moors to gather bilberries, when a man lighted his pipe with a lens. After smoking, he threw the heated refuse from his pipe on the ground, which being in such a parched state, is supposed to have ignited.

STATE OF THE COLLIERS NEAR BIRMINGHAM.

DUDLEY, AUG. 2.

(Extract of a Private Letter.)

I informed you of the affray that our Yeomanry had with the riotous colliers, last Thursday.

On Friday the masters had a meeting, and resolved to persist in their attempt to reduce wages to 3s. 6d. per day. This resolution was signed by nearly all the most respectable houses in the trade. The Chairman was Mr. Dowding, the Agent of Viscount Dudley and Ward, whose mines, particularly of limestone, are very extensive in this part of the country.

On Saturday the Yeomanry were not on duty. Many of them are farmers, or farmers' sons, and as they are now in the midst of their harvest, neither the men nor the horses can very well be spared.

On Monday, the Yeomanry were again on duty, and the rioters were taken, under a guard of soldiers, before the Magistrates in the Castle-yard, amid the ruins of Old Dudley Castle, that place being situated within the county in which the offence was committed. Most of them were liberated on finding bail for good behaviour.

This demonstration of force has prevented any acts of rioting on the part of the colliers. Some of them loaded a waggon with a large piece of coal, said to weigh three tons, and pulled it themselves, with the intention of visiting some of the neighbouring towns, and imploring charity. They went towards Birmingham, but I heard nothing of them since. Many of them ask alms in the neighbourhood. Strange that men, who will not degrade themselves so much as to work for 3s. 6d. a day, should feel no degradation in asking charity.

Printed placards are placed on the walls in the neighbourhood, inviting all persons disposed to work to return to their employments, and assuring them that a force is raised sufficient for their protection. This placard is signed by the Magistrates. On the other hand, I have been told, that written placards are issued by the colliers, declaring, that the first man who works for less than 4s. a day shall be put to death.

The conduct of these deluded men has had a considerable effect on the industry of the neighbourhood. Nothing can be done without coals. Hence, many hard working men are thrown out of employment, and their families reduced to distress. The general feeling is, that the masters have not reduced wages lower than what was necessary, in consequence of the depression of the times.

INQUEST ON THOMAS SMART, ESQ.

Yesterday evening a Coroner's Inquest was held at the John-o'-Groat, Rupert-street, on the body of Thomas R. Smart, Esq., brother to Sir George Smart.

Samuel Faxon, surgeon, sworn.—On Thursday evening, about half-past five-o'clock, I was called to attend on the deceased; on my entering the house, I beheld the deceased lying on the bed; I observed a large and deep wound in the throat, about five inches in length, and one in the chest, about two inches in depth, between the 6th and 7th ribs, into which I passed a probe, which entered about four inches; there was also a deep wound upon the left wrist, which divided the arteries, and in the right hand of the deceased was a razor, which I took from him. There were several quarts of blood laying on the bed and clothes. The wounds had been inflicted some time, as the deceased had ceased to bleed. I also observed a sort of convulsive motion, as if the deceased was attempting to speak, but could not: his lips were black. I also observed four phials, three of which, and part of the fourth, were empty; they had each contained a quantity of laudanum.

Mr. George Gregory, of No. 61, Rupert-street, sworn.—I have seen the deceased often; he has dined repeatedly at my house. On the night before last, he came and inquired whether he could have a bed, when the waiter came and told me; I went to the deceased, and asked him if he wanted a bed for one or more nights; he replied, for one night. I told him he could; he then went into the coffee-room, and called for boots, and soon after retired. On the following afternoon, the servant informed me that the gentleman was not moving, it being then four o'clock. I instantly went up stairs, and knocked at the door; but not receiving any answer, I got upon the bannisters, and put my hand through the ventilator, and pushed the bolt back, and opened the shutter; when, seeing the dreadful spectacle, I instantly ran down stairs, and gave the alarm. Upon re-entering the room, the deceased attempted to speak, and appeared to be sensible; the wounds had ceased to bleed, and he died in a few minutes after.

A Juror.—Did the deceased appear to be collected?

Mr. Gregory.—Yes, for on my inquiring how long he should want the bed, he replied, "one night will be sufficient."

The Jury, after a few minutes' consultation, found a verdict—That the deceased had committed suicide whilst labouring under temporary derangement.

The Emperor Nicholas has ordered the coinage of the kingdom of Poland, to retain the effigies of Alexander as the restorer of the kingdom in 1815, and to bear on the reverse a crown, with the name of the reigning Emperor.

Madame Pasta left London on Monday last, for Naples, where she is engaged for five months to sing at the theatre of San Carlos. She sailed from the River in the steam-packet Atwood, belonging to the General Steam Navigation Company.

ACCIDENTS AT BILLINGSGATE.—One o'clock yesterday morning, brought into Billingsgate the annual luxury of oysters to the citizens of London and the neighbouring villages. As usual on such occasions, the number of retail dealers was very great, and consequently some severe accidents took place. It was early in the morning rumoured that seven or eight persons had, in their anxiety to get on board the boats to be first supplied, fallen overboard and were drowned. After making every inquiry in our power, we could only learn, with any certainty, that a man and a woman lost their lives in this manner, and their bodies were not found at twelve o'clock. Many serious accidents, as well as some of the ludicrous kind, occurred by persons falling overboard, and getting severe bruises and a good ducking. We saw a Mrs. Sheenan, from St. Giles's, who was dressed exactly like Liston, as Moll Flaggon, fall overboard; but, many thanks to her upper toggery, and a hook in the side of the boat, which caught hold of it, she only suffered a severe fright, and a dangling between heaven and water for five minutes, to the great amusement and laughter of the bystanders, which was much increased by the discovery of one part of her dress being much more applicable to her husband. She, however, was brought safe on shore without her oysters, and escaped that ablution which upwards of a score of persons met with, contrary to their wishes.

CURE FOR AN OBSTINATE JURYMAN.—Eleven of the Special Jury, in the same cause, were for the plaintiff, and the twelfth for the defendant: after consulting for some time, the Foreman told the Judge that he had no expectation of their speedily agreeing on a verdict; his Lordship said that in that case they must be locked up, upon which the eleven poured all their eloquence into the ear of the dissentient; but in a short time the Foreman announced, that from expressions which had dropped from the obstinate Juryman, he did not think they should ever agree. "In that case," said the Judge, "I must take you with me on the circuit; to this one of the Counsel rejoined, "I can tell you, gentlemen, for your consolation, that we have a large van on the circuit, which will hold the whole of you."—The Court enjoyed a hearty laugh, but the terror of such an alternative so operated on the mind of number twelve, that in another minute he agreed with the rest.—Plymouth Journal.

POLICE INTELLIGENCE.

CRIM. CON. AND ELOPEMENT.

MANSION-HOUSE.—A gentleman named Heaphy, who is a respectable member of the Stock Exchange, came, attended by Mr. Davis, the Solicitor, of the firm of Reredon and Davis, and a number of friends, to prefer a charge of assault against rather a short little man, named Taylor, who is a tailor, residing in Bear-street, Leicester-fields.

Mr. Heaphy stated, that he resided at St. John's Wood Grove, Regent's Park, and deposed that, on Sunday morning, the prisoner came to his house, and wished to see him. He went down, when the prisoner refused to come in, said he had something particular to say to him, and wished him to come out. Witness put on his hat and went out, when the prisoner began stating a long case about his wife. He said, continued Mr. Heaphy, that I'd got his wife; he said this thing and that thing about her; and said, that I knew where she was.

The Lord Mayor.—Did you know his wife, Mr. Heaphy?

Mr. Heaphy.—Yes, my Lord. I was met again by him yesterday morning at Finsbury-place, when he said he was a man in a poor way, and said he was willing to take a sum of money, when he would sign any paper or release that I liked. I made no proposition to him; and he came to the Stock Exchange, where he used very coarse language. He seized me by the collar, created a disturbance, and said he was determined to follow me up. A crowd was assembled, and I was obliged to give him into custody.

The Lord Mayor.—Pray, Mr. Heaphy, how long have you been acquainted with his wife.

Mr. Heaphy.—I really can't exactly answer.

The Lord Mayor.—Do you know where she now is?

Mr. Heaphy.—I can't say, my Lord, really, I know no more about her than a stranger.

The Lord Mayor proceeded to put some other questions; when Mr. Heaphy, who had answered with great reluctance those previously put to him, objected to answer any more. He came there, he said, to prefer a charge of assault, and he wished the case to be confined to the fact of the assault.

The Lord Mayor.—But the assault, as stated by you against the prisoner, is a very trifling one, supposing that you have given great provocation. I wish to see how that fact is.

Mr. Heaphy.—If he conceives himself injured by me in any other way, he may seek his remedy in a Court of Law; but I am not to be assaulted.

The prisoner, who listened with great impatience to the statement of the case against him, here said, "I tell you how it is, my Lord, if you will listen to me, I have no fear. It is six weeks last Monday, since my wife asked me to let her go home to her mother's. I told her she might, if she liked; but said she must be back soon, as I wanted to go to Vauxhall. She went accordingly, but she did not come home till past ten o'clock at night. Good God! (says I) where the d—l have you been till this time of night? She said she had been at her mother's; and that there were some friends there, and they had persuaded her to stay with them. The next morning, there comes a gentleman to me that I knows, who says to me, "Your wife's a bad woman; I saw her walking with a gentleman, and knowing her to be your wife, I followed her, and saw her go with him to the White House, in Soho-square; and I thought it but right to tell you of it." I then, continued the prisoner, called the servant, to ask whether there had been any body about the house. 'Tell me the truth, Sally,' said I; 'have you seen any body about the house behaving improper to your mistress?' She began to cry, and said, there was a gentleman in a white hat, who had called and talked to my wife. He was with her in the private passage when the door was open, and my wife said to the girl, 'Shut the door, madam;' and he said to her, 'Sally, why do you not do as your mistress bids you?' He then went away. I got a young man to watch her when she next went out, and she met him, and went with him to a house at No. 3, Oxendon-street; they afterwards went to a house in Tichfield street. I did not see them, but the young man saw them; and I can bring the servants from the three places, who will prove that he went with her there. He was away about a fortnight, when she met him in the New-road. He was on horseback, and shook hands with her. He then described, that he surprised his wife just as she left him, on another occasion, and had not seen any thing of her since."

The Lord Mayor.—You do not wish to see her again, do you?

The Prisoner.—Yes, my Lord, I do not mind saying it, that I should like to see her again very much. (Loud laughter.) I have tried all that I can to see her. He says he does not know where she is, but I have good information that he saw her last night.

The Lord Mayor.—How long have you been watching your wife's conduct?

The Prisoner.—More than five weeks.

The Lord Mayor.—What is your occupation?—I am a tailor.

The Lord Mayor.—Is he a customer of yours?

The tailor.—Not in that line. (Roars of laughter..)

The servant girl, in the employment of the prisoner, deposed, that she had seen Heaphy come into the house. She had seen him come last Saturday week, in the afternoon; she had seen him come and beckon her mistress out.

The tailor added, that he had been married seven years, and had had one child, which was dead; he declared he was all happy and right until this man came across the door. The neighbours had observed him shaking hands with her.

Mr. Davis, as solicitor to Mr. Heaphy, treated the whole as a conspiracy to extort money, and stated, that the defendant had proposed to take a sum of money as compensation, which proposal had been rejected.

The tailor said, he wished to be rid of the woman; he received 500l. with his wife, when he married her, and he stated, that she was to have 500l. more as soon as her mother died. Under these circumstances, he intimated that he thought himself justified in seeking compensation. He told Mr. Heaphy there must be a divorce, which he ought to pay for, as he had been the cause of it. He (said the tailor) wished me to bring an action, but it is of no use bringing an action, because he is going to sell all his property, and leave the country; so I shall lose my action. I went to my attorney, who advised me to make it up if I could.

The Lord Mayor—From the time you first made the discovery, did you give your wife no cause to suspect you knew of her conduct.

The defendant—No, no; I took care not to do that: I wanted to catch them. (Laughter.) Mr. Davis, the solicitor, said, that the defendant had been told, that it was understood he required 200l. for his wife, but he insisted upon having 500l., and declared he would follow Mr. Heaphy about until he was satisfied; he then created so great a disturbance, that it became necessary to have him taken into custody. He had, since he was in custody, made a proposal, through the medium of the officer, to take his wife back for 200l.

The Lord Mayor (to the officer who had the prisoner in custody)—Did you, Sir, make such a proposal?

The Officer—It was at his request.

The Lord Mayor—I desire, then, that you never do such a thing again; it was extremely improper. It is the duty of the officers to keep their prisoners in safe custody, and not to act as agents in such matters. His Lordship then said, that the prisoner had certainly acted in a gross and indelicate manner; and if he had acted under the impulse of ordinary feelings, and given his wife's paramour a sound drubbing, he would have been excused in the eyes of most men, though not in the eye of the law. It was singular he had so long looked on.

The defendant—I was going to fall upon him, but I was advised not.

The Lord Mayor, addressing Mr. Heaphy, said, that the defendant's want of delicacy did not exonerate him: he was most culpable, by invading his domestic peace. On these grounds, his Lordship said, he should not call upon the defendant to find bail, but should liberate him, on his promise not to repeat the disturbance at the Stock Exchange, or be guilty of any breach any where else. Mr. Heaphy had laid himself open to a civil action: his Lordship presumed that Mr. Heaphy was not, as had been stated, about to leave the country.

Mr. Heaphy said, certainly not; he was known to all the gentlemen there, and his respectability would not be questioned.

The Lord Mayor said, he had heard mention of Mr. Heaphy's name, and had no doubt he was respectable; but this action was not respectably; to be found in criminal correspondence with a married woman, was not respectable in any man.

Mr. Heaphy—I could not tell that she was married. Really, my Lord, there is no telling what women are married; and I had no more reason to know that she was married than I have with respect to any female now present.

The Lord Mayor—It is impossible, according to the testimony of the servant girl, but that you should know she was married.

The defendant—He is married himself, my Lord; he has not long married a young woman with a large fortune; you should have seen how pale he turned when I first mentioned the thing to him, for fear his wife should hear of it.

The Lord Mayor (to Mr. Heaphy, in great surprise)—What, Sir, are you really married?

Mr. Heaphy—I am, my Lord.

The Lord Mayor—Oh, shameful! shameful!

Mr. Davis—My Lord, there can be little doubt that the whole is a conspiracy between the husband and wife to extort money. This virtuous woman, my Lord, laid hold of him as he was returning home in a state of intoxication.

The Lord Mayor made no further remark, but discharged the prisoner from custody, on his promise not to interfere with Mr. Heaphy again in the same manner.

As he was leaving the bar, he exclaimed, looking at Mr Heaphy, "I'll have a turn with you in another way."

The Lord Mayor recalled him; when he explained that he meant to seek his remedy by a civil action.

The case was then dismissed.

BOW-STREET.—Thursday afternoon, as Mr. Minshull, the sitting magistrate, was about leaving the bench, a young Scotchman, who stated his name to be Robert Frazer, and that he was a police officer of the city of Edinburgh, entered the office out of breath, and begged leave to inform his worship that he had just been robbed of his watch in a very extraordinary manner. He said that he came to London a day or two since, on business connected with his office, and that morning he was standing at the corner of Castle-court, Strand, when a smartly-dressed fellow came up to him and asked him if he wanted to buy a watch, at the same time taking one almost as big as a turnip from his fob, and handing it to him for inspection.

The complainant said he was in no want of a watch, for he had a good one of his own, and had no desire to bargain for another. "Well," said the stranger, "I should like to deal with you, and since you won't buy my watch, I will, if you like, purchase yours." The applicant declined any dealing, but the stranger having requested very civilly to look at his watch, he, as a matter of courtesy, and not suspecting a trick in the middle of the day, was drawing it from his fob, when the stranger snatched it from him, and ran off. The applicant followed him, and saw him go into the shop of Mr. Harris, a pawnbroker in the Strand, whither he followed him, and saw him put his own and applicant's watch down upon the counter, and ask the loan of thirty-five shillings upon the two. The applicant immediately informed the shopman, who took up the watches, that one of them was his, and had been stolen from him; but the shopman, who seemed to be on very familiar terms with the stranger, only laughed at him, and took the watches to an inner room, where Mr. Harris, his master, was sitting, and the latter having examined them, gave him the amount required. This the shopman handed to the stranger, who immediately left the box in which he was standing, and applicant was about to follow him, when he was called by the shopman, who said, if one of the watches was his, he had better take a duplicate for it. He waited for the ticket, thinking that he had better have something to show for his watch, but in the meantime the stranger had gone entirely away. He remonstrated with the shopman and his master, Mr. Harris, but they both treated him with ridicule, and said they had nothing to do with matter, and that he must get his watch as other people did, by redeeming it, and if the stranger had done him wrong, he must seek his remedy against him.

Mr. Minshull asked the applicant, why he did not prevent the stranger from pledging his watch when in the shop?

Fraser said, the stranger got into a box where he could not well get at him, and he told the shopmen that the watch was his, and warned him not to take it in, which he thought was all he could do.

Mr. Minshull immediately despatched Conyers, a constable, to desire the attendance of Mr. Harris and his shopman, who appeared in a few minutes.

Frazer repeated his statement, and Mr. Minshull having expressed an opinion, that the case, as it stood unexplained, was a very flagrant one, asked Mr. Harris and his shopman what they had to say.

Mr. Harris, who evinced great confidence of manner, treated the matter very lightly, and said, the fact was, he was in his parlour, when his man came, showed him the watches, and mentioned the amount demanded upon them, which he (Harris) gave him as a matter of course.

The shopman, whose name is Richard Wingham, said, he advanced the money as a matter of course, and he did not know but that the watches belonged to the person who offered them, having only the assertion of the complainant, who was an utter stranger to him, to the contrary.

The shopman being sharply questioned by the magistrate, admitted that he was not unacquainted with the person who pledged the watches; and being hard pressed, said he thought he might be able to find him.

Mr. Minshull said the transaction was a very shameful one; and the shopman would do well to find the fellow who pledged the watches as speedily as possible. There was strong ground for believing that he was leagued with the stranger, and even if the latter should be caught, he (Mr. Minshull) doubted if it would not be his duty to commit him (Wingham) as an accessory. There was not sufficient at present, perhaps, to detain him, but he should require security for his future appearance.

Mr. Harris said he would be answerable for his shopman's appearance, and Mr. Minshull accepted his bail; at the same time ordering Conyers to exert himself to apprehend the fellow who pledged the watches.

George Smith and John Findlay, a corporal in the Third Regiment of Foot Guards, who were charged with indecent practices, on Saturday last, and remanded for further examination, in consequence of the two women by whom they were charged, not having made their appearance, were again brought up on Monday evening.

The evidence of R. Gardiner, inspector of the night police, was taken on Saturday night, from which it appeared the girls had received a sum of money to keep out of the way, and, as he had positive information, they were seen with nine sovereigns and some silver at a public-house in St. Martin's-lane, on Saturday last. Gardiner also stated, that he could not calculate on finding them sooner than Monday or Tuesday. Owing to the activity of Robert Duke, one of the patrol, and Jones, the gaoler, who obtained some private information which induced them to keep watch in the neighbourhood of St. Martin's-lane, the two women, named Emma Campbell, and Eliza Bolton, were seen getting out of a hackney-coach about seven o'clock yesterday afternoon, and go into a house called the Bedford, in Bedfordbury. Two well-dressed men, who had been seen wandering about St. Martin's-lane, and the different courts, had left the house, after ordering some wine for the women a few minutes before their arrival.

Duke and Jones followed the women into the house, and took them into custody: one of the women told Duke they might have had 20l. each, and their expenses paid to any part of England, if they not been taken into custody.

About half-past eight o'clock the prisoners were brought, in two hackney-coaches, from the House of Correction, in custody of the two gaolers, Jones and Ford, and placed at the bar, before Rir Richard Birnie, G. R. Minshull, and Thomas Halls, Esqs.

Sir Richard Birnie noticing the reporters for the public press enter the office at the same moment, observed that it was intended the examination should be conducted privately, as it would be hard if the prisoners were exposed without sufficient evidence to justify their committal. The reporters bowed to Sir R. Birnie, and were about to retire, when he observed—"No, gentlemen, I will allow you to remain, and leave it to your own honour, good feeling, and sense of propriety, whether you will report anything that may operate against the prisoners, if we find it necessary to discharge them."

Emma Campbell was then sworn, and appeared to give her evidence with much reluctance:—I was walking in the Strand, about half-past nine on Friday night, and saw the elder prisoner (Smith) walking near Northumberland House. I was about to address him, when the soldier came up to him. I watched them into Scotland-yard, where they stopped about five minutes in a dark corner. I disturbed them; they moved towards a stable, where they remained a few minutes; they separated, and went towards the Strand, walking at different sides of the street, and turned into Northumberland-street, and remained together near Morris's stables until about half-past ten o'clock, when at my desire they were taken into custody—the soldier by a watchman named Burt, and the prisoner Smith by a gentleman, who followed and took him to St. Martin's watchhouse. The prisoner Smith appeared quite intoxicated at the watchhouse. I did not perceive him at all so in the street. I never received any money to keep out of the way.

Eliza Bolton, who was in company with the last witness, deposed to the same effect, excepting that she swore positively that Smith was drunk, and scarcely able to stand when she first saw him in the street. She did not see any thing particular in the conduct of the prisoners, only they were close together.

The night constable of St. Martin's watchouse (Sayers) said, when last witness gave charge of the prisoners, she said she had seen them commit several acts of indecency which we cannot describe. The last witness acknowledged she had said so, and forgot to give it in her deposition.

Duke, the officer, said the girls had told him they could say a great deal if they were not afraid of doing the prisoners an injury.

Mr. Minshull said the evidence before him was sufficient to oblige him to commit both prisoners for the misdemeanor, for which they might put in bail, and as he had reason to believe the prisoner Smith was in much better circumstances than the soldier, he would require from him 24 hours' notice of bail, himself in 500l. and two sureties in 200l. each.

Yesterday morning two gentlemen entered and offered themselves as bail for Smith; their names, we understand, were ——G——, Esq., barrister, from Bath, and Mr. N. S——.

The person who called at the watchhouse was Mr. Hodgson, the proprietor of the Piazza Coffee-house, with whom the prisoner had been residing for some time under the name of Gould, which is supposed to be his real name.

The Times of Friday says, we gave an account of the apprehension of a person calling himself George Smythe, who resided at Hodson's Hotel, Piazza, Covent-garden, and a Corporal Finlay, of the 3d Guards, charged with committing an atrocious offence on Friday night last, in Scotland-yard, Whitehall. We then stated, that we had reason to believe that George Smythe was an assumed name, and that the accused was a man of some rank in society. On Wednesday the said G. Smythe and the soldier were again brought before Mr. Minshull; and another witness, a writer to a conveyancer in Cursitor-street, Chancery-lane, gave some further evidence against them. The magistrate on directing the commitment of the prisoners on Tuesday night, ordered the parties to give notice of bail. On Wednesday, two persons—a Mr. Simpson, of the South Sea House, and a Mr. Gooding, of Bath, a gentleman of the legal profession—gave in their names as bail for the person who said his name was Smythe, but whose real name and address is the Rev. Mr. G. Goold, of Dorchester. The bail being deemed sufficient, they having replied satisfactorily to the usual questions, the Rev. Gentleman was set at liberty. The Rev. Gentleman gave bail himself in 500l. and two sureties in 200l. each. The soldier, not being provided with bail, was sent to the House of Correction, to await his trial.

UNION-HALL.—A female, who gave her name Jane Smith, of Amazonian strength and stature, was placed at the bar, charged with riotous and disorderly conduct. The defendant made such a powerful resistance, that it took the utmost exertions of four constables to bring her along to the office.

The complaint against her was, that she had entered a wine-vaults in High-street, the landlord of which having refused to serve her with spirits, she threatened destruction to every thing in the bar; and when a constable was called in to take her away, she immediately attacked him, and would have eventually succeeded in overpowering and beating him severely, had not three other men come to his assistance, and released him from her clutches.

The defendant heard the charge against her with the most perfect composure, and at its conclusion, said that she was the celebrated Lady Barrymore, and claimed the privilege of having a seat next to his worship on the bench.

A Bow-street patrol, who happened to be present, said that the defendant only assumed the name of Lady Barrymore, the latter personage not possessing half her strength. The patrol added, that the defendant was brought up to Bow-street some time ago, and on entering the office, she took possession of Sir Richard Birnie's chair, which she refused to quit, until six of the stoutest constables were obliged to eject her by force.

The defendant was sentenced to one month in the House of Correction. On hearing the sentence, she exclaimed that no power should take her out of the office; then grasping the iron-railings, she held fast until four or five men managed to carry her out by main force. Handcuffs were obliged to be resorted to before this masculine lady could be put into the vehicle that conveys the prisoners from the office to Brixton.

A French translation of Burns has appeared in Paris, which contains as many mistakes as the Gallic versions of the Scotch novels. The translator calls the word rashes (rushes) imprudens.

The ladies should avail themselves, during the present extreme hot weather, of using ROWLAND'S KALYDOR, to preserve their complexions from the injurious effects of scorching heat. In all polite circles, the general exclamation of—how exceeding hot it is—is followed by the observation, "how pleasing and efficacious is Rowland's Kalydor. The fame of it is so great, that it resounds from the British shore to distant lands. Hence have arisen the flagrant and unprincipled attempts by evil disposed individuals to impose on the public a base and surreptitious imitation.

Trial of Mr. E. G. Wakefield.—This important criminal inquiry will, in all probability, take place on Thursday, the 10th of August, and will occupy a long space of time. We understand the Counsel for the Crown are Mr. Scarlett, Attorney-General, Sergeant Cross, Mr. Brougham, and Mr. Williams.—Macclesfield Courier.

Yesterday a man of the name of Johnson, in the employ of Messrs. Reed and Raggett, of Brookes's wharf, Queenhithe, fell from a loft in their warehouse (four stories high) upon the pavement. He was taken up alive, and conveyed to St. Bartholomew's Hospital, but with very little hopes of recovery.

On Monday morning a man arose in his sleep and walked towards his garret window, which he ascended, and went out upon the slates; when in this situation he lost his balance, and fell to the street. The poor man died shortly after the accident in the infirmary. He is a native of Ireland, and has been long afflicted with this habit during sleep, which has eventually ended in his destruction.—Glasgow Free Press.

The prospects of grouse-shooting this season are very unfavourable. The extreme drought has destroyed most of the game. Sportsmen are well aware that grouse is a very delicate species of bird, and cannot exist without refreshing moisture. Most of the shallow streams and rivulets being quite dry, the birds, old and young, have had to resort to the marshy ground for water, and finding it only in the "peat bogs," or pits, have in great numbers fallen in and perished, unable to extricate themselves. In some districts the sport may be pretty fair, but the above description is applicable generally.—Perth Courier.

A dreadful accident happened yesterday morning, at four o'clock, at Ealing. As the Birmingham waggon was on its journey to town, passing through Ealing, the axle-tree broke; the waggon upset and fell on the guard, and it was full an hour before they got it up. The guard was literally smashed to pieces, the weight that fell on him being upwards of seven tons. He was a young man, about eighteen years of age. The waggoner had not passed more than two seconds before the catastrophe occurred.

Fire.—Friday morning, between four and five o'clock, a fire, which at first appeared to threaten the most serious consequences, was discovered at a house in Pall-mall buildings, in Oxford-street, which is principally occupied by the lower class of Irish, each house containing from four to six families. The fire had commenced in the back part of the house, the lower part of which was completely enveloped in flames, and great fears were entertained for the safety of five single men (lodgers,) who slept in the attics, and who appeared to be still buried in the arms of sleep. They were at length roused, and finding their descent by the stairs impracticable, attempted their escape by the roof, but there being scarcely any parapet for fast hold, one young man, named Concannon, lost his hold, and was precipitated into the court, and taken away apparently lifeless. Some engines had by this time arrived, and fortunately having a plentiful supply of water, the ravages of the devouring element were subdued, and the injury almost entirely confined to the house in which it commenced, and of which nothing remains but the walls. Three poor families have lost their little stock of furniture, but the other rooms were furnished by the landlord, who is insured. The young man who fell from the roof is a porter at a grocer's near Bond-street; he is said to be very dreadfully bruised, but no bones are broken.

Warsaw, July 18.---We have not had, in the memory of man, such excessive heat as we have had this year. In 1821 the heat was of longer continuance, but did not rise to 27 degrees (95 degrees). The Sardinian Ambassador to the Russian Court, when he passed through this city, declared that he had never felt such heat. even in Italy. The state of the atmosphere does not alarm us, as we have rain from time to time. But the rivers are so low, that all communication by water is suspended.

Yesterday morning, between 9 and 10 o'clock, a workman employed on some buildings in Cannon-street, St. George's in the East, fell, owing, as is said, to the tilting of some boards on the scaffolding of which he was at work, from a height of 40 feet, and was precipitated to the pavement. The poor man was taken up in a state of insensibility, and was immediately removed to the London Hospital, where but little hopes are entertained of his recovery.

On Wednesday evening, a special general Meeting of the City of London Literary and Scientific Institution was held, for the purpose of considering the practicability of raising a sum of money to build a theatre, for the delivery of lectures.—W. G. Prescott, Esq. of the firm of Prescott and Co., bankers, took the chair. The report of the committee stated that, from the crowded attendance given by members to their lectures, Albion Hall, the place where they were usually delivered, was found totally inadequate to their accommodation. They considered a theatre, which would hold about 1000 persons, absolutely necessary for the purpose, and that the sum requisite for the erection of such an edifice was 3,000l. When they considered how much the cheapness and advantage of the amusement and instruction furnished to youth by the delivery of lectures was appreciated by well-informed persons at the head of families, and when their beneficial effects were known, there could be little doubt that there was sufficient public spirit in the city to carry this plan into the same complete execution that had attended other efforts of the same nature elsewhere. (Applause.) It was also proposed to provide larger class-rooms for the accommodation of classes of young men engaged in commercial or professional pursuits, who were desirous of perfecting themselves in the attainment of modern languages. They, therefore, recommend that a public subscription should be opened for these purposes, and that particular advantages should be given to those members who subscribed beyond their annual subscription of two guineas. After some discussion, in which Dr. Black, Mr. Stevenson, Mr. Green, Mr. Paylar, and others, spoke at considerable length, the Report was adopted, and the resolutions founded upon it carried.

SPORTING.

Doggett's Coat and Badge.—This annual gift was on Tuesday evening vigorously contended for by six watermen, who have completed the term of their apprenticeship within the last year. The competitors on this occasion were, James Cannon, Tower; John Poet, Bankside; James Scott, Hungerford; George Saville, Limehouse; George Emans, Deptford; ——— Braden, Nine Elms, Vauxhall; who started from the Swan at London-bridge, to row to the Swan at Chelsea, (a long distance for one man to pull against tide such a warm day as Tuesday,) about a quarter past five o'clock, Poet taking the lead, closely followed by Emans, who, we think, fouled each other by Waterloo-bridge. The three first boats eventually were—1st, Poet; 2d, Emans; 3d, Cannon; who all received prizes.

On Wednesday evening a handsome wherry, value 25*l.* subscribed for by the inhabitants of St. Anne's, Blackfriars, was given, to be rowed for by six pair of oars, by the watermen plying and belonging to the stairs on the north side of the bridge only. After three well contested heats, which gave much satisfaction, the boat was won by Bennet and Gill (yellow). An accident happened, however, which threw a gloom over the scene—a boy striving to climb round one of the starlings, unfortunately fell into the water, and was drowned, notwithstanding every exertion that was made to save him. His body was dragged for, but could not be found.

On Friday morning, the Duke of Wellington arrived in town from a visit to the King at the Royal Lodge in Windsor Park. His Grace afterwards transacted business at the Ordnance Office.

Dispatches were sent off on Friday from the Secretary of State's Office for Foreign Affairs to the British Minister at Paris, and also at Gottenburgh.

Mrs. Canning has been indisposed for some days past, and has been attended by Sir Matthew Tierney.

The Bolton Chronicle states, that "five factories in that town are to close immediately." This is the only way to bring trade round. The great error for some years has been an excess in the production of cotton goods.

The following is a verbatim et literatim copy of a letter received by a medical gentleman in Brighton from a female patient: "Mrs. Seusan M——A Great Deal heaser than i was my stummeck is very sore And i Spets honds of Blod So no more from Mrs. M———."

Last week, a party of five persons, sat down at a public-house in Nottingham, to a repast, consisting of seven pounds of bacon, six pecks of beans, a gallon of melted butter, and half a quartern loaf each, the whole of which they fairly devoured in the space of twenty-five minutes, adding as a libation, two quarts of ale per man. So much for the hardness of the times.

On Thursday, Mr. John Wilks, jun. resigned the solicitorship of the British Annuity Company; and on Friday the Directors of the Cornwall and Devonshire Mining Company, upon the receipt of a letter from Mr. Wilks, declared the solicitorship of that company vacant.

Yesterday, that ancient instrument of punishment, "the Stocks," belonging to St. Clement Danes, in Portugal-street, was removed from its situation and destroyed, for the purpose of improvement of the streets. It is remarkable, that these were the last remaining stocks in the streets of London.

In Cork, on Monday se'nnight, Maurice Sullivan, a resurrection man, was sentenced to be imprisoned three months and a fortnight, for assaulting Mr. William Lucas. The prisoner, it appears, sold the body of his aunt last Christmas, to a gentleman of the surgical profession for ten shillings.

An inquest was held at Maidstone, last week, on the body of a soldier belonging to the 6th Dragoon Guards. It appeared that the deceased had accidentally cut his finger, and the incision extending to the bone in a transverse direction, separated the tendons, and by some means displaced the joint. Lock jaw immediately ensued. A verdict to that effect was recorded.

The Macadamizing of Oxford-street proceeds rapidly, and the whole of that great thoroughfare will soon be restored to the very same state from which it emerged about forty years ago.

Court of Chancery.—The following is the amount in the Bank, standing in the name of the Accountant-General of the Court of Chancery, at different periods during the last one hundred years:

1726	£741,590	18	6
1730	1,003,298	14	7
1740	1,295,243	8	4
1760	3,093,740	0	3
1780	7,120,537	12	2
1800	17,565,912	2	8
1805	21,635,719	11	9
1810	25,162,430	13	2
1815	32,018,209	6	7
1820	34,208,785	8	2
1825	39,174,722	8	7

[If this fraud should go on encreasing in the same ratio for the next hundred years, the sum total in 1925 would be one thousand six hundred millions, or double the present amount of the National Debt!]
